

12829

The Index.

—A—

WEEKLY PAPER,

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

VOLUME VII.

BOSTON, MASS:

INDEX ASSOCIATION, 231 WASHINGTON STREET.

1876.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

ESSAYS AND OTHER LEADING ARTICLES.

	PAGE
Atomism in Science and Religion, Francis E. Abbot	2
"Turning Over a New Leaf," Rev. J. H. Clifford	14
Deliverance, not Perfection, the Aim of Religion, Henry James	36
Thomas Paine, John W. Chadwick.....	35
Almost a Minister's Wife, "Ez".....	62
Society versus Selfhood, Henry James	74
"The Public School Question, as Viewed by a Catholic American Citizen," Rev. E. S. J. McQuaid, D.D.	86
"The Public School Question, as viewed by a Liberal American Citizen, Francis Ellingwood Abbot	110
Modern Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency, B. F. Underwood	122
Spiritual Creation, Henry James	134
American Morals and the Atonement, John Weiss	144
A Catholic Priest's Reply, Rev. L. A. Lambert	168
Woman and Politics, Rev. E. S. Elder	170, 183
The Bible with Reference to Recent Archaeological Discoveries, Jules Soury	194, 206
Spiritual Illumination, David H. Clark	218
The Philosophy of the Heart, Henry James	230
Reminiscences of Strauss, By a Lady	242
"Freedom and Fellowship in Religion," Notices of the Press	254
The Catholic Peril in America, Francis E. Abbot	266, 278
The Growth of Opinion, James E. Boyd	290
On National Education as a National Duty, Prof. Max Müller	302
Inspiration, Hon. Geo. F. Tabor	314
Constitution of the National Liberal League.....	325
Extracts from Letters by Distinguished Citizens.....	326
Patriotic Address of the National Liberal League.....	327
Resolutions Adopted by the National Liberal League, at Philadelphia, July 3 and 4, 1876.....	328
Modern Pessimism, H. T. Finck	338
Opinions of the Press on the Congress of Liberals.....	350
Perversions of Truth in Christian Propagandism, Charles K. Whipple	362
Isolation, R. J. Young	374
An Agnostic's Apology, Leslie Stephen	386
The Whole Duty of the Buddhist Layman.....	410
Christianity and Civilization, Harold Frederic	422
Sabbatarian Hypocrisy, "Nemesis".....	434
The Commemoration of the Dead, O. B. Frothingham	446
Religion in Politics and in the State, W. J. Potter	458
Proving and Holding Fast, O. B. Frothingham	470
Thoughts on Intuition, Wm. Wickersham	482
The Essence of Christianity, Charles K. Whipple	494
God's Admonition, Rabbi Henry Gerson	506
Theism, Dyer D. Lum	518
A Plea for Freedom of Thought, J. D. Van Dusen	530
The Essential Piety of Modern Science, Rev. John W. Chadwick	542, 554
Sunday Observance. Report of the Convention of the Free Religious Association.....	556, 578, 590, 602, 614

EDITORIALS.

The Unfinished Window.....	6
Greeting from Our German Friends.....	7
Religious Proscription in Maine.....	18
A Correction.....	18
Circular of the "Freie Gemeinden".....	18
Infidelity, O. B. F.	19
Congratulatory Letter to the President.....	19
Deliverance through Perfection.....	30
Mr. Einstein's Letter, O. B. Frothingham	31
London Letter, Charles Voysey	31
Some Foreign Estimates of "The Index".....	42
Scruples, O. B. F.	43
Free-Thought Notes, Geo. Jacob Holyoake	43
The Three Gospels.....	54
Lincoln Institute, a College for Colored People, Jefferson City, Missouri, E. D. C.	55
A Word from South Carolina, W. J. P.	55
London Letter, Charles Voysey	55
The "Protestant Christian" Party in Politics.....	68
Reassurance, O. B. F.	68
Mr. Watson's Lecture, E. D. C.	67
Free-Thought Notes, Geo. Jacob Holyoake	67
Society through Selfhood.....	78
Thomas Paine and William Blake, John W. Chadwick	79
The Northampton Liberal League, D. H. C.	79
London Letter, Charles Voysey	79
The Purification of Politics.....	90
Two Southern Sermons, W. J. P.	91
Free-Thought Notes, Geo. Jacob Holyoake	91
Some Thoughts about Honesty.....	102
The Revival, O. B. F.	102
Women in the Courts, W. H. S.	103
The Centennial Congress of Liberals, Francis E. Abbot	114
Mr. Morse's Bust of Theodore Parker, E. D. C.	114
London Letter, Charles Voysey	115
The Priestly Intimidation of Catholic Parents.....	126
The Evangelists, O. B. F.	127
The Christian Virtues, W. J. P.	127
Mr. James' Fourth Letter.....	138
Education in Virginia, E. D. C.	138

	PAGE
London Letter, Charles Voysey	139
The Spirit of 1876.....	150
Concentrate, O. B. F.	150
A Penitentiary Visit, W. J. P.	151
The Vested Rights of Injustice.....	162
A Thousand Dollar Fund.....	174
Microcosm and Macrocosm.....	174
Inclusiveness, O. B. F.	175
The Clerical Policy in America.....	186
The Southern Social Problem, W. J. P.	187
The Lotos-Eaters.....	198
Logic a New Touch-Stone of Truth, O. B. F.	199
Sunday Slavery.....	210
The Wants of Radicalism, O. B. F.	211
Secular Propagandism in England, Geo. Jacob Holyoake	211
Wanted—A New Summer.....	222
Centrifugal and Centripetal, O. B. F.	223
Schools in South Carolina, W. J. P.	223
Friends Indeed.....	234
Two Kinds of Breadth.....	234
Meteorological and Political, W. J. P.	235
A Letter from Carl Heinzen.....	246
As it Should be, E. D. C.	247
The Bickering Phase, O. B. F.	247
Radical Worship, D. H. C.	247
The Gathering and its Cause.....	258
Progress at the West.....	259
The Dividing Line.....	270
A Test for Suffrage Wanted, E. D. C.	271
Secular Unity, Geo. Jacob Holyoake	271
Call for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, F. E. Abbot	282
Centennial Congress of Liberals.....	296
What the People Think.....	296
Centennial Congress of Liberals.....	307
Pickwickian Catholicism.....	307
Eccelesiastical Label, E. D. C.	307
The Sheet-Anchor of Our Liberties.....	318
Eccelesiastical Brotherhood, W. J. P.	319
The National Liberal League.....	330
The First Battle-Field.....	331
Protest of the National Liberal League Committee.....	331
Important Notices.....	342
The Soul of the Movement.....	342
The Odium Theologicum, W. J. P.	342
Gladstone's Estimate of the Dimensions of Free-Thought Movements, Rear-Admiral Maza	343
Theodor Hofferichter, A. Loos	354
Running Comments, D. H. C.	354
An Open Letter, Francis E. Abbot	366
Harris' History of Philosophy in Outline, E. D. C.	367
Non-Resistance and Non-Aggression.....	378
International Acquaintance, W. J. P.	379
The Closing of the Centennial Exhibition on Sunday, E. D. C.	390
Incidents at an English Conference, Geo. Jacob Holyoake	390
The Defeated Constitutional Amendment.....	402
How to Do It.....	403
Self-Reformation, D. H. C.	403
Religious Train-Wreckers.....	414
Unconscious Religion, W. J. P.	415
An Address to the People of the United States, E. D. C.	415
The Republican Party and the School Question.....	426
A Letter from Mr. Underwood.....	437
The Powers Behind the Thrones.....	438
Personalism in Politics.....	450
Constitutional Liberty.....	450
Gov. Hayes and the American Alliance.....	451
The Secret of Union.....	462
Free Politics, W. J. P.	462
The Bible and Woman's Rights, Elizabeth Cady Stanton	463
The Constitutional Issue.....	463
Local Organization.....	474
A Case of Legal Injustice.....	475
Intuition.....	488
Gov. Hayes and the Alliance Again.....	488
Superstition, O. B. F.	487
Sunday Again, D. H. C.	487
The Situation.....	498
Justice, not Partisanship, W. J. P.	498
A Circular.....	499
In Memoriam, W. J. P.	499
Personalism and Idealism in Religion.....	510
Newton-Dodge, O. B. F.	510
Death of Ralph H. Banney.....	522
Theism.....	523
The South Carolina Negro, W. J. P.	523
Ralph H. Banney, F. E. A.	524
Religious Politics, O. B. F.	525
A Third Great Party.....	546
Enthusiasm for Conviction, W. J. P.	547
A Ruffled Wood-Bird.....	547
The Love of God.....	568
The Aggressive Aspect of Free Religion, O. B. F.	568
The Washington Convention, Elizabeth Cady Stanton	569
Word or Work, Parker Pillsbury	559
Gov. Rice's Proclamation.....	560
Dr. Spear's Religion and the State.....	570
Was it Useless? W. J. P.	571

	PAGE
Saturday Morning Sessions in Public Schools, E. D. C.	571
Free Religion and the Republic, O. B. F.	582
Evasiveness of Christian Responsibility, Geo. J. Holyoake	583
After-Election Thoughts, D. H. C.	583
A Whole-Souled Offer.....	594
"Prohibiting" the Bible in the Schools.....	594
Methods of Progress, W. J. P.	595
The Two Amendments, Elizabeth Cady Stanton	596
Education, a Political Question, E. D. C.	596
Integrity.....	606
The Need of Vigilance, O. B. F.	606
New Forms of Free-Thought.....	607
Word or Work, Parker Pillsbury	607
The Report of the Centennial Congress of Liberals.....	618
Harriet Martineau, G. J. Holyoake	619

COMMUNICATIONS.

An Echo of the Past, John Savory	8
A Rejected Article, Geo. M. Wood	9
Why he Refused to take the Index, O. C.	9
Not Insane, E. F. Ring	9
Truism Reason.....	9
Pennsylvania and the Centennial, Harry Hoover	20
Burial of Free-thinkers, N. W. Correll	20
Thomas Paine and Revolution of 1776, Parker Pillsbury	20
Philosophy of the Centennial, R. B. Miller	20
Does the Mind Act on the Body? O. K. Crosby	32
Mr. O. B. Frothingham's Inconsistencies, Morris Einstein	33
The Sabbath of Christianity, Johus Ferretis	33
The Ulster County Paupers and Criminals, Arthur Bates	33
The Amnesty Fight, J. S.	40
A Causeless Protest, Z.	44
No Danger, Levis G. Jones	44
Spiritual Bundling, Henry Appleton	45
Atheism in Preference to Faith, Frank J. Mead	45
"Honor to Whom Honor," E. M. Davis	45
The Reconciliation of Man Individual with Man Universal, Henry James	52
Bishop Whipple and the Indian Missions, H. B. Whipple	56
Mr. James' First Letter, Wm. D. Le Sueur	56
A Plea for Rationalism among Spiritualists, Henry E. Rogers	57
Deliverance from our Finiteness, M. E. S.	68
A Plea for the Unconverted, G. W. S.	68
The Chestnut Street Club, Henry Doty Maxson	68
Dr. Bartol's Reported Censure of the Free Religious Association, R.	66
The Good and the Evil in Orthodoxy, Chas. K. Whipple	75
Catholicism in Canada, J. G. H.	77
A Proposed Tribute to Thomas Paine, A. J. Boyer	81
"Scruples," "A.".....	81
Is there not Danger? "H.".....	81
Mr. Arnot's Dismissal, G. H. W.	93
The Statistics of Catholicism, Medicus	93
Bare and Curious Literary Productions, A. H.	104
Revivalism, H.	104
The Centennial Exhibition on Sundays, "A.".....	104
The Radical Club and the Centennial, E. M. Davis	106
Reflections on Free-Thought, H. Clay Neville	106
The Twenty-Eighth Congregational Society of Boston, Veritas	106
The Highest Perfection, M. E. S.	106
The "Common Force," "A. D.".....	116
The Religions of Perfection and of Degradation, H. D. S.	116
The "Recompense of Reward," E. L. Cram	116
A Lady's Four Questions.....	117
No Danger from Catholicism, Levis G. Jones	117
Orthodox "Readers" in Public Schools, Frank Lassmann	117
The "Free Religion Bell".....	117
Mr. Bradford's Lecture, J. E. Emerson	117
The Word "Reverend," Sam'l E. Honey	117
The Knowable and the Unknowable, Henry Appleton	129
"Infidels," Hydel	129
The Public School Question, as viewed by an American Citizen of the Society of Friends, Frequently Called Quakers, Benjamin Hollowell	135
New York Letter, A. H.	141
The Ancient Legend of the God of Love, E. Bentley	141
Unbelief the "Father of all Sins," "A.".....	141
The Bishop's Lecture, W. F. Allen	153
Ho, for the Congress! Harry Hoover	153
The True Basis of the School, B. Hollowell	153
The Right and Wrong of Suicide, W. C. R.	164
Priestly Intimidation, Wm. D. Le Sueur	186
New York Letter, A. H.	186
What Does it Mean? A Radical Looker-on in Washington.....	165
Masonry, Carl H. Horch	185
Knowledge and Science Contrasted, Henry James	173
Justice to the Indian, Albert Warren Kelsey	177
Crack of the Whip, A. B. Davis	177
"Mellon Religion," L. T. Tufts	177
New York Letter, A. H.	189
The Carversville Convention, B.	189
Conscience, Morris Einstein	201
Priestly Intimidation, Again, Wm. D. Le Sueur	201
Free-Thought in New Haven, W. W. Stone	201
Aggressive Sabbatarianism, A. B. S.	208

THE INDEX.

PAGE	PAGE	PAGE
A Letter from Glasgow, James Boyd.....	209	Mr. Wallace's Letter, C. A. Simpson.....
A Verdier, Robert Moore.....	213	The Professor and the Bishop, A. Reader of the Index.....
The Poison at Work, Howard W. Gilbert.....	213	Two Good Quotations, Edward Line.....
The Connecticut Blue Laws, Ira B. Forbes.....	219	"White Line" "Reform," H. C. Lockwood.....
Rev. Mr. Elder on "Woman and Politics," Sara A. Underwood.....	219	Materiality and Immateriality, D. S. Grandin, M.D.....
Secularization of the Government, A. B. Bradford.....	220	Why do I vote the Republican Ticket? Carl H. Horach.....
New York Letter, A. H.....	221	Peter Cooper's Religion, Dyer D. Lum.....
Letter from Glasgow, James Boyd.....	221	Another Letter from Mrs. Stanton.....
A Voice from Switzerland, Atherton Bligh.....	224	A Voice from the South, O. H. Green.....
James H. Cotter, M. S. Wetmore.....	225	An Indignant Protest, Albert Warren Kelcey.....
The Sectarian Conscience and Religious Liberty, T. W. Rob- bins.....	226	The Erroneous Reading of Current Events, E. Bentley.....
A Substitute for Organizations, E. Summers.....	226	An "Abolitionist's" View, W. E. Lukens.....
"Wash and be Clean," T. P. W.....	226	An Extremist's Decision, D. S. G.....
Lotos, or Fire-Water? A. W. Stevens.....	231	Rufus S. Frost, D. G. Crandon.....
Stevens vs. Frothingham, M. J. Savage.....	232	Mr. H. L. Green, Chas. D. B. Mills.....
On the Review of Tyndall and Martineau in the London "Spectator," John Chappell Smith.....	237	The Funeral of Ralph H. Ranney.....
Worshipping the Golden Calf, C. B. Darrow.....	237	The Family Bank, E. H. Heywood.....
No Natural Right to Vote, J. S. S.....	237	Why I cast a Protest-Ballot, F. A. Angell.....
The New Haven Liberals, W. F. Jamieson.....	237	The Greater Danger, "A".....
Clerical Honesty, J. L. Stoddard.....	244	Intuition Again, A. H.....
A Use for the Church Still, Rev. J. C. Learned.....	244	Another Kind of Intuition, E. L. Crane.....
A Sunday in New Jersey, "A".....	249	The Call for Action, S. M. Carroll.....
The Same on Both Sides, Carl H. Horach.....	249	Radical Democracy, F. Frits.....
Free Masonry, M. C. Griffin.....	249	"Bulgarian Atrocities" and "Russian Intrigues," Julius Per- rette.....
Platform of the Radical Democracy, Prof. Alexander Loos.....	249	Mr. Heywood on the "Family Bank," Elmer Wright.....
Non-Resistance Again, Marie A. Brown.....	249	Criticisms of a Friend, Wm. Reich.....
Philadelphia Letter, A. H.....	273	A Mild Admonition, Morris Einstein.....
The Great Opportunity, "A".....	273	"Molecular Energy," Dyer D. Lum.....
The Baptist's Freedom, X.....	273	Church and State, G. E. T.....
Glasgow Letter, James Boyd.....	284	The Science of Universology, S. P. Andrews.....
The International Exposition, Carrie B. Kilgore.....	285	Sunday at the Centennial, Elmer Wright.....
Mirabeau's Death, G. M. W.....	285	Make Citizens of the Indians, B. M. Smith.....
James H. Cotter, M. S. Wetmore.....	285	A Colored Camp-Meeting, G. C.....
Frothingham and his Translator, Stephen Pearl Andrews.....	291	"The Bible the Security of American Institutions," Emerson Bentley.....
Masonry, Carl H. Horach.....	291	Political Parties and Voting, Carl H. Horach.....
A Word for Mr. Blaine, J. S.....	291	A Tribute to Mr. Ranney, H. L. Green.....
Mr. James' Articles, J. S. S.....	291	Views of a Southern Woman, E. L. Saxon.....
A Suggestion, R. B. Stone.....	297	Heavenly Honesty, Republican.....
Notes of Liberal Progress in Milwaukee, Amelia W. Bate.....	304	A Prophetic Cook, "Great Appliance".....
Mr. Gladstone and Theism, John Page Hopps.....	305	The Bible Against Woman's Rights, Mori.....
Glasgow Letter, James Boyd.....	309	The Science of Universology, S. P. Andrews.....
Tightening the Curb, *.....	309	"The Family Bank," E. H. Heywood.....
Religious Hypocrisy, E. Von Hartmann.....	320	Religion and Politics, Carl H. Horach.....
The Holy Sabbath, Harry Hoover.....	321	Fresh Thoughts, J. P. T.....
Death's Terrors, H.....	321	A Practical and Deplorable Result of Spiritualism, "K".....
Proudhon and his Critic, Benj. R. Tucker.....	323	Chicago Letter, Mrs. C. P. Woolley.....
"Good to Die By," Mori.....	323	How to be Happy.....
Individualism, Henry Appleton.....	334	A Persian Poet.....
The Need of the Hour, H. Clay Neville.....	345	Notes of a Sermon, M. B. S.....
The Bible in the Public Schools, B. F. Hughes.....	345	Proofs of Christianity, W. G. Maxwell.....
A Reform Article, E. P. T.....	345	"Intuition," J. G. Truman.....
An Orthodox Dilemma, J. L. S.....	363	From Texas, E. P.....
Glasgow Letter, James Boyd.....	364	Information Wanted, P. Day.....
Chinese Scholarship and Heavenly Morality, A. H.....	368
Philadelphia Letter, Carrie B. Kilgore.....	369
Shall we Speak Our Views? F. H. G.....	369
"Proudhon and his Translator" again, S. P. Andrews.....	375
The Moral Side of the Financial Question, A. J. Warner.....	376
Then and Now, A. Briggs Davis.....	381
Drawing the Fire, G. B. Stebbins.....	381
Dedication of a New Hall, C. H. Spear.....	381
The Motto "In God we Trust," W. M. E.....	381
Theism and Modern Science, Geo. E. Taft.....	388
Our National Education, Morris Einstein.....	392
Where the Church Bites Pinches, W. S. Bell.....	393
Solution of a Paradox, Charles K. Whipple.....	399
Siding with the Oppressor, S. M. Carroll.....	406
Silver as a Legal Tender, A. J. W.....	406
Tenderness of Hard Theology, B. F. Hughes.....	406
Christian Morality, Wm. Allen.....	406
The Fate in Store, E. M.....	406
Glasgow Letter, James Boyd.....	413
Philadelphia Letter, Carrie B. Kilgore.....	416
Cosmo Liberty Hall, C. D. B. M.....	417
The Bible and Woman's Rights, Harry Hoover.....	423
A Note from Col. Greene, Benj. R. Tucker.....	429
Republicans and Democrats, H. C. Lockwood.....	429
Open Letter to a "Labor-Reformer," Jean Pansu.....	429
"Trifles Thankfully Received," K. N. Doggett.....	429
Majority Rule in Religion, W. M. E.....	429
The New Faith, J. L. S.....	435
"La Liberté Eclairant Le Monde," Bishop Ferrette.....	438
The Main Question: Is the Bible Inspired? Mori.....	440
Western Whispers, S. W. Sample.....	440
Liberal Catholic Influence, Lewis G. Janes.....	441
A Forsaken Word, Ex-Reformer.....	441
Materiality and Immateriality, D. S. Grandin, M. D.....	441
The Amherst Radical Club, Henry D. Maxson.....	441
A Word on Gen. Dix, D. B. Morton.....	441
Archbishop Purcell on the Schools, Americus.....	448

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JANUARY 6, 1876.

WHOLE No. 315.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State nor Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1876.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies, or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid of, any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid of, any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

HAPPY NEW YEAR to all our friends, and a happy new century to the Great Republic!

THE RADICAL CLUB of Philadelphia has published a collective and vigorous protest, in the New York Tribune of December 30, against closing the doors of the Centennial Exposition on Sundays.

A SIOUX CHIEF, called "Running Antelope," said that, when he first heard of it, he was much surprised that the white men had killed their Savior, but, now he knew them better, he had changed his mind.

FATHER HENNESSEY, of Jersey City, has devised another plan for smoothing over the difficulties to a recognition and support of Catholic schools by the State. See an account of it copied in another column of this issue.

MISS KATE FIELD says that a tanner remarked lately: "If I had not read Carlyle, I should never have made my leather so good." That is a nobler tribute than the great public ovation of Carlyle's eightieth birthday.

MR. BROTHINGHAM opened last Sunday the Horticultural Hall lecture course of this winter with a very instructive paper on "The Soul of Transcendentalism." A full hall, as usual, attested his popularity with thinking Bostonians.

IT IS STATED that an effort to abolish the religious test in New Hampshire, which at present excludes all but "Protestants" from the offices of governor, senator, and representative, will be made at the next session of the Legislature.

THE CATHOLIC Freeman's Journal, of New York city, was greatly displeased at Senator Kernan's opposition to the priesthood on the school question, and regrets that it gave him support three years ago for Governor, and later for Senator.

THE POPE has expressed his "good-will" towards the Centennial Exposition through Cardinal Antonelli, by promising to contribute articles to the exhibition. He would show it much more effectually by calling off his dogs from the school system they are so savagely worrying.

MR. CONWAY's lecture on the religions of India, with sketches of eminent Orientalists in London, and their influence on England, at the Parker Memorial Hall, on Monday evening next, is one that will doubtless have a large hearing. Mr. Conway makes his themes very interesting.

REV. DR. CURRY, editor of the New York Methodist Christian Advocate, says that the greatest objection in his mind to the "Gray Nuns Act" is the public or State recognition of any church-school of any kind. Exactly so; but why, then, does he want the State to keep the public schools Protestant church-schools—which they are to-day?

THE CHRISTMAS issue of the New York Tribune said: "The unprecedentedly large number of letters on the school question which have been received by the Tribune since the President's Message was submitted to Congress is a striking proof of the extraordinary interest which is taken by the public in this great issue." Yet some wilfully fatuous journals persist in treating the issue as invented for political capital.

IT IS well-known that the people of New Jersey recently adopted a Constitutional Amendment taxing church property. Now the Methodist clergy of Jersey City propose to dispute this provision. The New York Herald says that they have "adopted a resolution not to pay taxes on church property, but to carry the question into the courts. The members of the Methodist church were unanimous in support of the amendments, and now they find that one amendment is most detrimental to the interests of their church."

CONGRESSMAN SEELYE has just told a reporter of the Springfield, Massachusetts, Republican that he is equally opposed to the Romish and secular theory of public school education; that what he wants is to keep the Bible in the schools as now. This is the position of the overwhelming majority of Evangelical Protestants; but Professor Seelye, who is a warm advocate of the Christian Amendment, sees clearly that without this Amendment the Bible cannot be kept in the schools permanently. Why is so little intelligence displayed on this subject? The Bible must come out of the schools, or the Christian Amendment, with all its tyrannical consequences, must go into the Constitution.

THE LAWS of New York provide that police courts shall send vagrant children to institutions of the same religious denomination as the parents of those children. In consequence of this provision, the Roman Catholic Protectory in Westchester receives a very much larger number of such children than are sent to the House of Refuge. This arrangement well illustrates the cunning devices by which Romanism is steadily undermining our republicanism to the full extent of its power. If anything is absurdly and monstrously unjust, it is the principle on which the above law is founded. When parents are either so criminal, so neglectful, or so unfortunate as to turn their children loose upon the streets, and thereby compel the State to assume the responsibility and the expense of bringing them up, the parents' rightful control over the children absolutely ceases; and the State should provide for the little ones according to the method proved by experience to be most effective in making them good citizens. By what right is it called upon to compel such children to inherit the same ignorance and superstition which have cursed the parents and made the children mere paupers and public burdens? The Catholics, in this as in other matters, have entrapped the State into conceding a mischievous and vicious principle; namely, the right of criminal or pauper parents to entail their own superstitions on their children, to the equal hurt both of the children and of the community. All this nonsense should be brushed aside without hesitation. Vagrant children should be reared on the principles of sound educational science, applied by wise, kind, and experienced superintendents in well-endowed State institutions; and with these institutions no sect, Catholic or Protestant, should be permitted to interfere in the slightest degree. The public have got to learn a lesson not only of wisdom, but of courage also, in dealing with all such questions, or they will hatch out a brood of social mischiefs worse than a nest of rattlesnakes.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; O. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Atomism in Science and Religion.

TENTH LECTURE IN THE SEVENTH COURSE OF SUNDAY AFTERNOON LECTURES, GIVEN UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, AT HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, MARCH 21, 1875.

BY FRANCIS E. ABBOT.

The baby new to earth and sky
 What time his tender palm is prest
 Against the circle of the breast,
 Has never thought that "this is I."

But, as he grows, he gathers much,
 And learns the use of "I" and "me,"
 And finds "I am not what I see,"
 And other than the things I touch."

So rounds he to a separate mind
 From whence clear memory may begin,
 As through the frame that binds him in His isolation grows defined.

—Tennyson.

The Atomic Theory of the constitution of matter, in some form or other, is accepted to-day by the great majority of scientific men.

"The general doctrine of the atomic theory," says Whewell, in his History of the Inductive Sciences [vol. II., p. 289], "is now firmly established over the whole of the chemical world. There still remain several controverted points. . . . Such controverted points do not belong to our history, which treats only of the progress of scientific truths already recognized by all competent judges."

Comte says, in his Positive Philosophy [vol. I., p. 325; Martineau, Eng. Ed.], referring to the modern revival of this theory by Dalton: "The principle is in such harmony with scientific conceptions in all departments, that it appeared like a happy generalization of the most familiar ideas of scientific men in every province of natural philosophy; and its universal and immediate admission took place as a matter of course."

Mr. J. Norman Lockyer, editor of Nature, says in that recognized organ of science in England [under date of Nov. 11, 1869]: "There can be no doubt that the atomic theory has been accepted by the majority of chemists, as may be seen on even a cursory inspection of the current literature of their science."

Professor Tyndall says, in his Fragments of Science [p. 38]: "Long thinking and experimenting on the materials which compose our world have led philosophers to conclude that matter is composed of atoms from which, whether separate or in combination, the whole material world is built up."

The North British Review, in its number for March, 1868, says: "In other words, all men of science believe, consciously or not, in atoms indivisible and imperishable. . . . It is singular to find modern science returning to the never ending motion of the old Greek atom."

Professor Alexander W. Williamson, in his inaugural address as President of the British Association at Bradford, in the year 1873, bore the following testimony to the same general fact: "Since the father of modern chemistry, the great Dalton, gave to chemists a firm hold of the idea of atoms, their labors have been continually guided by that fundamental idea, and have confirmed it by a knowledge of more and more facts, while at the same time steadily adding to our knowledge of the properties of atoms. Every chemist who is investigating a new compound takes for granted that it must consist of a great number of atom-clusters (called by him molecules), all of them alike, and each molecule consisting of a certain number of atoms of at least two kinds. One of his first endeavors is to ascertain how many atoms of each kind there are in each molecule of the compound. . . . Every good analysis of a pure compound leads to results which approximate to those required by the Atomic Theory; and chemists trust so thoroughly to the truth of that guide that they correct the results of such analysis by the aid of it. . . . We have the testimony of the great Berzelius to the flood of light which the idea of atoms threw on the facts respecting combining proportions which had been accumulated before it was made known; and from that time forward its value has rapidly increased as each succeeding year augmented the number of facts which it explained. . . . I cannot quit this part of my subject without alluding to the fact that some few chemists, of such eminence as to be entitled to the most respectful attention, have of late years expressed an opinion that the idea of atoms is not necessary for the explanation of the changes in the chemical constitution of matter, and have sought as far as possible to exclude from their language any allusion to atoms. It would be out of place on this occasion to enter into any discussion of the questions thus raised; but I think it right to point out:—

"I. That these objections have not shown us any inconsistency in the atomic theory, nor in the conclusions to which it leads.

"II. That neither these nor any other philosophers have been able to explain the facts of chemistry on the assumption that there are no atoms, but that matter is infinitely divisible.

"III. That, when they interpret their analysis, these chemists allow themselves neither more nor less latitude than the atomic theory allows; in fact, they are unconsciously guided by it.

"These facts need no comment from me. . . . The answer to our question respecting the meaning of the earnest work which is going on in our science must, I think, now be plain to you. Chemists are examining the combining power of atoms, and getting clear ideas of the constitution of matter."

THE ANCIENT ATOMIC THEORY.

Now I need not detain you with any long account of the history of this great theory. The atomistic philosophy of Greece had its rise in the fourth and third centuries before the Christian era. Anaxagoras taught the doctrine of the "seeds of things," or homoiomeriai, as they were styled by later writers; namely, that the ultimate elements of things are like the things themselves, being "particles which are homogeneous in each kind of body, but various in different kinds." For instance, bone is made of ultimate bone-atoms, which have precisely the same qualities as bone itself; and, since it is food that makes the bones, flesh, and blood, food contains bone-atoms, flesh-atoms, blood-atoms, and so forth. Both Whewell and Professor Maxwell consider this doctrine of Anaxagoras opposed to the atomistic philosophy of Leucippus and Democritus, who came after him; but Lewis [History of Philosophy, vol. I., p. 101] takes the profounder view that "Atomism is homomerianism stripped of qualities. It is therefore the system of Anaxagoras greatly improved." Ueberweg also discerns that his doctrine is "a sort of qualitative Atomism." [History of Philosophy, vol. I., p. 69.] Regarding Anaxagoras, therefore, as the logical precursor of Empedocles, Democritus, Epicurus, and Lucretius, the latter of whom has given us the best exposition of the ancient atomic theory in his great poem "On the Nature of Things," I have thought it only just to mention his services to science in this first crude yet fruitful speculation, because Professor Tyndall wholly forgot Anaxagoras in his famous Belfast address of last year.

In the revival and elaboration of the ancient atomic theory of Greece, which, as I have shown, is the germ of the recognized basis of modern chemistry, a great many students of Nature have shared. I will briefly sketch the essential features of this theory as Lucretius left it, and then describe the condition to which it has been brought by the discoveries and calculations of modern science.

Lucretius did not use the word atoms; his favorite expressions are primordia or ordia prima, "first beginnings," and semina serm, "seeds of things." According to him, nothing exists but atoms in everlasting and rapid motion, on the one hand, and void space, on the other; "all else is opinion." The atoms are solid, hard, indestructible, minute, yet not infinitely so, having parts, yet "strong in everlasting singleness," unalterable, indivisible. All that exists is the result of their combined masses and motions. To account for their motion, he supposes an eternal "fall" or rain of atoms from infinite space above to infinite space below, pursuing straight and parallel paths sheer downwards forever, with immense velocity. But in this way nothing could ever have been produced; and, in order to explain the origin of the system of things as it is, he is obliged to make the extraordinary assumption that, at "quite uncertain times and uncertain points of space," they "swerve" just a little from their paths, come thus into collision, and by mutual entanglement and ever-continuous motion, bounding and rebounding from each other without end, build up the existing universe. This "swerving" from parallel paths is the famous doctrine of the "declination of atoms"; and it involved the admission of a certain sort of free-will. Lucretius believed in free-will; but, instead of attributing it to man, he attributed it to the atoms themselves. This, in brief, is the atomic theory of Lucretius, which differed from that of Democritus in at least one important respect: Lucretius held that the atoms moved at first only in one and the same direction, and consequently had to account for their indispensable "swerving" by a species of free volition; while Democritus held that they moved equally in all directions, and could postulate the necessary collisions without the aid of any such dubious hypothesis.

Now two principles are contained in this Lucretian doctrine which are common to it with all modern forms of the atomic theory; namely, atoms can neither be created nor destroyed, and their motions can neither be created nor destroyed. Each atom, he held, preserves its velocity unaltered, whether it continues on forever in a solitary path or enters into collision and combination with other atoms. Even in solid bodies, according to him, each atom is still moving with all its original velocity; and he explains the deceptive appearance of rest by likening the solid body to a distant flock of sheep, in which the lambs are skipping about with great activity, yet which looks to the beholder merely like a white patch on the green hill-side. This is a remarkable case of what Professor Tyndall calls the "scientific imagination," and fairly illustrates the poetic genius of Lucretius.

THREE PHASES OF THE MODERN THEORY.

To trace step by step the development of the atomic theory in the hands of modern investigators would equally transcend the limits of the occasion and the limits of my power. Wenzel, Higgins, J. B. Richter, Dalton, Thomson, Berzelius, Wollaston, Gay-Lussac, Berthollet, Davy, Humboldt, Daniel Bernoulli, Lesage, Herapath, Joule, Krönig, Stokes, Stoney, Loschmidt, Helmholtz, Clausius, Faraday, Playfair, Maxwell, Sir W. Thomson, Boltzmann,—all these, and a host of others, have had more or less to do with establishing the atomic theory on its present firm foundation; and immense labors still remain to perfect it. On this subject, as on all others, thinkers seem to divide themselves into schools. There is the occult agency school, and there is also the displacement school, which again is subdivided into two minor parties. Thus we have three chief forms or phases under which the atomic theory is held to-day by our contemporaries; and so great is the importance of this theory in its bearings upon the formation of a true philosophy of the universe, that you will pardon me, I trust, if I now proceed to state briefly these three differing views of the atomic constitution of matter.

1. The occult agency school believe that force can be exerted by one atom upon another without being transmitted by any material medium. They believe both in solid atoms and in void space, somewhat after the manner of Lucretius; but, while he admitted the existence of no force except that of physical collision, this school believe that each atom is the seat of attractive and repelling, perhaps oblique and tangential, forces; that it exerts energy which acts across void space upon other atoms in a manner quite incomprehensible to us. They refer to the law of gravitation, by the terms of which every particle of matter in the universe attracts every other particle, with a force directly proportional to its mass and inversely proportional to the square of the distances; and they urge with cogency that, if this law is true, and if void space anywhere exists, then the gravitative energy must act across this void. Every atom, on this view, is enshrouded in the midst of occult forces reaching out mysteriously to the outermost bounds of the universe, but decreasing in intensity as the distance increases; and the atom itself may be likened to the solid nucleus of a comet, with an immaterial envelope extending in all directions without limit. There is a tendency in this theory to abolish the solid nucleus altogether, or metamorphose it into the mystic point of Boscovich, a mere position or centre of force without extension, a mathematical point endowed with dynamical properties; but I can only sketch in outline now.

2. The first division of the displacement school believe in hard atoms of two orders, one ponderable and the other imponderable (at least in comparison with the first); and they admit the existence of void space. "Sir John Herschel asks why the atoms of a solid may not be imagined to be as thinly distributed through the space it occupies as the stars that compose a nebula; and compares a ray of light penetrating glass to a bird threading the mazes of a forest." [Youmans' New Chemistry, p. 37.] By undulations among the imponderable atoms, which are supposed to be infinitely smaller than the ponderable, and to interpenetrate all bodies perceptible by the senses, such phenomena as those of light, gravitation, et cetera, are explained, or supposed to be explained. But this theory admits the existence of no occult forces; every effect is the result of impacts of atom on atom and of communicated motion. All phenomena are thus the consequence of the mechanical displacement of atoms, either of one order or of the other.

3. The second division of the displacement school believe in a single omnipresent fluid, a universal ether filling all space and leaving no void or vacuum anywhere. They believe that the elementary atoms assumed by the chemical laws of definite and multiple proportions, with their universal properties of cohesion, hardness, elasticity, mass, weight, and so forth, are simply various minute portions of this omnipresent fluid which have received some kind of eddying motion; that these innumerable tiny whirls in a limitless ocean of ether, by various combinations of form and motion, produce all the phenomena of gross matter, while the circumambient ether, by other motions, transmits the undulations known as light, radiant heat, magnetism, and so forth; that the ether may act upon the atomic whirls, and reciplocally be acted upon by them, but the nature of this action differs greatly from that of the atoms on each other; that the creation or destruction of these whirl-atoms is impossible to us, and not due to any forces known to us. According to this view, all motion is by displacement, either of the fluid whirl-atoms or of the fluid which eternally encompasses them and undulates in response to their least change of position.

These three chief phases of the atomic theory in its modern form differ in many respects, I need not point out how, from the Lucretian or Democritean form of it. But they all agree in this: that matter as known to our senses consists of an illimitable number of infinitesimal parts or atoms; that these atoms are neither destructible nor creatable; that the sum of the atoms is constant, and the sum of their motions is constant too, however variously distributed it may be; and that all phenomenal forms and masses are merely combinations in endless variety of these ultimate elements. As to which of these three phases of the theory is true, or whether any one of them is true, it is not for me to decide; that the essential theory in some form is true, I cannot doubt. The notion of the infinite divisibility of matter is both a physical and a metaphysical absurdity, and the only alternative is its ultimate indivisibility; which is only another name for the atomic theory. (If I may be permitted to quote words of my own, I would cite this passage from the North American Review for July, 1864: "That a cubic foot of iron consists of two halves, that each half consists of two-fourths, each fourth of two-eighths, and so forth, is a necessary truth; and of such division there can be no arbitrary termination. But the partition in this case is merely nominal, not real; and it extends so far only as the mind follows out the process in imagination. . . . Matter, therefore, is not infinitely divisible in thought. Neither can an infinite division of matter be possible in fact. For, inasmuch as mere division cannot annihilate anything, it could never reduce extended matter to nonentity, and concrete units must still subsist as the condition of all discrete quantity. In other words, matter, while existent at all, must exist as an aggregate of extended parts. . . . Extended units of matter actually indivisible by existent forces must be concluded to exist. That greater forces might continue the division is not to be rashly denied; but to suppose that any force whatever could continue it far enough to destroy all units of extension, is to fall into a metaphysical absurdity. Nothing short of the annihilation of matter would abolish the necessity of the existence of infinitesimal extended atoms; their inconceivability by imagination has no bearing on the question." Yet Mr. John Fiske, borrowing gratuitous difficulties from Herbert Spencer, is unable to decide, in the first chapter of his Cosmic Philosophy, whether matter is ultimately divisible or indivisible. The almost universal acceptance of the essence of the atomic theory by the modern scientific world is certainly a conclusive reply to Herbert Spencer and his very able disciple.)

THE KINETIC THEORY OF GASES.

Unnumbered questions still remain to be answered, no matter what theory is held respecting the ultimate constitution of matter; and the answering of these questions is a part of the unfinished work of science. But results have already been attained which seem to establish it as a certain truth that atoms of inconceivable minuteness are the ultimate constituents of matter as we know it, whether the existence of vacua is admitted or denied, and whether all known forces can be reduced ultimately to mere modes of motion or not. Permit me to describe briefly the actual state of positive knowledge on the subject, on the authority of those whose names are a sufficient guarantee of their own competency to speak.

Professor Clerk-Maxwell, one of the most distinguished promoters of molecular science, in a paper read before the British Association in 1873, at Bradford,—using the word molecule as "the more general term" including both atoms and primary combinations of atoms,—says:—

"We may divide the ultimate results into three ranks, according to the completeness of our knowledge of them:—

"To the first rank belong the relative masses of the molecules of different gases, and their velocities in metres per second. These data are obtained from experiments on the pressure and density of gases, and are known to a high degree of precision.

"In the second rank we must place the relative size of the molecules of different gases, the length of their mean paths, and the number of collisions in a second. These quantities are deduced from experiments on the three kinds of diffusion. Their received values must be regarded as rough approximations till the methods of experimenting are greatly improved.

"There is another set of quantities which we must place in the third rank, because our knowledge of them is neither precise, as in the first rank, nor approximate, as in the second, but is only as yet of the nature of a probable conjecture. These are the absolute mass of a molecule, its absolute diameter, and the number of molecules in a cubic centimetre. We know the relative masses of different molecules with great accuracy, and we know their relative diameters approximately. From these we can deduce the relative densities of the molecules themselves. So far we are on firm ground."

In his inaugural address as President of the British Association, in 1871, at Edinburgh, Sir William Thomson, another eminent worker in the same field of molecular science, thus alludes to recent discoveries:—

"The greatest achievement yet made in molecular theory of the properties of matter is the Kinetic

Theory of Gases, shadowed forth by Lucretius, definitely stated by Daniel Bernoulli, largely developed by Herapath, made a reality by Joule, and worked out to its present advanced state by Clausius and Maxwell. Joule, from his dynamical equivalent of heat, and his experiments upon the heat produced by the condensation of gas, was able to estimate the average velocity of the ultimate molecules or atoms composing it. His estimate for hydrogen was 6,225 feet per second at temperature 60° Fahrenheit, and 8,055 feet per second at the freezing-point. Clausius took fully into account the impacts of molecules on one another, and the kinetic energy of relative motions of the matter constituting an individual atom. He investigated the relation between their diameters, the number in a given space, and the mean length of path from impact to impact, and so gave the foundation for estimates of the absolute dimensions of atoms, to which I shall refer later. He explained the slowness of gaseous diffusion by the mutual impacts of the atoms to which I shall refer later, and laid a secure foundation for a complete theory of the diffusion of fluids, previously a most refractory enigma. The deeply penetrating genius of Maxwell brought in viscosity and thermal conductivity, and thus completed the dynamical explanation of all the known properties of gases, except their electric resistance and brittleness to electric force.

"No such comprehensive molecular theory had ever been even imagined before the nineteenth century. Definite and complete in its area as it is, it is but a well-drawn part of a great chart in which all physical science will be represented with every property of matter shown in dynamical relation to the whole. The prospect we have now of an early completion of this chart is based on the assumption of atoms. But there can be no permanent satisfaction to the mind in explaining heat, light, elasticity, diffusion, electricity, and magnetism, in gases, liquids, and solids, and describing precisely the relations of these different states of matter to one another by statistics of great numbers of atoms, when the properties of the atom itself are simply assumed. When the theory of which we have the first instalment in Clausius' and Maxwell's work is complete, we are but brought face to face with a superlatively grand question—what is the inner mechanism of the atom?"

THE NATURE OF ATOMS.

What light, then, has been thrown on this "inner mechanism" of the atom, by actual discovery?

Helmholtz has proved that in a perfect fluid one vortex or whirlpool cannot destroy another, cannot cut through or divide it in any way from the outside; so that a system of vortex-atoms, shaped each like a ring of smoke expelled from the mouth of a skilful smoker, and consisting of a great number of small circles arranged side by side in the form of a larger circle and all revolving in the same direction, would be an atomic system in which the atoms would be indestructible by any mutual action. Sir William Thomson seized on this conception of a ring-shaped vortex-atom, as meeting both the theoretical and practical requirements of the case. Instead of the hard and solid atom of Lucretius flying in the midst of void space, we thus have an atom of whirling fluid shaped like a ring, yet just as indestructible as the other, moving with equal velocity through an infinite ocean of kindred fluid. This newest conception is of a vastly more complex nature, raising new and profoundly interesting questions, and indicating a great dynamical advancement on the hard mechanism of the Lucretian atomology. But the interior structure of atoms must remain a matter of mere conjecture, until many other fundamental points are first settled.

But, leaving the question of the "inner mechanism" of atoms undetermined, it is a fundamental part of the atomic theory in all its forms that atoms of the same kind should contain exactly the same amount of matter, or be exactly equal in weight; otherwise the laws of definite and multiple proportions could not be true. Their origin (according to Maxwell) cannot be referred to evolution, which implies continual change; whereas the atom is unchangeable, and is the condition rather than the consequence of evolution. In fact, Sir John Herschel considers that the exact equality of each molecule to every other gives it the character of a "manufactured article"; from which Professor Maxwell concludes that it must have been manufactured by Divine power, whereas it is at least as logical to conceive it as eternal and self-existent.

In respect to consistency, the atom is no longer conceived as a hard, rigid body, but as elastic and subject to internal movements which, according to Stokes' discovery, constitute periodical or chromometric vibrations; and it therefore emits light-rays whose wave-lengths may be compared by means of the spectroscope to within one ten-thousandth part. The identity of these vibration-periods in atoms of the same chemical class, whether they exist in the earth, the sun, or the stars, has been proved by the spectroscope.

The relative atomic weights have been ascertained with great precision in consequence of Dalton's discoveries: the absolute weights are known only by "probable conjecture," but Maxwell calculates that one septillion of hydrogen-molecules would weigh only between four and five grammes; that is, in the neighborhood of seventy grains Troy.

As to size, Loschmidt, of Vienna, first estimated the diameter of a molecule in 1865; Stoney, in 1868; and Sir W. Thomson, in 1870, made independent estimates from different data. Reasoning from Loschmidt's data, Maxwell calculates that a row of about two million hydrogen-atoms would be about one millimetre long, or nearly four one-hundredths of an inch; while Thomson, in a paper communicated to the Literary and Philosophical Society on March 22, 1870, from calculations made on the thickness of the film of a water bubble, declared that, "if a film of one two-hundred-millionth of a centimetre thick can exist as liquid at all, it is perfectly certain that there cannot be many molecules in its thickness." That is, one five-hundred-millionth of an inch cannot very much exceed the diameter of a molecule of water.

With reference to the number of molecules in a cubic centimetre of any gas, at standard pressure and temperature, Professor Maxwell estimates that there are about nineteen quintillions of them in that space.

Lucretius, it will be remembered, conceived that atoms were in continual and rapid motion; at first, only in one direction, but, in consequence of "swerving" and ensuing collision, in various directions. Thus he held that they were constantly rebounding from each other, without ever losing their velocity or being worn away by the violence of the blows they received from each other. This, substantially, is the doctrine of modern science also. Professor Maxwell attributes the recent progress of molecular physics to a study of the mechanical effects of the impact of these endlessly flying molecules one upon another. The constant succession of these strokes upon any confining surface is the accepted explanation of the pressure of air and other gases. M. Lesage, of Geneva, has even attempted to give a mechanical explanation of gravitation in this manner; assuming that atoms are flying in all directions through space with vast velocity, he considers that the attraction of the sun and the earth is due to the fact that they each shield the other from many of these atomic blows in front, while the blows on the back, not being neutralized by similar blows in front, push the two bodies towards each other! This is, of course, an extravagant hypothesis; though interesting as showing the general drift of scientific speculation.

This "Kinetic Theory of Gases," explaining Robert Boyle's law that the pressure of air is proportional to its density by means of the impacts of flying molecules, has of course concentrated attention on the velocity of these molecules and the number of collisions between them. For instance, a cubic centimetre of hydrogen, at the temperature of melting ice and at a pressure of one atmosphere, weighs 0.00008954 of a gramme. At what rate must the hydrogen-molecules be flying, in order to produce the observed pressure on the confining surface? Dr. Joule, as the answer to this question, gives 1,859 metres or 6,096 feet per second. That is, the average velocity of the atoms is considerably more than a mile in every second! This exceeds the velocity of the swiftest cannon-ball. Other gases have a much smaller velocity; oxygen-molecules, according to Maxwell's tables, move at the rate of 465 metres per second, or one-fourth as rapidly; ammonia at the rate of 300 metres. But all gases have a molecular velocity much higher than that of bullets. "If we wish," says Maxwell, "to form a mental representation of what is going on among the molecules in calm air, we cannot do better than observe a swarm of bees, when every individual bee is flying furiously, first in one direction, and then in another, while the swarm as a whole either remains at rest or sails slowly through the air." Elsewhere he directs his audience to conceive the molecules of the air in the hall to be shooting about in all directions at the rate of seventeen miles a minute. We are perpetually under the hottest fire that can be imagined.

Now by experiments on the diffusion of gases it has been ascertained how far a molecule travels, on an average, before coming into collision with another. This distance Professor Clausius has called the "mean path" of a molecule. It is a very small quantity, only about the tenth part of the length of a wave of light, and occupying an inconceivably small time. An atom of hydrogen undergoes about 17,750,000,000 collisions in every second; an atom of oxygen, 7,646,000,000 collisions in every second. In all cases, the course of an atom is changed billions of times in a second, in consequence of these endless and rapid collisions; and the actual distance traversed, as measured between the initial and terminal points of its path during a given time, is therefore very small. For crookedness, the path of chain-lightning will bear no comparison with that of these wonderful and tireless little travellers.

Such, then, is about the sum of the actual results hitherto attained in the study of the atomic constitution of matter. "Astronomical and terrestrial magnitudes," says Professor Maxwell, in a passage which has been deservedly praised by Professor Tyndall, "are far inferior in scientific importance to that most fundamental of standards which forms the base of the molecular system. Natural causes, as we all know, are at work, which tend to modify, if they do not destroy, all the arrangements and dimensions of the earth and the whole solar system. But though in the course of ages catastrophes have occurred and may yet occur in the heavens, though ancient systems may be dissolved and new systems evolved out of their ruins, the molecules out of which these systems are built—the foundation stones of the material universe remain unbroken and unworn."

ATOMS AS INDIVIDUALS.

Modern science, then, teaches us that the universe is built up out of atoms, combining into compounds of ever greater and greater complexity. An omnipresent ether, a "perfect fluid" without friction of part with part, contains an illimitable number of tiny eddies or vortices, consubstantial with itself, whose motions of vast velocity have given rise to all the complicated phenomena of the cosmos. It might be urged that the notion of a "perfect fluid" not composed of atoms is a fiction; for every known fluid is a compound of the very atoms which this "perfect fluid" is devised to explain, and the imagined "perfection," postulating an absolute continuity of matter which is contrary to all we know of fluids, destroys the very conception of fluidity itself. It will be discovered, I think, on closer analysis, that the ether itself must be composed of ultimate particles of some sort, to explain which a still more subtle ether must be postulated, and so on forever.

"Big fleas have little fleas upon their backs to bite 'em,
And little fleas have smaller fleas, and so ad infinitum."

After all, Nature being manifestly compounded of parts, the assumption of ultimate minima Naturæ, as Dalton entitled atoms, cannot be evaded; and it seems as if the very conception of Being itself was thus resolved into an infinite multiplicity, to the total destruction of all real unity.

I do not see how to escape this conclusion, so long as the unity sought is a purely physical or material unity. The only unity that seems beyond the reach of this all-powerful solvent of logic is of a different, a purely dynamical, order. But nothing that science has proved, or can possibly prove, in the direction of a universal atomism, will stand in the way of the unity I refer to. I am willing to admit, even in advance of all discoveries or theories known to me, that a universal ether exists, absolutely homogeneous with itself throughout the infinitude of space; that in this ether ring-shaped vortices, or whirls of any desired shape, of infinitesimal size and of infinite number, constitute the first order of atoms; that molecules of these vortex-atoms are connected in some sixty or more different ways to constitute the known chemical elements, as a second order of atoms, which are regarded as elementary merely because they have never yet been decomposed; and that all the binary, ternary, and other compounds known to experimental science, are really at the third remove from atomic simplicity. A more thorough-going atomic theory than this I cannot conceive. Nevertheless, that being proved which is proved, the conditions of a true dynamical unity are still untouched.

1. Atoms of the same chemical species are known to be absolutely equal in combining power, and therefore in the quantity of matter they each contain, as Maxwell admits. They are also absolutely equal in their internal movements or vibration-periods, and consequently in the character of the light-rays they emit; as is also admitted on spectroscopic evidence. That is, one hydrogen-atom is exactly like all other hydrogen-atoms, and so on. This absolute similarity, however, is itself a fact which demands a scientific explanation in an especial degree, being a fact of the widest generality and of incontestable genuineness. What mechanical theory has ever yet been devised to explain it?

2. The different chromometric vibrations which Stokes has shown to be characteristic of atoms of different species testify to a regularity of internal movements for which no cause can be assigned in the physical environment—testify, in fact, to a sort of atomic vitality strikingly analogous to that of the lowest organisms. What mechanical theory has ever been devised to explain it?

3. The enormous velocity of the atoms, and the constant expenditure of energy required to sustain their motion, and the absolute equality of velocity in all atoms of the same species, are inexplicable by any known causes. What mechanical theory has ever been devised to explain it?

4. The constitution of the entire atomic system is such that it has ensured the gradual evolution of a cosmos out of a relative chaos. What mechanical theory has ever been devised to explain it?

5. Supposing that the ultimate atoms could, by unguessed discoveries and unsuspected improvements of instruments, be brought within the reach of our senses of sight, touch, smell, taste, hearing, nothing could be discovered in them but the power of affecting human nerves in such manner as to produce corresponding sensations. In the last analysis, these sensations are all that is known, or can be known, respecting any object of the senses; and all that the senses, aided or unaided, can testify to is the existence of an external power competent to affect them. What mechanical theory has ever been devised to explain it?

Such questions as these might be multiplied indefinitely. They all point to some other than mechanical answer; to some answer that shall be couched in terms of a pure dynamism to which no data of sense or imagination correspond. In a word, they all point to the existence of a Universal Power which is at the same time Universal Mind; they all point to the truth that more cannot come out of matter, its constitution, its laws, its processes, than it contained at the outset; they all point to a profound identity between the finite thought which interrogates and the infinite Thought which is interrogated; they all point to the conclusion that Atoms are the Individuals of the Material Universe—that these Individuals are all specialized or focalized manifestations of a dynamical and intelligent Infinite,—and that in the highest sense the Universal is the only Individual or Indivisible. In a word, they all minister to scientific theism, by which alone can the Universe be made a unity in human thought.

INDIVIDUALS AS ATOMS.

To me all this wonderful system of atoms revealed by science, each instinct with the capacity to perform its own tiny part exactly, without fail, in such order and invariability that out of the primeval fire-cloud there emerges at last a boundless cosmos of harmony and beauty, peopled with souls that can think the true and love the lovely and do the right,—to me, I say, this atom-system is a luminous self-revealing of what men thoughtlessly style the Unknowable, but what in reality may be known and read in every corner of this magnificent universe. Science, with her reclamation of vast stretches of waste marsh lands from the ocean of ignorance, is but extending the empire of thought over regions where thoughtlessness has brooded like an all-concealing sea-mist. She is but making evident to us, in her rapidly growing atomic theory, the primary concentrations of that Universal Power which is yet never divided from itself. I gladly grant to her all that she demands in the eternal banishment of antique errors—all that she seeks in the reduction of universal matter to ether-vortices or atoms of some other nature, and the government of all the motions by strictly mechanical laws: in all that I doubt not she will sooner or later succeed. But she cannot succeed, and will not long persevere to try, in explaining by mechanical laws alone whence motion originally proceeds or what it finally ultimates in. Origin and end alike are one; and that is Mind. One in Many, Many in One: science, philosophy, and religion are alike concerned in the perpetual vision of that great central truth.

Towards these views, I believe, modern thought betrays a steady and increasing tendency. But what special appropriateness is there in bringing them forward here? Why should I weary you with arid abstractions or dry scientific theories, when so many practical reforms are clamoring for attention at our doors? Perhaps I am greatly in error; but between such abstract speculations as these and the great practical reforms of the day I seem to discern a profound connection. What we think of matter vitally affects what we think of man; and what we think of man will vitally affect what we do for him. While I do not wish to press analogy too far, I find no question more full of grave significance, more sure to arrest the attention of all who take it in, than this: "Am I an atom?"

Not an atom, of course, in the sense of Democritus or Thomson; yet in a sense which every quick wit will divine. Atom and individual are the same: one signifies "not to be cut," the other "not to be divided." Molecular science is not more concerned than anthropology or religion with the problem: "What is the nature of the ultimate unit, the atom, the individual?" Sociology finds its molar mass in universal society; its molecule in the family; its atom in the individual. What it teaches respecting these is to shape the destinies of uncounted generations. Again are we confronted with the question: "Am I an atom?" What is this being of mine that the common tongue should call it individual, or indivisible? Has it any such sacred unity as shall justify the boast? What is its relation to the social and the cosmic whole? Is it one of the permanent elements or ultimate units without which the whole could not exist? Was it beginningless—will it be endless? Am I a simple essence or monad, not composed of parts, and therefore not again resolvable into parts? What is that within me which says 'I,' and refuses to consider itself as more or less than one? Why does it refuse to be analyzed into a mere stream of fleeting impressions, or mere seriated states of consciousness? Why is the preservation and development of my individuality so supremely precious to me? Am I, or am I not, in any real sense, an individual, an atom?"

Certainly I shall not presume or pretend to find answers for all these questions. I put them only to suggest the profound connection between the atomism of science and the atomism of religion. Of one thing, however, I am sure. Radicalism to-day is tired of the one-sided individualism which, like the ancient atomic theory of Lucretius, sets up the individual against all comers as an absolute unit, independent of all save itself, heeding no law and knowing no power but that of its own "primordial motion." In its reaction against the encroachments of society on individual rights, it sometimes stands so stiffly straight as to lean backwards. This is not well or wise. The atom cannot secede from the solar or cosmic systems of which it is a part. If radicalism means atomism in the old Lucretian sense, and teaches that the individual is self-subsistent, even to the extent of ignoring a single natural obligation involved in the solidarity of man, it must revise both its theory and its practice in the light of a more modern theory, or it will be swept away as an anachronism. I do not believe in the old-fashioned atomism, either in science or in society or in religion. I believe in the atomic theory as carried forward and developed into the atomo-dynamic theory, which includes all that atomism has to teach, but adds the elements of a profound philosophical, social, and religious unity. Hegel wrote: "In recent times, the atomistic view has become in politics still more important than in physics. According to it, the will of the individuals as such is the principle of the State; the source of attraction (association) is the particularity of our needs and greeds; and the Universal, the State itself, is the external relation of contract." [Quoted in Stirling's Secret of Hegel, vol II., p. 212: Eng. Ed.] It is this old atomistic conception of the individual will, rather than the universal reason, as the ultimate principle and appeal, that produces both the oppression of minorities by majorities and the indifference of individuals to their public duties. The trouble lies in leaving the universal out of sight. Individualists in the old atomistic sense appeal to the law of their own nature as supreme over all social law,—which is well enough, nay, necessary, when social law is based on anything more narrow than universal reason; but social law is far more the expression of the common nature of all than is willingly conceded by old-atomistic individualists, and then its claim to be obeyed is also the claim of the individual's own nature also. The atomo-dynamical view emphasizes the value of the individual, and the sanctity of his rights, just as strongly as the old-atomistic view; but in the individual himself it discerns the universal also, and counts this as the individual's best. Hence it has a rational reverence for the State as the necessary expression of the universal element in all individuals,—as the enactment and institution of the universal reason and conscience, and not at all as that of the majority's will as such. To dispute and disobey this universal authority is to violate, not the arbitrary commands of man, but the sacred behests of our own highest nature and the supreme sanctities of the universe itself.

THE ATOMICITY OF THE SOUL.

Regarding the individual, then, as on the one hand the highest known expression of the Universal Power of the cosmos, and on the other as a centre of conscious moral and intellectual life which plays a fundamental, independent, and dignified part in the economy of human society, the new atomic theory of man is the theory of scientific radicalism; and the supreme value and function of the individual is that of the true atom or ultimate unit of human life.

But I ought to point out the limitation of the analogy I have indicated between the atom of physical science and the atom of anthropological science. The former is held to be uncreatable and indestructible; of the latter this is not affirmed. The physical atom, so far as is yet known, is not a product of evolution, though this may yet be discovered to be the fact, in which case the analogy would hold far more profoundly than I now venture to press it; the human atom, so far as is yet known, is a product of evolution, though this too may yet be discovered to be otherwise, as has indeed been held by those who believe in the eternal preëxistence of the soul. Certain it is that we know the physical atom only as manifesting the same fundamental and unchangeable properties; while we know the human atom as manifesting only qualities and powers which become gradually developed into maturity and gradually fall into decay. This is an important difference; but it does not destroy the still more important resemblance.

Although, consequently, the permanence of the human atom is not to be considered as a matter of scientific knowledge, but rather as a great luminous hope which sheds divine beauty over our relations to each other and to the universe, I must not omit to point out that hitherto the concentrated analyses of science and philosophy have failed to resolve the indivisible person into elements—failed to decompose the ego into parts—failed to get rid, at least as a phenomenal fact, of the atomicity of the soul. This principle the greatest analyst that perhaps ever lived, Immanuel Kant, declared to be "the highest principle of all exercise of the understanding"; and the tireless ingenuity of his critics and opponents have failed to shake it. Without this principle, which he calls the Synthetical Unity of Apperception, "nothing can be thought or cognized," he says, "because the given representations would not have in common the act of the apperception I think, and therefore could not be connected in one self-consciousness." [Critique of Pure Reason, p. 84: Bohn's Ed.] In other words, the self-conscious unit which is named I is a constant and necessary element in all thought, all knowledge, all feeling, all volition; it cannot possibly be resolved into a stream of successive impressions or states of consciousness, for it accompanies them all, is presupposed by each and every one of them, and alone gives them unity or coherence. Apart from all speculation, considered simply as a fact which must be acknowledged as a fact, this unity of personality, this atomicity of the soul, must be accepted in its entirety. Whether I have existed heretofore or shall exist hereafter, I refuse to be extinguished as an absolute unit while I do exist; and so much as this all science that deserves the name will at once concede to me. I am not a mere fascicle of impressions, a mere bundle of sensations, a mere row of beads without a string; I am myself, and that self, from its beginning to its end, if end it is to have, is absolutely one.

ORIGIN OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

Here, then, in the midst of an eternal and boundless universe, stands the tiny Individual—the ultimate atom of all human life. What is his origin? What is his history? What is his destiny? These are questions that rise up from the depths of every developed consciousness, in hours of meditation, with imperative and startling emphasis. They demand reply, even if they fail to receive it; they rise up again and again; they haunt our innermost souls; they will not down at our bidding. Each of you, for himself or herself, gives an answer of some sort. Shall I give you mine?

What is the origin of an animal or a plant? Have you accounted for it when you have named its parents or ancestral flower? Not at all. To produce those parents or that ancestral flower, an environment was necessary,—soil, sunshine, rain, day, night, food, climate, solar system, a universe of combining and fostering influences. And this universe that exists and produces animals and plants—it too is the product of its own past, without which it could never have produced an animal or a plant. The whole cosmic system, with its boundless extent in space and its endless history in time,—all this is necessary to account for the origin of a single daisy; all its forces, all its laws, all its long career of evolution from the primeval nebula, all the astronomical, geological, and dynamical antecedents that have gone to make this total system of things in which we live—all this is necessary to account for the minutest organism that appears. No less than this is the origin of the Individual. It takes a universe to make a Man. He is the child of the All; and, if the All be God, then is he in the highest and noblest sense the child of God. Yes, his origin is naught less than the Infinite, the Eternal; all the forces of the illimitable universe have come to a focus in him; and in the absence of one of them he could not be what he is. The origin of the Individual is the Universal, and the Universal alone.

THE HISTORY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

And his history—what of that?

Beginning in a tiny germ hidden from all observation, the Individual is a portion of another organism, the impouring of a sacred maternal life into a form destined to become an objective, new, and independent organism in the outer world. Its history is that of ever-increasing isolation: detached from the mother's body, clinging to the mother's hand, going out from the sheltering roof of home, mixing in alien and transient scenes, yet ever concentrating within itself more and more that is unknown to others and communicable to none—verily, it is a life of increasing loneliness that the Individual leads. All this is simply the penalty and the glory of increasing individuality—"rounding to a separate mind."

Yet all the while is this Individual reëntering again into the Universal. He forms close and dear ties into which he pours his very soul; he mingles with other lives, and merges his interests, his hopes, his thoughts, his volitions, in ever-widening circles of human life; he becomes more and more a part of the great human world that surrounds him. And, if he be not a petty soul, he mingles the current of his own being more and more with the great currents of the universe, and finds peace, even in his increasing solitude, through an ever-increasing oneness with the All.

Thus the history of the Individual is double—developing into greater individuality and isolation, developing into greater unity with the Universal whence he came.

THE DESTINY OF THE INDIVIDUAL.

And his destiny—what of that?

His origin is the Universal—his end must be the Universal too. But there are two possible ways to be considered of re-uniting with the Universal.

One way is that of re-absorption, surrendering up the elements of his being, both physical and spiritual, into the great ocean-reservoir of illimitable Being, and passing out of all individual existence. There are those who believe in this,—those even who rejoice in the prospect of it. The idea of final re-absorption into the Infinite lies at the heart of more than one great world-religion.

But there is another way also, open at least to thought. It is to return to the Universal life of Nature, not by the extinction of individual being, but by the perfection of it. Unconscious unity with Nature in our origin—conscious unity with her in our end: that is the belief of many others, and the heart of other great world-religions. It means that the same processes of increasing individuality and increasing sympathy with the universal, going on simultaneously and perpetually, are a higher mode of union with the All than is possible by the resolution of all individual being back into its primal elements. If individuality is itself dedicated to the universal,—if truth, goodness, love, the welfare of each and all, become the loadstone of the private soul that attracts all its sympathies and activities towards the same great ends that Nature herself holds precious,—then the return to the Universal which is indeed inevitable becomes great and glorious, and holds out a dazzling prospect to struggling human souls. From Nature we come with all the elements of our being: back to Nature ought we to go with our ripened thoughts and perfected spiritual life.

Which of these two ways is indeed the true one that lies before us? Verily I know not; but I too hope and aspire. And there is nothing to chill this hope, if we can meanwhile live worthily by the high law I have tried to explain. Again and again is it found true, that selfishness is death: the only true life worth living is the life that, in the midst of all particularities, yearns upwards towards the Universal, the Divine, and steadfastly refuses to live by any lower law. Nature and God—are they not the same? Do our bodies tell more of his secrets than our souls—our intelligence, our moral nature, our great loves and hopes and aspirations? We are made individuals at a cost—a cost involving the whole past of the whole universe. Is it all for naught? The individual is not truly such, not truly an atom, unless eternal too. I cannot persuade myself that Nature is unable to finish her own work, to complete her half-developed plans, to fulfil her own ideal, and create an individual that shall know and love her divine self with a boundless, endless devotion. To the actual truth of things must every noble heart and mind bow, before all else; yet if this be not the truth, it has learned so to counterfeit truth's ineffable beauty that I, for one, know not how to distinguish one from the other. A mere atom in the bosom of infinity, still must I obey the law of my own nature, and yearn towards the Universal as my being's end and aim—not as if I were a mere fleck of foam tossed up on the surface of the great ocean of existence to perish again forever, but as if I were a true child of the Universal whence I came, fitted by life's hard struggle to inherit its own eternity.

"PA, I GUESS our man Ralph is a good Christian." "How so, my boy?" "Why, pa, I read in the Bible that the wicked shall not live out half their days; and Ralph says that he has lived out since he was a little boy."

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

SOLUTION PROPOSED BY A CATHOLIC PRIEST IN JERSEY CITY—THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OFFERED THE CHARGE OF A PAROCHIAL SCHOOL.

The Rev. Patrick Hennessey, pastor of St. Patrick's Church on Ocean Avenue, Jersey City, has maintained a parochial school with six hundred scholars for the past three years, and now has submitted a formal proposition to the Board of Education that it shall take charge of the school. He says that the public schools in the district are already crowded, and it will cost the city $15,000 per annum, without the cost of a building, to provide for the education of these children. He offers to place the schools under the charge of the Board, charging nothing for the rent of the buildings or school furniture and apparatus, all of which are of the best quality, and in good order. He will also have the school-rooms heated, swept, and kept in order free of cost. He will furnish two male teachers, one as principal at an annual salary of $800, the other as assistant at a salary of $500. He will furnish one female principal at a salary of $400, and as many assistants as may be required at $250 per year each. All teachers shall be subject to the examination of the Board. No religious instruction will be allowed except the reading of a portion of the Bible in the morning and the recitation of the Lord's Prayer. If the Board will use the same books as are now in use, he will furnish them gratis; if it decides to adopt the books in use in the other public schools, the books to be supplied at the expense of the city. Father Hennessey also offers to take care of the school if the Board sees fit to appoint him, free of expense. He argues that it will be a great saving for the taxpayers, as the school will not cost the city over $4,000 per annum. He believes that this will afford a practical solution of the school difficulty, as it will simply substitute the Douay Bible for the King James version, and will be very economical.

The Board referred this communication to a special committee, consisting of President Lyon and Directors Chapman, McGrath, Thomas, and Jewell. President Lyon is an Episcopalian, born in this country. Mr. Chapman is also a native of this country, a Methodist, and editor of the Booksellers' Guide. Mr. McGrath is of Irish descent, and a Catholic. Mr. Thomas is a printer in this city, a member of the Order of United American Mechanics, and a Presbyterian. Mr. Jewell was born in this country, and is a Presbyterian.—N. Y. Tribune, Dec. 29.

METHODISTS AND THE SCHOOLS.

THE "GRAY NUNS ACT"—OPPOSITION TO SENDING GREAT NUMBERS OF CHILDREN TO THE CATHOLIC PROTECTORY.

At the Methodist Preachers' meeting at No. 805 Broadway, yesterday morning, the subject of the "Gray Nuns act" was discussed. At a previous meeting the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby was present, and spoke of the action taken by the Presbyterian Church. He read the memorial which was adopted at a joint meeting of the Synods of Albany, New York, Geneva, and Western New York, held in this city Dec. 8, and which complained that the enactment "is purely sectarian, conferring upon the schools under the control of one religious sect, rights and privileges not enjoyed or desired by any other sect; that it confers a virtual power upon a corporation outside of our educational system to provide teachers for that system, contravening thus the general act concerning public instruction, and your memorialists ask that the law be repealed." It was expected that the memorial would be approved at the meeting yesterday, but owing to some delay it was postponed until the next session. Several of those present spoke on the subject, all of them in favor of the memorial. After the meeting, the Rev. Dr. Curry, of the Christian Advocate, said it was the intention of members of the church to sign a petition for an unconditional repeal of the enactment.

Another subject which came before the meeting was the law which provides that police courts shall send vagrant children to institutions of the same religious denomination as the parents of those children. By means of this law the Roman Catholic Protectory in Westchester receives a very large majority of such children, compared with the number who are sent to the House of Refuge. A prominent member of the Methodist Church said yesterday, that this was a more important subject than the "Gray Nuns act." The objection raised to the law is that the city of New York should not support in this way a great Roman Catholic institution.—N. Y. Tribune, Dec. 23.

"YOU WILL OBSERVE from this word pater," said a school-master to his pupil, "the great flexibility of the Latin language. Pater is a father; and here we have patruus, an uncle; and propatruus, a great-uncle, on the father's side. Can you make any such change in our language? Pater, patruus, propatruus—father; is there any way you can change father into uncle in English?" "I don't think of any," replied young Hopeful, "unless you can get him to marry your aunt."

A LETTER was posted at the chief post-office in London a while since, bearing the subjoined (minute though somewhat indefinite) address: "To my sister Bridget or else to my brother Tim malony or if not to gudy her mother in law who came to americy but did not stay long and went back to the ould country—in care of the Praste who live in the Parish of balsebury in Cork or if not to some Decent Neighbor in Ireland."

TAILOR (measuring fat customer): "Would you hold the end, sir, while I go round?"

Poetry.

THE KING'S PICTURE.

The King from the council chamber,
Came weary and sore of heart;
He called to Riff, the painter,
And spake to him thus apart:
"I am sickened of faces ignoble,
Hypocrites, cowards, and knaves!
I shall shrink to their shrunken measure,
Chief slave in a realm of slaves.

"Paint me a true man's picture,
Gracious, and wise, and good,
Dowered with the strength of heroes,
And the beauty of womanhood.
It shall hang in my inmost chamber,
That, thither when I retire,
It may fill my soul with its grandeur,
And warm it with sacred fire."

So the artist painted the picture,
And it hung in the palace hall;
Never a thing so lovely
Had garnished the stately wall.
The King, with head uncovered,
Gazed on it with rapt delight,
Till it suddenly wore strange meaning,
And baffled his questioning sight.

For the form was his supplest courtier's,
Perfect in every limb;
But the bearing was that of the henchman
Who filled the flagons for him;
The brow was a priest's who pondered
His parchments early and late;
The eye was a wandering minstrel's
Who sang at the palace gate;

The lips, half sad and half mirthful,
With a flitting, tremulous grace,
Were the very lips of a woman
He had kissed in the market place;
But the smiles which her curves transfigured,
As a rose with its shimmer of dew,
Was the smile of the wife who loved him,
Queen Ethelyn, good and true.

Then: "Learn, O King," said the artist,
"This truth that the picture tells:
That, in every form of the human,
Some hint of the Highest dwells;
That, scanning each living temple
For the place where the veil is thin,
We may gather by beautiful glimpses
The form of the god within."

—Selected.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 1.

M. H. Doolittle, $10; Anton Braasch, $21.20; H. A. Mills, $7.20; W. R. Foster, $3.20; S. Lydard, $3.20; Mrs. O. Gerlaugh, $4.95; Chas. Zeigler, $3.20; M. Lillenthal, $10; O. P. Whitcomb, $3.20; Oscar Roos, $3.20; J. W. Maffield, $3.20; D. K. Boutelle, $3; J. Shackleton, $6.40; W. A. Thurston, $3.20; Miss E. T. Cowperthwaite, $3.20; Israel Betz, $1; B. Lindsey, $3.20; Miss J. P. Titcomb, $3.20; John H. Clifford, $1.60; Wm. Boynton, $1.25; Geo. Rogers, 75 cents; H. C. Orth, $3.20; Ira W. Castle, 10 cents; D. B. Dunning, 25 cents; J. T. Hanna, 50 cents; Cash, 86 cents; C. L. Howard, 40 cents; Cash, 20 cents; Benj. Rodman, $28.30; Julius Assmann, $13.10; D. F. Henderson, $3.20; M. Schlesinger, $3.20; E. G. Burnett, $3.20; H. J. Hudson, 25 cents; Mrs. Jas. Annis, $3.25; M. Taber, $3.20; J. L. Roberts, $6.40; T. E. Clapp, $2.20; H. Weinberger, $3.20; Willey Britton, $3.20; Lucius Everett, $3.20; Sam'l Warbasse, $6.40; R. F. Briggs, $3.25; Mrs. S. B. Berry, $3.25; M. T. Dole, $3.20; G. H. Stevens, $1.10; E. Lawton, $4.40; A. A. Bugbee, $3.20; N. S. Townsend, $2; T. C. Evans, $1.50; Mrs. Sarah S. Russell, $50; R. Dodge, $1; S. R. Honey, $3.20; Isaac Ames, $3.20; B. Newland, $6; G. N. Smith, $1.10; S. R. Calthrop, $5.20; C. A. Mitchell, $2.50; E. Kelley, $3.20; W. C. Donnell, $6.44; M. M. Waterman, $3.20; Mrs. A. L. Tracy, $3.20; A. H. Brockway, $3.25; C. R. Purdy, $6.40; E. W. Keeler, $3.20; C. P. Tenney, $3.20; W. E. Harriman, $3.20; Wm. Barbour, $1.50; S. Nixon, $3.20; G. W. Fletcher, $3.25; E. O. Avery, $3.20; L. Markham, $3; Mrs. O. W. Bird, $3.20; Edward Gustine, $3.25; Miss H. P. Robinson, $3.20; L. C. Kimball, $3.25; Edward Ayres, $3.20; Wm. Babcock, $3.20; Jackson Bros., $3.20; Dr. Alexander, $3.20; H. B. McNair, $4.70; B. F. Chapman, $8; Mrs. C. M. Rotch, $8; C. P. Carpenter, 35 cents; B. S. Willey, 10 cents; H. C. Orth, 20 cents; O. K. Crosby, 25 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

THE LAWS CONCERNING NEWSPAPERS.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, considered as wishing to continue the subscription.
2. If subscribers wish their papers discontinued, publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible. Notice should always be given of the removal.
4. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office or place to which they are sent, they are held responsible until they settle bills and give notice to discontinue.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a paper from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, will be held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers pay in advance, they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to continue to send it, and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

The Index.

BOSTON, JANUARY 6, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer. The editor is obliged to reserve the right of withholding from publication any article of a libellous or immoral character.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, ROY. CHARLES
VOTSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

A WRITER in the North American Review (October, 1869, page 354) is quoted by the Nation as authority for the statement that the word God "is but a variant pronunciation of the word Odin or Wodan (Guodan), by which the Norseman personified the 'all-pervading' Storm-wind."

It is necessary to contradict once more a rumor which has been set in circulation (apparently with malicious motives): namely, that THE INDEX is about to suspend publication. No such purpose or necessity exists; THE INDEX will continue to be published as heretofore. Its prospects are better than they were a year ago, and we hope it will live to speak its uncompromising word for many years to come.

MR. DYER D. LUM, whose name is well known to our readers as author of several articles of unusual merit in these columns, met with a sad railroad accident lately, by which his leg was broken. Great sympathy is felt for him by his fellow-townsmen of Northampton, who, as the Springfield Republican states, "kindly remembered him Christmas week with a gift of $200." His friends at a distance will share our own pleasure at this richly deserved tribute of esteem.

A BOUND VOLUME of THE INDEX, either for 1871 or 1872, will be given as a premium to each new subscriber who remits $3.20 for a year's subscription, or to each old subscriber who remits $3.20 for a new subscriber obtained by means of his or her efforts. The volume will be sent by express at the recipient's expense; but no volume will be sent at all unless it is claimed at the time of making the remittance. This offer can only remain in force a little while, as the supply of volumes is small; but it is one which those who know the value of these volumes will hasten to improve.

A PHYSICIAN whose untiring efforts to advance the cause of Liberalism have commanded our sincerest gratitude writes as follows: "I cannot help thinking that the Administration is stealing the thunder of THE INDEX. To organize the liberal element of the country will be a troublesome matter, but after the anti-slavery triumph we must not despair. We are slowly working towards the formation of a League in our valley. My acquaintances at different places are exerting themselves to secure subscribers for THE INDEX for the coming year. The devotees of superstition are almost everywhere wallowing in revival mud. Medically speaking, I agree with you that this is 'hysterical Christianity.'"

THE CLOSING paragraph of Mr. Frothingham's discourse on "The Lord's Day," published in THE INDEX of December 23, prompted Bishop Ferrette to send us a little French hymn which he wrote a few days previously for the use of his French congregation in Boston, and "in which," he says, "precisely the same sentiments, namely, those of the whole Christian Church up to the invention in England of the Protestant Sabbath, are expressed." We append it for the sake of our readers who are familiar with French:—

CHANT DU PREMIER JOUR.

De l'éternel sabbat dissipaient les ténèbres,
Dieu dit, Soit la lumière! et la lumière fut.
Et d'un plus noir sabbat foulant les draps funèbres,
Le Soleil de Justice, éclipé, reparut.

Car du monde naissant la clarté matinère
Eut des nuits, des sabbats, après le premier jour.
Le Christ ressuscité ne meurt plus. Sa lumière
Des sabbats et des nuits ignore le retour.

Que le pécheur, aveugle à l'éternelle aurore,
Dans la nuit du sabbat demeure enseveli.
Du Premier Jour du Christ la clarté brille encore.
Elle éclaire l'Eglise, et n'a jamais pâli.

THE UNFINISHED WINDOW.

When, at the command of Aladdin, the genie of the lamp had erected over-night the wonderful palace for the reception of the Sultan's daughter, twenty-three of the windows in the great domed hall were lavishly decorated with jewels of the costliest kind; but the twenty-fourth was purposely left plain and incomplete, that the Sultan himself might have the glory of putting the finishing touch to such an incomparable structure. For a whole month all the Sultan's jewellers and goldsmiths labored assiduously to decorate this unfinished window in a style not unworthy of its superb companions; but, after utterly exhausting the resources of the imperial treasury, they found themselves unable to finish even one side of it. In this perplexity, Aladdin ordered them to undo their work and restore to their master his jewels. He then rubbed his lamp, and bade the genie to complete the hall; which was immediately done, to the astonishment and delight of the Sultan.

Is it strange that the inadequate propositions of ex-Speaker Blaine, President Grant, the Union League, and others, to supply the omitted guarantees of religious freedom in the United States Constitution remind us irresistibly of the unfinished window in Aladdin's palace? The majestic Constitution of this great republic was planned and established by men of ideas,—nay, by the very genie of Liberty, inspiring their brains, nerving their hands, firing their hearts; but they left one of its jewelled windows unfinished. The Constitution has no adequate provision for the protection of the most precious of all rights—the right of free religion—the right of free thought, free speech, free press, free education. To-day men of mere shifts and expedients are stepping forward to complete what men of ideas and principles commenced; but, like the Sultan's jewellers and goldsmiths, they will find their puny resources utterly unequal to so grand a task. They will botch the job; their work must sooner or later be done all over again. Only the genie of Liberty can finish what the genie of Liberty began.

It is persistently urged by many thinkers, both Christian and non-Christian, that the political and social life of every nation is dominated, shaped, and directed by the religion of that nation; that the mightiest forces at work in national development are religious forces; that the springs of vitality in great communities as such, no less than in individual existence, can be discovered nowhere but in the universal consciousness of obligation under eternal moral law; in short, that all political and social institutions are the direct or indirect outgrowth of religious ideas, sentiments, and convictions. Stated in broad and general terms like these, the position is one which we have never controverted and do not now controvert; but the moment that it is translated into the technical terms of any special world-religion, it immediately becomes a falsity so far as this country is concerned. We admit that religion is the vital or formative principle of every great national organism; but we deny that religion as construed by the technical religionists of America is the vital or formative principle of this republic.

What is their claim? That this is a Christian country; that Christianity is the national religion of the United States, although the Christian Church, as a visible ecclesiastical organization, is confessedly not established by law; consequently, that a personal God, as the Supreme Being, Author, and Authority of Christianity,—the Lord Jesus Christ, as its authoritative revealer and head,—the Bible, as its authoritative sacred book,—and the "Lord's Day" or "Sabbath," as its authoritative sacred day,—are all part and parcel of the national religion of the United States, and justly entitled, if not to formal recognition (as claimed by the Christianizers of the Constitution), at least to informal authority and practical supremacy in all legislation. This claim is maintained and acted upon by the great majority of Protestant Evangelical believers, and is the only ground on which the practices protested against in the "Demands of Liberalism" can be even feebly defended.

But this claim must be denied by every American citizen who comprehends the true spirit of the institutions under which he lives. Just as the Church has an indefeasible right to be judged by its own collective and authoritative declarations, as contained in its great historical creeds and confessions and illustrated by its own corporate acts, and not to be judged by or held responsible for the erratic utterances of individuals who set all these things at defiance; so also the Republic, as a great State independent of the Church, has an equally indefeasible right to be judged solely by its own authoritative utterances in its Constitution, treaties, and laws. Judged by this standard, the United States cannot intelligently be declared to be a Christian country; or, if intelligently so declared, the declaration must be coupled with a demand to amend the Constitution in accordance with the alleged fact. For the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States, as a nation, render this country totally independent of Christianity and all its sacred authorities. The Christian religion has here no national right but to be nationally ignored, and left to provide for itself on its own private responsibility. The Christian Church is not a national church, and the Christian religion is not the national religion; the attempt to make either of them a national institution is an attempt to deliver over this purely secular republic to a foreign power. And that is neither more nor less than treason.

Nevertheless, the republic has its own purely secular religion, declared luminously in its Constitution and exemplified (with sad deviations) in its history. It is the religion of political and personal freedom, of widely diffused education, of equal and universal human rights, of justice between man and man and the brotherhood of universal benevolence which inevitably grows out of justice between man and man. Few, perhaps, are prepared to admit that these glorious yet simple things are enough to constitute a religion; yet what do they lack? They have proved their vitalizing power as a religion by creating a political organism of majestic proportions, of an unprecedented type, of a cohesive strength sufficient to survive the earthquakes of foreign war and domestic rebellion; they have proved their power to create civic heroes by the hundred and soldier martyrs by the hundred thousand; they have proved their power to kindle fires of self-devotion, self-sacrifice, and moral enthusiasm which burn in millions of breasts to-day, and gird Columbia with a wall of living flame; they have proved their power to inspire in a great nation an inextinguishable faith in its own future, and a purpose stubborn as steel to crush all parties and all administrations which imperil this future by fostering political corruption or betraying the cause of public virtue and public intelligence. Millions and millions of lives are ready to be devoted to the defence of the republic, and to the defence of the real religion of the republic, just as soon as the enemy that plots their ruin dares to reveal openly its hideous face. Freedom, justice, knowledge, equal rights—these are the religion that builds no churches and hires no priests, but makes every honest citizen's heart an altar and the republic itself a temple. If Christianity, Catholic or Protestant, dares to carry its lust of power so far as to attack overtly the real safeguards of this religion, it will eventually be made apparent that the republic of the United States prizes its secularism above its Christianity, and has a religion of its own against which the gates of heaven shall not prevail.

The religion of every free State is free religion; and free religion, on its political side, is absolute secularism—the absolute restriction of government to the transaction of all public affairs by the simple rules of intelligence, justice, liberty, and equal rights, and the absolute exclusion of all rules introducing revelations or supernaturalisms or ecclesiasticisms of any sort. This is the common religion of mankind. Every special religion pretends to include it, but crucifies it in the act. Christianity pretends to include it, but violates it by its peculiar claims. The moment that revelations or supernaturalisms or ecclesiasticisms are introduced into government, the rules of intelligence, justice, freedom, and equal rights are straightway trampled on. There is not a Christian in the United States who would not declare that he believed unreservedly in intelligence, in justice, in freedom, in equal rights; and a government, therefore, administered faithfully by these purely secular principles, cannot really give him any reasonable cause of complaint. But there is not a Christian in the United States who is sufficiently Christian to think that the government ought not to be absolutely secular, that would not break the laws of intelligence, justice, freedom, equal rights, for the sake of making the government Christian.

Here is the difficulty: all honest citizens want the government to be intelligent, free, just, and equitable,—and some of the honest citizens want it also to be Christian in the sense of giving special privileges to Christianity. But the wish of this Christian party is contradictory of the wish of the whole people, including themselves; and it is no reason for defeating the wish of the whole people that the Christian party cherish contradictory wishes. Let the government be absolutely secular, and the wish of the whole people is gratified—one wish of the Christian party being gratified at the expense of the other. But if that wish of the Christian party which requires the government to be Christian should be gratified, then not only is the wish of the whole people defeated by this defeat of justice, but the very Christian party who gain their one wish defeat their own other wish at the same time unwittingly. It is thus plain that the Christian party cannot satisfy at once their two wishes to have the government just and to have it Christian; in any event, one of these two wishes must defeat the other; and it is much better, even for the Christian party itself, that that one of their two wishes should be defeated whose defeat ensures the victory of the wish of the whole people (including themselves) for real justice to all.

So much only of religion, therefore, can justly be incorporated into our political institutions as is common to the whole people; namely, so much of it as consists in freedom, intelligence, justice, equal rights before the laws. Whatever in religion denies or violates these things tends to destroy our national existence, and is treasonable in fact, if not in intention. But these things constitute the real religion, the purely natural and secular religion, which has created the republic, inspired its whole history, and given it the promise of an illustrious, noble, and happy future. It is manifestly evident that the imperfect guarantees of this political secularism, of this utter divorce of Church and State, need now to be perfected. The "unfinished window" of the Constitution needs now to be completed. Leaving each individual at perfect liberty to add on his own account to this common religion of the whole people whatever tenets he may hold to be true, and whatever practices he pleases that are no infringement of his neighbor's rights, the republic should now restrain and chain forever the restless ambition which seeks continually to impose on the whole people the special religious beliefs and practices of only a part of the people. Let such a Constitutional amendment be now adopted as shall make the separation of Church and State no longer a matter merely of national tradition or disputed inference, but a great principle fully and explicitly declared in the great charter of all our civil and religious liberties. With this purpose in view, and with all the light thrown on the subject by recent events, we submit the following form of amendment to public consideration:—

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

This amendment is as comprehensive and as thorough as we can make it. The first section provides for the total separation of Church and State, covering the exemption of church-property from taxation; the second section provides for the personal religious rights of each and every citizen; the third section (being Judge Hurlbut's admirable proposition) prohibits sectarian appropriations, and provides for a genuinely unsectarian public school system; and the fourth section provides for the efficient execution of the foregoing provisions. No measure less thorough ought to be adopted, for no measure less thorough can accomplish the entire secularization of the State. All who intelligently believe in that principle and favor its practical adoption by the nation will, we think, give their cordial assent and sympathy to this proposition. Who will circulate for signatures a petition asking Congress to recommend this Religious Freedom Amendment to the various States for adoption as part of the fundamental law of the land? Who will thus do his part towards completing the "unfinished window" of our glorious Constitution, by decorating it with the priceless jewels of religious liberty, equality, and justice? Or must it be sung of the great founders of the republic, as Longfellow sang of the dead Hawthorne and his uncompleted romance:—

"Ah, who shall lift that wand of magic power,
And the lost clew regain?
The unfinished window of Aladdin's tower
Unfinished must remain!"

GREETING FROM OUR GERMAN FRIENDS.

It is with great pleasure that we have received and now publish the following fraternal letter to the Liberal Leagues from the Union of German-American Liberal Societies. The cordial and friendly sentiments expressed by the President and Secretary of the Union will certainly be reciprocated very heartily by the members of the Liberal Leagues. As the Leagues have not yet entered into any organic connection, but propose to discuss and act upon some plan looking to that end at a general convention in Philadelphia next summer, we can only express here a hope that both American-born and German-born American citizens who believe in the actual separation of Church and State will cooperate in all possible ways with each other in securing that great object. When the Liberal League convention is assembled at Philadelphia next summer, we do not doubt that it will do all in its power to reciprocate the courtesies now tendered by the officers of the Union, whose letter is as follows:—

TO THE LIBERAL LEAGUES.

Thanking you for your cordial invitation to attend your late September convention at Philadelphia, and assuring you of the most earnest determination to labor hand in hand with you, to make propaganda for, and eventually to enforce by political action, the "Demands of Liberalism" as stated in THE INDEX, the undersigned, officers of the Union of German American Liberal Societies, take pleasure in announcing to you that this organization will hold its fourth triennial at Philadelphia, during the last week of June, in the one hundredth year of American independence; and that in connection therewith (the precise day to be made known hereafter) is to be held a convention of delegates from all the progressive and liberal societies, clubs, and leagues in the United States; the object of the latter assemblage being the framing of a platform, and the discussion of ways and means to a concerted action of all friends of uncurtailed liberty and equal justice. Besides the "Demands of Liberalism" forming the basis of your organization, other reformatory demands will be proposed for discussion and adoption, which we hope will meet your approval, and insure your cooperation.

In order that there may be no suspicion of exclusiveness or misapprehension in regard to the motives for holding a separate convention nearly at the same time with that called by your sister organization, we will here state the principal reasons for this action. A formal reason (sufficient in itself for the officers of a democratic organization like ours) is, that a resolution adopted at our last convention in 1874 makes it our duty to hold the convention at the time and place before stated. But the principal reason is, that the societies forming our union were founded by, and were composed almost entirely of, members of German birth or descent, who, although mostly able to read and write the English language besides their own, and even to speak it for the purposes of every-day life, still could not ably and eloquently express their views, or do justice to themselves and their constituents when taking part in public discussions carried on in a language not their mother-tongue.

In conclusion, we would propose that both our organizations be mutually represented at each other's conventions by delegates who would form a connecting-link, and insure a harmonious and effective cooperation.

In the name of the German American Union of Liberal Societies, we sign with friendly greeting,
Yours for truth and justice,

J. E. LOUIS, President.

EMIL MORAWETZ, Secretary.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., Dec. 20, 1875.

[FOR THE INDEX.] CURRENT EVENTS.

BY B. C.

Mr. Gilbert Haven, a Methodist bishop who is somewhat notorious for vigorous and extravagant statement, made a characteristic speech in this city recently, in which he exhorted his hearers, mostly ministers, to pray for the reelection of Gen. Grant. Being taken to task for this peculiar union of politics and prayer, by both the ungodly and the religious press, the unterrified bishop replies with the following exhorting bit of rhetoric: "Chase and Greeley and Sumner and Wilson are towering warnings to the American people how they consider the work of renewing the land accomplished, and set themselves against him whom God hath selected for this renewal. Had Wilson thrown his mighty influence on the side of the President; had he cordially supported the reconstruction measure still needed to insure liberty and safety to our land, and to the late and not yet freed slave; had he helped pass the force bill, and the education bill, and the marriage bill, and other bills necessary to secure equal rights to all, he would have been alive to-day. But he put himself against these demands of God and the hour; and was not, for God took him." We are sorry to observe that some people have become greatly excited by this language, one writer even calling it "horrible blasphemy." We beg leave to assure our readers that there is no necessity for the expression of even the mildest indignation. Coming from an ordinary mortal, the above language, of course, would be looked upon as blasphemous, or insulting, or indecent; but coming from Mr. Gilbert Haven, we are sure that it means nothing—absolutely nothing. After a certain amount of practice in the making of unguarded statements, a man's words become meaningless to all persons but himself, and, according to our observation, the period of Mr. Haven's apprenticeship ended some time ago. We should be unable to repress our indignation against the Methodists for making a bishop out of a man whose characteristics were so well known as were those of Mr. Haven before his election to that position, were it not for our conviction that they are now profoundly repentant for that great misdeed. It is not difficult to imagine the pious resignation of the leaders of the denomination, if, upon awaking some morning, they should learn unexpectedly that Brother Gilbert "was not, for God took him."

The above reference to Methodism leads us to say, with all due respect to the members of that denomination, that they are threatened by an evil far more to be dreaded than the burden of carrying Mr. Haven, though the latter should live to the age of Methuselah. The mischief wrought by a boomerang bishop may be calculated, or, in commercial phrase, "discounted," in advance, and to a certain extent, therefore, may be guarded against. But when a moral standard has been once lowered, the process of getting it back again to its former elevation is apt to be a long and difficult one. And this demoralization is the present danger of the Methodists. The former denominational zeal has greatly abated. The leaders are beginning to see visions of vast projects, and dream dreams of great enterprises to be carried out by their great organization. And in the furtherance of their schemes some of them are becoming indifferent to the moral character of those who will help them. Only thus can we account for the nomination by one of their number, at a recent ministers' meeting, of Benj. F. Butler for the Presidency. This man believes that Butler will help him in "putting through" the "force" bill, the "marriage" bill, and other bills which he desires to have served up, à la Haven, for the political regimen of the Southern people; and, occupied with these pet schemes, he utterly ignores not only Butler's opinions upon the most fundamental questions of legislation, but also his moral character and disposition. The apotheosis of the Butlers, Tweeds, and Flaks is one of the most disheartening signs of our civilization; and when a clergyman is guilty of this same degrading idolatry, the denomination which can endure him without rebuke may well begin to suspect that something is wrong in its moral standards. We trust to see some of the guns which have been liberally discharging hot shot in the direction of the harmless Haven turned toward this new candidate for unworthy fame.

A very interesting question is in course of preparation for the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Mormons have always maintained the unconstitutionality of the laws passed by Congress against polygamy in Utah. They argue as follows: When the present territory of Utah was ceded to the United States by Mexico, the treaty expressly stipulated that all dwellers in the territory were to be allowed the free exercise of their respective religions. The Mormons were then in the territory. Consequently, they argue, the practice of polygamy, which is commanded by their religion, is protected by treaty-obligation, and cannot, therefore, be interfered with by Congress. So confident are the Mormons of the strength of their case that they have procured the formal indictment of one of their number—no less a person than Brigham Young's private secretary. He has just been tried and found guilty of polygamy by a jury composed principally of Mormons, Brigham Young being among the witnesses. All legal forms have been strictly complied with in order that the case, which has already been appealed, may be decided by the Supreme Court solely upon its merits. If the decision be in favor of the Mormons, we do not know why the Chinamen may not take courage and begin to send for their wives; and all Mohammedans who may hereafter come to this country would also be protected (at least in Utah) in the enjoyment of the full practice of their religion. If the Sultan of Turkey be driven out of Europe, as now seems probable, he may be enabled by this decision to set up his harem, and read the Koran in our Western land. The prospect becomes distressing. We exhort our Christian friends to hurry along their Constitutional amendment, or the followers of Joe Smith, Mohammed, and Confucius may yet outvote the true believers.

A beautiful instance of Christian love has recently been witnessed at Abingdon, Illinois, in which place the Campbellites, as they are termed by outsiders (or Christians, as they term themselves), have a college. For many years, according to the Chicago Tribune, the administration of the college has been marked by dissensions and quarrels, and for the past two years there has been open warfare between two opposing factions. The "Christian" Church of the town has been divided by the same strife, and a new church formed by seceding members. The two college parties, each backed up by a Christian church, have not only blackguarded one another without stint, but have burned effigies, defaced dwellings, and threatened personal violence. On Christmas Day, at a Sunday-school festival, a regular fight took place between members of the two factions, and during the fight, which does not appear to have been conducted according to the rules of the Prize Ring, the Rev. Mr. Perley, President of the college, was beaten to death. Behold, how these Christians love one another!

From Christian love we turn to an illustration of Christian morality. The Rev. Mr. Hepworth's church in New York is encumbered with a debt of $180,000. The congregation is large, and the Sunday-school flourishing, the Bible-class alone numbering one hundred and fifty. But the interest on the debt is an unpleasant burden even for this prosperous society. It has been decided, therefore, to allow the mortgage to be foreclosed, and the church building to be sold at auction. Of course, in these times, there is no demand for expensive church property. No one imagines that the building will sell for more than a small fraction of its cost. It will be quietly bid in, therefore, at a low figure, by a member of the society, who will by-and-by pass it over to its present owners for the amount of his bid. By this strictly legal transaction the society will gain probably $100,000, and the holders of the mortgage will be defrauded of the same amount. If this proposed scandalous transaction is carried out, it will not be the first instance of a Christian church guilty of similar dishonesty. And yet, the Sunday after the consummation of this precious bit of rascality, the reverend and godly pastor of the church will preach probably about the corruption of politicians, the sinfulness of the world, and the necessity of coming to Jesus for clean hands and a pure heart.

Mr. Chock Wong, editor of a Chinese paper published in San Francisco, has announced his intention of applying for naturalization papers at the United States District Court. If Mr. Wong's application is granted (and we know of no legal ground on which it can be refused), his example will probably be followed by others of the same race. It is useless to deny the fact that the idea of admitting the Chinaman to citizenship is a very distasteful one to many excellent people. The Chinaman differs so greatly from the New Englander in religion, traditions, language, habits, and physical peculiarities, that it is difficult to conceive the two as dwelling together in harmony under the same national roof. Nevertheless, he may yet become a most useful citizen. In Northern Australia and in the Pacific Islands, the Chinaman has exhibited a wonderful power of adaptability to new circumstances, a power not yet fully displayed in California because of the antagonistic influences by which he has been surrounded. If we are to continue to have the Chinaman among us, it is certainly better to have him a citizen, with the balance-weights of wife and children, and the ownership of a house-lot, than to have him remain in his present anomalous condition.

The Beecher-Tilton controversy is again to be opened. Mr. Beecher's church has voted to accede to the request of Mrs. Moulton for a mutual council of Congregational churches, to decide upon the questions at issue between herself and Plymouth Church; and this mutual council is to be followed by an advisory council to be called by Plymouth Church alone. We sincerely trust that we are not to be called upon to witness another farce like that of the previous council. If these new councils are simply to decide some petty questions of church discipline, they should not be convened; at least, not in connection with this disgusting controversy. There is one question only in this connection in which people in general are interested—the question of the guilt or innocence of Mr. Beecher; and bearing upon this question there is, we are informed, an immense mass of evidence excluded on technical grounds from Mr. Tilton's civil suit for damages, which has not yet been given to the public. If a church council is willing to take up this evidence, properly sift it, and determine its value, it may settle finally this unsavory affair; but we have little faith that any church council will properly undertake or execute this task. Mr. Beecher has never shown the slightest disposition to have this evidence produced; but, whenever any plan has been proposed which seemed likely to include it, he has begun to talk about "wolves and foxes," or something equally irrelevant. Until his guilt or innocence has been determined in the light of his evidence, Mr. Beecher cannot hope to be left in peace in his position as a Christian minister, or even to be received much longer in respectable society. In addition to the ecclesiastical councils we are to have legal proceedings, Mr. Moulton having brought suit against Mr. Beecher for $50,000 damages for malicious prosecutions, and, if we are correctly advised, the form of the suit is such that essential evidence, excluded from Mr. Tilton's suit, must now be admitted.

Communications.

AN ECHO OF THE PAST.

In the summer of 1838, Mr. Emerson gave his famous address before the Divinity School. It was the event of the season, and as a literary product unsurpassed. I never read it without increasing admiration of Emerson's ability as a thinker and a writer. It is the ne plus ultra of his prose style, and is evenly excellent throughout. Jeremy Taylor or Milton, Landor or De Quincey, may have finer passages, but none has continued at such an elevation, or written so long with so much grace and grandeur. The rhetoric is gorgeous as a butterfly's wing, but the thought is packed and solid as a blazing diamond.

But its literary value is least to whoever can interpret the significance of a prophet-voice, and its relation to the times. The tone of the address marks its quality, and is the test of its power. And how lofty and spiritual it was! Not "a voice crying in the wilderness" merely, but a silver-tongued trumpeter standing in the noonday light of civilization, and challenging the busy throng to attend the warning. The silvery tones of that trumpet-voice went in at ears stuffed with cotton, and appealed to interests mightier than trade or commerce. But the chief effect was in another quarter. That voice shook the temples and synagogues of the popular religion—shook them as with thunder, and earthquake, and fire. The ministering priests at the altar trembled and grew pale,—or ran out in terror of their lives. What did the voice mean? what could it portend?

Andrews Norton, the Unitarian champion, the critical Goliath and Corypheus of the liberal wing of religionists, spoke to the assembled bands of the clergy, taking for his theme "The Latest Form of Infidelity." Without designating Mr. Emerson in particular, his guns were double-shotted, and aimed at the structures of that philosophy of which Emerson was considered the ablest New England representative and exponent. But historical proofs of Christianity, and critical reasonings drawn from the text, could not touch a man who built securely on the sublime bases of the soul itself.

"The antick pillars massy-proof" of Mr. Emerson's dwelling did not crumble and fall, because they did not feel the cannonade. Mr. Emerson had no call to answer, and did not answer. But "a champion of transcendentalism"—so Mr. George Ripley was designated—stepped forth, in an elaborate review of Mr. Norton, entitled, "The Latest Form of Infidelity Examined." It was issued anonymously in the form of a letter to Mr. Norton, and the writer subsequently added two more letters, and published the whole in book form under his name. About the same time, Theodore Parker entered the lists, appearing, singularly enough, under an assumed name, in a tract called "The Previous Question between Mr. Andrews Norton and his Alumni, moved and handled, in a letter to all those gentlemen, by Levi Blodgett." I have never seen this tract of Parker's; but Mr. Frothingham, in his life of Parker, says it was "admirable for clearness, pith, and point." There were other replies, by Brownson, and J. F. Clarke, and "one of singular beauty" from Theophilus Parsons. Richard Hildreth, the historian, addressing Mr. Norton, wrote "On Miracles as the Foundation of Religious Faith,"—an anonymous tract which has escaped the notice both of Welles and Frothingham.

Meanwhile there was a great stirring in the camp of Orthodoxy; the Princeton reviewers got hold of Emerson at last, and did him up in two articles on German transcendentalism and the influence of the philosophy of Cousin, and its effect in this country. These articles were written by Doctors Hodge and Alexander, assisted by Professor A. B. Dodd. They were able on their side, and were republished with an introductory note by A. N. [Andrews Norton], in Cambridge, 1840. This was about the end of the controversy, as it appeared in print; though the subject continued to be agitated in the newspapers for a while longer.

Throughout the storm Mr. Emerson sat serene, and apparently unconscious that he had done anything to cause such disturbance in the religious world. Young ministers were especially excited, and preached Emerson, or about Emerson. By the older clergy he was recognized as the head and fount of that dangerous radicalism which has leavened the Cambridge Divinity School ever since, and has been a thorn in the side of Unitarianism to this day. To show the attitude and feeling of Mr. Emerson, we shall quote some sentences from letters passing between him and his friend Henry Ware, Jr., occasioned by a sermon Mr. Ware preached on the "Personality of God," which it was thought Mr. Emerson had denied. Mr. Ware says, referring to the "unqualified statements" of the address, that some of them "appear to me more than doubtful, and that their prevalence would tend to overthrow the authority and influence of Christianity. On this account, I look with anxiety and no little sorrow to the course which your mind is taking. That I appreciate and rejoice in the lofty ideas and beautiful images of spiritual life which you throw out, and which stir so many souls, is what gives me a great deal more pleasure to say."

Mr. Emerson in reply, after speaking of the "pain of dissent, and the dissent of dear friends and benefactors of mine," answers in this noble strain: "Yet as my conviction is perfect in the substantial truth of the doctrine of this discourse, and is not very new, you will see at once that it must appear to me very important that it be spoken; and I thought I would not pay the nobleness of my friends so mean a compliment as to suppress my opposition to their supposed views out of fear of offence. I would rather say to them: These things look thus to me; to you otherwise. Let us say out our own uttermost word; and be the all-pervading truth, as it surely will, judge between us. Either of us would, I doubt not, be equally glad to be apprised of his error."

Mr. Ware, in a subsequent letter accompanying a sermon which he sent to Mr. Emerson, hopes that "he has not argued unfairly" against Mr. Emerson's positions; since "I do not know by what arguments the doctrine that 'the soul knows no persons' is justified to your mind." He (Mr. Ware) thinks that men do not sufficiently realize the fact of the Divine Person; and, after lamenting his being brought into "a sort of public opposition" to Mr. Emerson, he concludes with the ancient maxim, "Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates, sed amica Veritas."

Mr. Emerson replies: "The letter was right manly and noble." But neither that nor the sermon disturbs his habitual contentment, or his resolution that "you should say your thought whilst I say mine." Then follows this interesting avowal and confession: "I believe I must tell you what I think of my new position. It strikes me very oddly that good and wise men at Cambridge and Boston should think of raising me into an object of criticism. I have always been, from my incapacity of methodical writing, 'a chartered libertine,' free to worship and free to rail—lucky when I could make myself understood, but never esteemed near enough to the institutions and mind of society to deserve the notice of the masters of literature and religion. I have appreciated fully the advantages of my position; for I well know that there is no scholar less willing or less able to be a polemic. I could not give account of myself if challenged; I could not possibly give you one of the 'arguments' you cruelly hint at, on which any doctrine of mine stands. For I do not know what arguments mean in reference to any expression of a thought. I delight in telling what I think; but if you ask me how I dare say so, I am the most helpless of mortal men. I do not even see that either of these questions admits of an answer. So that in the present droll posture of my affairs, when I see myself suddenly raised into the importance of a heretic, I am very uneasy when I advert to the supposed duties of such a personage, who is to make good his thesis against all comers. I certainly shall do no such thing. I shall go on just as before, seeing whatever I can and telling what I see, and I suppose with the same fortune that has hitherto attended me—the joy of finding that my abler and better brothers, who work with the sympathy of society, loving and beloved, do now and then unexpectedly confirm my perceptions, and find my nonsense is only their own thought in motley. And so I am, etc., etc."

It is nigh forty years since these words were written; and Mr. Emerson's name is now a household word all over the land. It is pronounced with respect and veneration in two hemispheres. Wherever his fame has gone (and his writings are read by the most intelligent, thoughtful, and cultivated men), there have gone the "uttermost word" of that spirit of truth to which his whole life has been devotedly loyal, the lofty charm of spiritual ideas, and that magnificent beauty of his prose style which have their culmination and perfect incarnation in the address to the Divinity School. Its delivery marked a "white day" in the literary and religious annals of New England.

JOHN SAVARY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec., 1875.

A REJECTED ARTICLE.

[The difficulties encountered by liberals in any attempt to get a fair hearing from the general public are illustrated in the rejection of the following letter by the Washington, D. C., Tribune. It has kindly been sent to us by the writer, presumably for publication.—Ed.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WASHINGTON TRIBUNE:—

The Tribune of this morning says:—
"As a matter of fact, both the Grant and the Blaine amendments to the Constitution are uncalled for, useless, answer no good purpose, and are designed to guard against dangers that exist solely in the imaginations of two candidates for the Presidency."

This is an assertion which will by no means secure the unanimous concurrence of the party which the Tribune represents. It may not be known to its editor that a movement exists, and for two or three years has existed, entirely independent of either of the existing political parties, looking to the actual and entire separation of Church and State in this country; and the necessity of such a movement cannot be better shown than by its platform, as follows, entitled:—

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

[Here followed the "Demands."]

Organizations to the number of twenty-five or more have been formed in the principal cities of the East and West under the name of "Liberal Leagues," and the movement has an organ in THE INDEX, published at Boston, and edited by Francis E. Abbot, an able and zealous advocate of the "Demands."

If the Democratic party wants to place itself squarely on the platform of religious liberty, let it assume a position as unequivocal as the above indicates, and there can then be no suspicion that it is acting for or against any particular sect or religious faction. Nothing short of this can satisfy an honest, earnest, and consistent desire for the utter and absolute separation of Church and State.

Respectfully,
GEO. M. WOOD,
President Liberal League of Washington, D. C.
WASHINGTON, Dec. 13, 1875.

WHY HE REFUSED TO TAKE "THE INDEX."

EDITOR INDEX:—

Almost mournful is the misapprehension which some intelligent and good men entertain with respect to the real mission of THE INDEX, and the important part it is acting in the great social revolution through which we are now passing. An invitation to a friend to join a club to take THE INDEX called out the following answer, which shows how easy it is to rest in old assumptions, the correctness of which is not seen to be called in question:—

"My friend —, You ask me if I will subscribe for THE INDEX, published at Boston, Mass., at a reduction of one dollar. I say no, even if it should discount as much more. THE INDEX may not do me damage; I think it would not do me good. I must say I have no money to use to promote infidelity. It has a mission; and one of its main designs is to weaken the affection for the Bible, on which it throws so much contempt, as well as on the Christian religion. Till something better is found, I shall use my money and influence for that. I can say, as Dr. Franklin is said to have spoken, 'If the world is bad, with all the hopes and restraints of religion, what would it be without any?' No, my dear friend, I think a poor religion is better than none. I pity that man who has no hope, and who lives in this world without hope, and without God. But the religion of Christianity is founded on a rock, and will stand against all the machinations of men or evil spirits. All such as have a good hope are through it measurably happy, while the bold and unchastened scoffer is unhappy. No hope of living after he shuffles off this mortal coil.

"More safe, and much more modest 'tis to say,
God will not leave mankind without a way;
And that the Scriptures, though not everywhere
Free from corruption, or entire, or clear,
Are incorrupt, sufficient, clear, entire
In all things that our needful faith require.
If others, in the same glass, better see,
'Tis for themselves they look, but not for me;
For my salvation must its doom receive,
Not from what others, but what I believe.

For points obscure are of small use to learn,
But true and common faith is mankind's great concern."

It is not fair to assume that documents not examined or allowed to speak for themselves can do no good; that THE INDEX promotes infidelity in the better sense of the word faith; that it designs to weaken affection for anything good in the Bible, or to throw contempt on what substantial religion there is in Christianity; that hostility to religion is shown by efforts to remove the sham that usurps its place; that the hopes and restraints supposed to spring from a piece of artificial machinery named religion must necessarily make the world any the better; that a poor religion cannot be improved, or cannot be replaced by a better; that a selfish and vain hope for personal advantage or promotion, which has no reasonable basis, can promote human welfare; that mankind become immortal solely through freaks of the imagination; that he who seeks to inspire humanity with a noble and salutary faith deserves the name of scoffer; that the perpetual goodness of the Creator is represented by an obscure, imperfect, and corrupt guide, instead of by the real way of human life which is being constantly revealed; that conscience requires any faith in such a guide, as God's last word to man; that faith in dogmas prescribed has anything to do with man's ultimate destiny; that what a multitude embrace must necessarily be true.

The real merits of the present agitation will not be understood by persons who make it matter of principle never to look beyond the prejudice in which they have been educated.

C. C.
NORTHUMBERLAND, Pa., Dec. 23, 1875.

NOT INSANE.

M. H. L., in THE INDEX of Dec. 2, says: "I write to say that I think Moody insane and a dangerous man to run at large"; and quotes from him the following to prove it:—

"I have a son, and no one but God knows how I love him; but I would see those beautiful eyes dug out of his head to-night rather than see him grow up to manhood, and go down to his grave without Christ and without hope."

Now, judging him from his own stand-point (and we cannot rightly judge him from any other) Mr. Moody has put the case with infinite mildness and moderation. Only his eyes dug out! Why, sir, if I believed in Moody's hell, and my son had as many eyes as there are stars in the heavens or leaves in the forests, and the digging process should consume as many millions of years as there are drops of water in the ocean, it would be an act of infinite mercy to hand him over to the surgeon, if that alone could satisfy the demands of Infinite Justice, to commence operation at once.

The work would all be accomplished in the early twilight of hell's everlasting midnight. Insane? No! Moody is the sanest Christian I have heard of for years; and he and his backers would be more sane and rational as Christians, should they all go stark mad. The insane ones are those who carelessly see the world tottering on the "ragged edge" of hell and damnation, a floating magazine of powder over a "lake of fire," and give no warning cry.

Go on, brethren Moody and Sankey; daub with no untempered mortar; hack with no broken sword; mask no battery; strike straight from the shoulder until you drive them to Jesus or to Bedlam. Be honest and consistent. Let us have more logic or less Christianity; and, if M. H. L. sends you to the mad-house, we will promptly forward your discharge.

E. F. RING.

SPARTA, Wis.

TRIUNE REASON.

MR. EDITOR:—

In a recent number of THE INDEX appeared an article on Unitarian principles by Rev. Henry Blanchard, of this city. The article contained the following impressive statement, as his understanding of one of the principles of Unitarianism:—

"III. To rely on reason, when the individual reason has been informed by the common reason of mankind, and helped by the divine reason."

Perceiving much wisdom in this Trinitarian individualism, I have sought to apply it to my daily life; but without flattering success.

Upon inquiring of my grocer to-day for good potatoes, he informed me that he would send a sample to my house for trial, and, if they suited my taste, requested my order. I replied: "Certainly; I rely on taste, when the individual taste has been informed by the common taste of mankind, and helped by the divine taste."

Query.—How soon can I decide upon my grocer's request, and what shall I do for potatoes pending my decision?

T. M. LAMB.

WORCESTER, Mass., Dec. 22.

A FRESH light has just been thrown upon one of the most hideous epochs of modern history by Professor Villari's publication of the despatches of Antonio Giustiniani, who was the ambassador of Venice in Rome from 1502 to 1505. These papers were among the valuables carried to Vienna by the Austrians when they withdrew from Italy; and one of the benefits arising from the restitution recently made is the appearance of Villari's volumes. They cover the last sixteen months of the pontificate of Alexander VI. and the commencement of that of Julius II., their main interest naturally centering in the sayings and doings of the Borgias while their ambitious schemes were ripening to fruition, to be cut short by the sudden death of the father. It would not be easy to convey a more vivid impression of the scandals of the time than is afforded by the quiet jottings of the Venetian diplomat, recording how the Holy Father amused himself with comedies and masquerades and the sports of the Carnival of 1503, when, his son having captured and slaughtered the Orsini at Sinigaglia, he was completing the task by executing and poisoning the members and adherents of the family in Rome, sacking their palaces, and carrying off the booty to the Vatican. No time, apparently, was lost in this latter portion of the work. When the Cardinal of St. Angelo died, as was asserted of poison, on the night of April 10-11, Giustiniani, visiting the Pope on the 11th, was carried by him into a room where his creatures were already busily engaged in counting the spoils of the victim; and Borgia pathetically complained that he was reported to have secured at least 80,000 to 100,000 ducats by the operation, but that there was only a paltry 23,832, to confirm which he called upon those engaged in the work to verify his statement. It is some satisfaction to know that when, four months after this, the monster died, he made el più brutto, mostruoso et orrendo corpo di morte che vedesse mai, and that for very shame his corpse could not be openly shown to the people in the funeral ceremonies. The faculty of abhorrence seemed to have been exhausted by the revelations of Burchard and the suggestiveness of Machiavelli; but Giustiniani has shown us the possibility of even deeper degradation in an infallible Vicegerent of Christ.—Nation, Dec. 23.

WITHIN THE near memory of comparatively young men business was transacted as usual upon Christmas day, except by Episcopalians and Roman Catholics; and the courts held their sessions without intermission throughout the State. We need not comment upon the very different sentiment and practice in regard to the day at the present time. The first innovation, or at least the first leading to very fruitful results, was made in the circuit court of the United States, sitting at Boston, at its October term, 1852. Christmas occurred in that year on Saturday, as will be the case the present year. On the Friday preceding, the district-attorney, Mr. Lunt, moved the court to adjourn over until Monday, out of regard to the day. The excellent judge, Mr. Justice Sprague, hesitated about so serious a departure from the universal custom of the courts. In his own court a capital case had been argued on Christmas day not long before. He is said to have remarked to a friend afterwards that he was a Puritan, not an Episcopalian, though, as we have already remarked, the Puritan was first applied to those who sought for reformation in the English Church, of which class mostly were the Massachusetts colonists, while the Pilgrims at Plymouth were dissenters. Judge Sprague, however, as a justice of a United States Court, had a right to do as he pleased, and finally granted the motion at the urgent request of the district-attorney. It was not long, we believe, before the Supreme Court of the State followed the example thus set, until, by the passage of the statute of 1856, the legislature constituted Christmas a legal holiday. This is the history of the legalization of the day in Massachusetts at so recent a period; and the progress of Episcopacy in this State is no doubt owing in no small measure to the change thus officially established.—Boston Advertiser, Dec. 24.

Sanctuary of Superstition.

A FEARFUL THING.—"Is it, or is it not, a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God? The Bible says it is a fearful thing. The Bible is right."—Rev. J. D. Fulton, D. D., in Boston.

A NEW INDUCEMENT.—Why, I heard of one physician who attended sick folks in a hospital, and he noticed this: that the sick people who were Christians got well much quicker than those who were not, and it led him to think, "Well, if the religion of Christ is good like that for sick folks, it surely must be good for those that are well."—H. L. Hastings, Editor of "The Christian."

NOT AUTHORIZED TO DISCUSS.—That a body of ministers unknown as to their ecclesiastical polity should here discuss the very foundation of Methodism is horrible. If this discussion [on the future punishment of the wicked] be allowed, I desire to have my name stricken from the rolls.—Dr. Curry, at New York Methodist Preachers' Meeting in 1808.

INFALLIBLE.—The Bible is a vein of pure gold, unalloyed by quartz, or any earthly substance. This is a star without a speck; a sun without a blot; a light without darkness; a moon without paleness; a glory without a dimness. Oh, Bible! it cannot be said of any other book that it is perfect and pure; but of thee we can declare all wisdom is gathered up in thee, without a particle of folly. This is the judge that ends the strife, where wit and reason fail. This is the book untainted by any error; but is pure, unalloyed, perfect truth.—Spurgeon.

LOST.—Oh, 'tis a terrible thing to be lost in the wilderness; to be lost in an abyss of vice and sin; to be lost at sea; to have your ship ground to fragments amid the roaring tumult of the breakers and the frowning terrors of a lee shore; to feel that only one single plank holds you back from death, and that that will soon be swept from your enfeebled grasp; but oh, how much more terrible to be lost in eternity, to be shipwrecked and dashed along dark ruin's fiery coast, to be drowned in destruction and perdition, to be lost amid the surging billows of the lake of fire and brimstone—to be LOST! LOST! LOST!—Leaflets for Letters, No. 7; Christian Publication Society, Boston.

THE MISERY OF ORTHODOXY.—In looking over the private papers left in my hands by a very dear friend at her death, many years since, I find records of her religious struggles which stir my heart with grief and pity, that what she had been educated to consider "religion" should have thrown her beautiful and sensitive nature into such states of suffering. She was naturally conscientious in the highest degree, and her whole moral character was of rare elevation and purity. Her intellectual endowments were also of a superior order, so that all the elements of her being combined to give intensity to feelings prompted and controlled by the ideas into which she had from her birth been indoctrinated, and from which the environments of her situation afforded no means of escape. In melancholy contrast with the glad some "Light and Liberty" which it is the mission of THE INDEX to diffuse amid the darkness and constraint of existing falsities and dogmas, I will transcribe for its "Sanctuary of Superstition" some passages from the records referred to.

A. H.
"I have spent days and nights in such agony as never mortal long endured without sinking into death-like, calm despair, or experiencing that peace which the world can neither give nor take away. How earnestly, how sincerely (and it does always seem that I was sincere, that no one could be more so), did I pray to God, and how constantly, in bitterness of soul, did I try to lift my heart to him! I did desire that the choicest blessings earth could give might be taken from me rather than they should keep me from loving God,—rather than they should comfort me in the least, till I had made my peace with him. Oh, how many hours I have spent in that old garret, seated on old lumber behind the chimney to avoid observation, and thought I would rather remain there all my days than become thoughtless again. Oh, what tears of anguish have I shed in that spot, and how my heart did all but break! I dare not write all. It is wonderful I live and have my reason, and no one knows how wonderful. For what could I have been preserved, from that awful step which wild despair had prompted me to take, when Satan had almost got entire possession of me? And when I became less wretched, I did think I took great delight in reading the Bible and singing hymns, and thought my joy and strange delight proceeded from a love to the Savior which was just beginning to be lighted up in my soul. But my rejoicings were of short continuance. I saw that my prayers and songs of praise were sinful mockery, and an abomination, and then I laid me down and wept, and tried to give myself away again and again, and then sunk exhausted into an almost senseless state, in which I imagined myself in a very perilous situation, and was just ready to fall, when an arm was extended, and I awoke. Never did I feel such sweet peace. I tried to dismiss the impression, tried to think 'tis all a dream.' I had no hope, though I had not one desire to enjoy anything in this world, and had no pleasure in anything. Every one encouraged me to hope—said I had much more reason than many Christians. Now why did I not settle down on a false hope? This was the second time I had been put in this situation, and in just such a situation as I fear many are who are thought pious."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $1.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Idea of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Kesiah Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'Truths for the Times,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, contumacy, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford; opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	2.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.50
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	5.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLILE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 1 vol.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses, Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
COONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	1.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Battles, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.80
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....	1.00
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.25
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	3.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	3.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.30
Child's Book of Beliefs.....	1.30
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREGG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old-Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of, Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Rita of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Writings.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skollege.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopsy the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion, or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with Disquisition on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, A Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	6.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVATT (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	3.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Kikkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Hook.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 34 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., readable cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.50
Sociology.....	2.50
SPINOZA (BENEDIOT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.35
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.50
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	1.25
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Biting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.75
Vols. III. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voyage Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Baunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	1.50
Pansies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.50
Child Life.....	3.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMINION OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom. Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.
2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.
3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.
2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.
3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges $3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge 6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

MONEY LABOR REFORM.

AND THE

MECHANISM OF EXCHANGE.

BY

PROF. W. STANLEY JEVONS, M.A., F.R.S.

A new and thoroughly scientific treatise, giving a clear and simple exposition of the "past and present monetary systems of the world, the materials employed to make money, the natural laws which govern their circulation, the several modes in which they may be replaced by the use of paper documents, and, finally, the method in which the use of money is immensely economized by the cheque and clearing system now being extended and perfected."

CONTENTS.

- CHAPTER I.—Barter.
- 2.—Exchange.
 - 3.—The Functions of Money.
 - 4.—Early History of Money.
 - 5.—Qualities of the Material of Money.
 - 6.—The Metals as Money.
 - 7.—Coins.
 - 8.—The Principles of Circulation.
 - 9.—Systems of Metallic Money.
 - 10.—The English System of Metallic Currency.
 - 11.—Fractional Currency.
 - 12.—The Battle of the Standards.
 - 13.—Technical Matters relating to Coinage.
 - 14.—International Money.
 - 15.—The Mechanism of Exchange.
 - 16.—Representative Money.
 - 17.—The Nature and Varieties of Promissory Notes.
 - 18.—Methods of Regulating a Paper Currency.
 - 19.—Credit Documents.
 - 20.—Book Credit and the Banking System.
 - 21.—The Clearing House System.
 - 22.—The Cheque Bank.
 - 23.—Foreign Bills of Exchange.
 - 24.—The Bank of England and the Money Market.
 - 25.—A Tabular Standard of Value.
 - 26.—The Quantity of Money Needed by a Nation.

Sent post-paid on receipt of $1.75, by THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. . . . The story is told in a very graphic style. . . . Mr. Holyoake . . . is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

A CHEAP OFFER

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES, and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

751 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SPECIFIC PAYMENTS

BETTER THAN

Specie Payments.

THE MONEY QUESTION divested of Verbiage and Technicalities.

By EDWARD D. LINTON.

PRICE 25 cents.

For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade $3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham 1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald 1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets to Course, One Dollar.

Jan. 2. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The Soul of Transcendentalism."

Jan. 9. M. D. CONWAY.

"The Natural History of the Devil."

Jan. 16. J. W. CHADWICK.

"Thomas Paine."

Jan. 23. D. A. WASSON.

"Radical Formalism."

Jan. 30. T. W. HIGGINSON.

"The Meeting of Extremes."

Feb. 6. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"Modern Scientific Materialism: its Meaning and Tendency."

Feb. 13. BISHOP MOQUAID.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Catholic American Citizen."

Feb. 20. F. E. ARBOT.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."

Feb. 27. PROF. FELIX ADLER.

"The Old Testament in the Light of Modern Criticism."

Mar. 5. Mrs. E. D. CHENEY.

"The Religious Life of Michael Angelo."

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 26 Bromfield St., Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at any thing else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY

335 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 8 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance.

Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to loaner. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested.

The Agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, "Voices from the Free Platform."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Hannah D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, JANUARY 13, 1876.

WHOLE NO. 316.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT: PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies, or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinion he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid of, any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid of, any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSSES.

A CORRESPONDENT suggests (and the suggestion is a good one) that all those who favor the opening of the Centennial Exposition on Sundays should write to Mr. John Welsh, Chairman of the Centennial Commission, respectfully protesting against closing the doors on that day.

THE STATEMENT of the German semi-official journals that the Ultramontanes are abandoning their opposition to the Prussian government is denied by the Berlin Germania (Ultramontane), which declares that submission to the State as required by Prussia is contrary to the fundamental principles of the Catholic Church, and can never be accorded.

THE PROHIBITIONIST CONVENTION at Syracuse, N. Y., on December 8, memorialized the Legislature of that State "to amend the Constitution so that the Bible will be secured in the public schools." The Christian Amendment is stealthily but steadily working its way into the mind of the Protestant Evangelical party, which contributes the largest element to the Prohibitionist party.

A LARGE MEETING of citizens was held in New York, on last Monday evening, January 10, at Rev. Dr. Burchard's Presbyterian Church, in favor of retaining the Bible in the public schools. Earnest addresses were delivered by Mr. C. H. Luscomb, Rev. H. C. Cronin, Rev. Dr. Burchard, and others. How any one not wilfully blind can persist in maintaining that the Protestant denominations as such are in favor of secular schools, passes our comprehension.

WE ARE very glad to be corrected by a correspondent respecting Rev. Dr. Curry's position on the school question. Trusting to the report of an "interview" with him contained (we believe) in a New York daily, we intimated last week that he favored retention of the Bible in the schools. We are now pleased to acknowledge that some just received editorial articles in the Christian Advocate, presumably his, show the contrary to be the fact. Would that all Protestants were as fair and wise as these articles are!

THE BOSTON Globe says that on the Sunday after Christmas Dr. Bartol "gave an instance of his personal experience with the Free Religionists, showing that sometimes they are intolerant of freedom of thought, their conduct herein comparing unfavorably with the courtesy and candor of the Unitarian Conference of Essex, the members of which listened to the same sentiments without objection." We are constrained to believe that the reporter is responsible for a gross and grave misrepresentation of Dr. Bar-tol's language; it is incredible to us that he should ever have said anything so unjust and untrue as that.

JOHN BRIGHT uttered a weighty truth, when he said: "Nothing tends more to impede the progress of liberty, nothing is more fatal to independence of spirit in the public, than to add to the powers of the priesthood in matters of education. If you give them such increased powers by legislative enactment, you do more than you can effect by any other means to enslave and degrade the people subject to their influence." Those who are disposed to substitute denominational for secular schools will do well to ponder these sentences of Mr. Bright.

REPORT SAYS that "certain prominent Catholic citizens of Providence propose to establish a Catholic Protective Association, the chief, if not exclusive, purpose of which shall be to protect the interests of Catholics in relation to the public schools, more especially to protest and provide against any unjust removals of Catholic teachers." Of course this means fresh attacks on the school system. Catholics as citizens have the same rights as all other citizens in the public schools; Catholics as Catholics have no rights there at all. Will some one of our Providence friends procure for us further information on this subject?

MR. CONWAY, as we learn on excellent authority, has had only one engagement with a Young Men's Christian Association (that at Elmira, N. Y.), in his lecturing tour this winter; and that is the only instance thus far in which he has been defrauded of his proper compensation. After the lecture, the committee waited upon him, said they were in financial straits, and should pay him twenty-five dollars less than the contract price. In all his other numerous engagements the contract has been promptly and honorably fulfilled; but the "Young Christians," after first securing the lecture, economized by withholding part of what they had promised to pay.

THE FABRICAL nature of official oath-taking was well illustrated at the recent admission of members of the new Legislature at Albany to their seats. Each man was required to swear that he had not been guilty of bribery or corruption "at the election at which he was elected"; and the oath was taken, according to report, with mutual winks, nods, and smiles. Not only had they been guilty of these crimes, but they publicly made a jest of the perjury they were committing in denying the fact. Thus the oath, one of the "Christian features of the government" which the Christianizers are strenuous to retain, is utterly powerless to secure truth-telling after all, and only adds a new stench to the corruption it cannot restrain.

THE PEOPLE are beginning to discuss the Christian Amendment "reform." A public debate was held at Crestline, Ohio, on the evening of December 28, on a resolution—"That the proposed Amendment to our National Constitution, so as to recognize God as the source of all authority and power in civil government; the Lord Jesus Christ as the Ruler of nations, and his revealed will—the Bible—as of supreme authority in civil governments, is incompatible with the principles of a republican form of government, and such an Amendment would endanger the liberties, prosperity, and happiness of the people." Dr. E. Booth and Dr. L. P. Harris took the affirmative side, and Professor H. H. George and Rev. J. P. Lytle the negative. The chief argument of the latter was that the Amendment was necessary in order "to hold the Bible in the public schools, and to preserve inviolate the Sabbath laws." The Crestline Advocate of January 1 says: "If there had been another meeting announced, the hall would not have contained the audience." As it was, "the Opera House was largely attended by the intelligent portion of the community."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spenger, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. E. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREKESVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; V. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALTIMORE, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERBURY, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zihling, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.

Deliverance, not Perfection, the Aim of Religion.

A LETTER FROM HENRY JAMES.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

You characterize religion as the effort of man to perfect himself. This is a singularly clear and bold statement of our modern gospel of culture, and is worth any dozen pages of Mr. Matthew Arnold's euphemistic maundering to the same general purpose. But the judgment, wherever I find it, seems to me saturated and even sodden with inexperience, unreason, and impiety; and, however rash it may be on my part to assail it in the person of its stoutest defender, I can better afford to risk a broken head than to keep silence.

I pronounce the judgment inexperienced, because it violates the integrity of the race-tradition, which implies: that religion is the instinct of man not to perfect—but to get deliverance from—himself.

I call it also unreasonable, because nothing can strike a rational imagination as more wantonly absurd than to find a creature charged by its Creator with the provision of its own destiny.

And I stigmatize it finally as impious, because the dictate of true piety the world over is to find none of its cherished or coveted satisfactions in self, but all in God.

Such are the counts of my indictment stated in successive order; but in arguing them I shall lay aside all formality, and deal with them in simultaneous order. That is to say, I shall appeal from what seems to me your very revolting statement on the subject, to the heart of your readers rather than their head.

I frankly confess, then, in limine, that, if there be the least fibre of truth in your definition above quoted, my whole religious life of more than forty years' duration has been a sheer infatuation. "Very possibly," you may reply; "but what does that prove?" It proves nothing, of course, as to the abstract merits of our discussion; but it is an imputation which—as brought home to me by your dictum—I cannot at all afford to admit; which, indeed, I am naturally driven to resent and snap my fingers at. It is by no means a question of science, mind you, which you are here canvassing, nor even a question of dogmatic faith, but really of the most intimate and hidden life of the soul; and the testimony of the humblest intellect in regard to it, therefore, provided it be a veracious intellect, is as absolutely valid as that of the highest. No one can have, for example, a more unaffected respect for your scientific intelligence than I have, and your remarkably lucid style of exposition. But I distinctly maintain that the scientific intellect, as such, is of absolutely no authority—because it is wholly inexperienced—in any question touching the conscious life of man as distinguished from his sensible existence. It is as inveterately blind in fact to religious light—that is, to the whole realm of truth lying within man's free or inorganic consciousness—as an owl is to daylight; and its most impressive affirmations strike one, accordingly, not as a less but only as a more darkling and conceited Tuwhit! and Tuwhoo! But you are a man of so manifold a pattern—that is, of so clear and clean an intellectual make,—that one hates to see your fine perspicacity clouded, and your fine genius weighted, by the dull scientific scolism, and the insolent scientific pretension, of the time. I for my part always feel disposed to insist, en révanche, that you belong by spiritual nativity to the side of philosophy alone, the side of living knowledge, and inward invincible faith. At any rate, this is the reason why I do not hesitate to free my mind to you in this very hearty way.

What, then, is the definition of religion I would propose in lieu of yours? Yours errs in my opinion utterly, because it disowns any historic induction; because it consents, for example, to erase Christian civilization from the records of the mind, and to look upon the last twenty centuries of human history as practically non avenues, or unelapsed, as simply of no account whatever in determining the religious problem. I, in my turn, consequently, should be very careful to frame my definition in such a way as effectually to exclude your error. In other words, I should frame it in such a form as to gather in the intense, concentrated, and exhaustive light shed upon the religious problem by the most momentous era of the world's history; that era of distinctively infirm Christian fellowship whose literal close I myself am cheerfully awaiting and invoking, because I live in the confident hope and expectation of very soon witnessing its infinite and eternal spiritual resurrection. I should unquestionably say to myself, for example: "Mr. Abbot's definition of religion is a palpably Jewish one, and if anything is clear to my mind, it is that the Jewish pretension has long since received its historic quietus and refutation in the intellectual developments of Christianity. Let me be sure, accordingly, to neglect no advantage given me by the peculiar intellectual genius of the latter dispensation." The reason why I style your sentiment Jewish is that its principle was actually incarnate in that fanatical polity; was formally on trial there, and had a final verdict rendered against it. That is to say, the principle of selfhood, absolute and unrelated as you yourself hold it, was hypothetically posited in that shameless economy as the true basis of intercourse between God and man, as a legitimate link of connection between infinite and finite, and had an ample chance allowed it, in the historic vicissitudes of the nation, to vindicate its truth, if truth it had; and yet it was found conspicuously wanting in that divine substance. To the Jewish apprehension not mankind, but the Jew alone, was the depository of the Divine love, and he alone, consequently, the heir of all Divine culture and blessing.

"True," you say; "but when I allege self-perfection as the principle and aim of the religious life, I allege it in no private but only in a public or universal sense, as being the interest of all men, Jew and Gentile alike."

But that consideration does not improve your case. All you do, so far I can see, is spiritually to democratize the Jewish virus, and by diffusing it among all mankind hide its ungodly flanks from the scourge of a just reprobation. But surely when a pestilence visits a town, the part of true wisdom is not to make it epidemic, but to restrict its ravages, if you can, to the family in which it breaks out. The Jewish infatuation—the principle of supreme selfishness and worldliness which illustrated itself in that representative economy—is not a literal but a spiritual temper of mind. It is not a particular but a universal malady, inherent in us by virtue exclusively of our finite generation; and no one, therefore, would dream of identifying the literal Jew with it save in his public capacity, or as playing the devil's part—the part of divinely permitted spiritual egotism, lust, and vindictiveness—in the great educative drama of human history. No, my friend, you alone, as doctrinally determined, are the true or spiritual Jew, when you are thus found, in the fast gathering twilight of our crumbling civilization, audacious enough to attempt reorganizing man's blessedness in the lineaments of his primal curse; which is his instinctive and peristent desire to find life in himself organically defined, and not in God or his kind.

And now I am ready to hazard my definition. Instructed, then, by the waning light of our literal Christian conscience on the one hand, and by the waxing light on the other of our socialized or spiritual Christian perception, I do not hesitate to define religion as a deathless divine instinct in man, prompting him to despise, disown, and reject himself utterly: why? Simply on the ground of the selfhood never helping, but, on the contrary, always fatally hindering by its insane exactions, his free or immortal spiritual conjunction with infinite goodness and truth.

Why, in truth, should you and I crave to be perfect in ourselves, when we are already perfect in our creative source, and our spotless kind? Can there be, in the point of view of philosophy, any more radical insanity than this? If you hold, as I doubt not you do, to the truth of creation, and if you admit, as I doubt not you will, that creation is rationally inconceivable, save as an exact equation between creative substance and created form, why upon earth should you be found cherishing any private aims, or seeking to save your individual self? Why not rather let yourself go forever, content to find your coveted life, and health, and peace—your coveted spiritual perfection—solely in God or your kind? We ourselves are neither our own substance, nor yet our own form; neither our own absolute being, nor yet our own contingent existence. No doubt we seem to ourselves to be both one and the other of these things. But I need not remind a man of your pith that what seems never a direct, but always the inverse, attestation of what really is. What, then, is the use of cultivating this strictly vicious semblance, this purely fallacious quantity, which we denominate ourselves? Has doing so ever profited any man of woman born? Has it ever brought him peace of mind? Has it ever brought him the sincere respect of his kind? Why, then, should we not all of us resolve, with this inspiring new year, to whistle it down the wind, and bid it fool us no longer?

I, for my part, and God helping me, mean to do so. I am tired to death almost of my long bondage to the will of the flesh, forever and forever prompting me painfully to pursue this mocking ignis fatuus of self-righteousness, when our modest race-righteousness stands by unheeded, offering me its solid and deathless divine satisfactions without money and without price. I have never got the least gain from the pursuit, but always shame and confusion of face instead. For whenever my infatuation has shone brightest, and I have been on the very verge apparently of achieving a perfect self-complacency, I have instantly been plunged anew to the neck in a bog of unclean thoughts and criminal loves. Clandestine things are never so attractive to me—the inmost sweetness of the evil and the false is never so intoxicating to my imagination—as when I am most bent upon purging myself inwardly into the Divine likeness. Such sties of ignominy as my patient, unteachable idiosyncrasy has been dragged through, by the crazy effort thus to realize spiritual conjunction with God in my proper person, and not exclusively in my proper nature! But even that patient idiosyncrasy had its divine limitation, and has now effectually broken down, leaving me to see the desire after personal holiness—that desire of man to perfect himself which you avouch as the end of all religious discipline—to be the root of all true insanity among men. I will none of it, therefore, any more. Rather let me find myself corroded with every lust denounced by the decalogue than undertake again to compass a divine righteousness in myself, or apart from my great, magnanimous, so long-suffering and crucified kind. Bare existence even is a boon to which I no longer feel in myself a titlle of sanction. I am self-conscious, or appear to exist in myself, not because I am aught more than an appearance, but because my great race alone exists, and reflects upon me her supreme reality. My consciousness and yours are only a feeble echo—are, at most, a far-off and empty reverberation of that lustrous, divine reality. We have absolutely no particle either of being or of existence in ourselves. So shallow, indeed, is the existence or selfhood which we claim to ourselves, and on the strength of which we daily pipe such fantastic paeans to our own purity and prowess as make the angels blush, that a grain of sand breathed into our weasand, or a slight excess of carbon infused into our blood, will disperse it in an instant like the mere mirage it is; and what does such a beggarly selfhood or existence as this argue, if not that it was given us not to cherish, or cultivate, but simply to spend and get rid of? How? Why by simply reacting from it towards God and our race; by simply turning it into the base fuel which alone it was designed to be—fuel to a pure flame of emancipated desires and regenerate affections.

Let us look out, my friend, accordingly, how we become definitively wedded in thought, either of us, to our own personal consequence, or are caught assiduously nursing and coddling distinctively personal ends of action. For in that case we shall fix ourselves in unrelieved intellectual night, or go on to realize in the perpetual chase of shadows a forfeiture of every ennobling joy which the divine substances of the world are empowered and aching to yield.

I am so glad I have done as to be very sorry that I could not have finished my task sooner; and I remain, my dear friend, with the most perfect personal respect and sympathy,

Yours,
HENRY JAMES.

CAMBRIDGE, JAN. 9.

WHITHER TENDING?

In the appendix of Mr. W. R. Greg's book entitled Rocks Ahead is an essay entitled "Three Men and Three Eras," which may be read with much profit by thoughtful persons, even if they cannot approve the writer's sweeping conclusions. Mr. Greg's purpose is to show that the United States as a representative of the virtue and power of free institutions to elevate the national life is proving a failure; that the evils of popular government are overmastering the advantages; and that the tendency is to demoralization and wreck. For this purpose he reviews the condition of our national life in the eras of Washington's, Jackson's, and Buchanan's administrations. The essay was written, we judge, in 1860 or 1861. It is supplemented by a view of the United States in recent years, lately written, the argument of which is that the tendency formerly observed has not been arrested, and that this nation is drifting recklessly to the bad. This is not the judgment of a man who imagines there can be no government worth the name without a king and an aristocracy; but of a contemplative and philosophical student of institutions, who to all appearances would be glad to take a different view of his convictions if what is true would let him. He says, indeed, "No Englishman who is not meanly malignant can dwell upon the picture without grief and shame."

Mr. Greg understands the nature of our institutions such as they were and such as they are, and writes about them with fairness and discrimination within certain limitations. The grand features of our form of government in its original conditions, those upon which its security and permanence were reasonably believed by the fathers to depend, are distinctly enumerated. The extraordinary and paramount powers conferred on the Supreme Court, and the irremovability of judges, were ordained to secure the supremacy of law and purity in the administration of justice. The consequences of too sudden and simultaneous changes in the governing body were provided against by appointing the elections for different terms and at different epochs. A formal process for amending the organic law was fixed. The electoral college was regarded as a sure device to secure the election of the President by the wisest heads in the nation. The executive head was strengthened by making the President supreme over appointments, and able to select and retain his ministers in defiance of hostile majorities in Congress. Finally, and in the writer's view most important, the "excessive preponderance of the Democratic element" was prevented by the electoral qualifications which existed in the several States,—a property qualification, the payment of direct taxes, and usually a certain length of residence. The new political organization in Washington's hands worked well, and the executive seemed almost strong enough. Such difficulties as arose were easily surmounted by his promptitude, resolution, and courage. "But Washington was a man in a million." His rapid, comprehensive, and discriminating sketch of Washington's career as soldier and statesman will rank with the most intelligent and just eulogies ever paid to that exalted personage.

Forty years from the beginning of Washington's term Jackson was President. The area of the country had been more than doubled "by the cession of Louisiana and the seizure of Florida." There were twenty-four States instead of thirteen. The population had increased from 4,000,000 to 13,000,000, the slaves from 700,000 to 2,000,000, and the commerce, exports, and imports from $72,000,000 to $144,000,000. Enormous as these changes were, "the moral, social, and political change was more startling still, and unfortunately was not in an equally encouraging direction." The formal and recognized modifications of the institutions of the country were many and important, "and all tended to increase the uncontrolled power of the popular will, and were so many progressive encroachments of Democracy." Not a single State admitted after the year 1800 required any property qualification for the exercise of the suffrage, and the older States had reduced or abrogated their established qualifications. During the interval between Washington and Jackson there was a "still more fatal innovation" in the judiciary system. The notion was fostered by Jefferson that the judiciary, like every other department, ought to be made dependent on the popular breath. Under that President sixteen judges were dismissed, and their courts abolished by Congress without notice and without compensation. Both Jefferson and Jackson pertinaciously urged the limitation of judicial appointments to four or six years, removable by the President and Senate, "thus reducing their holdings to absolute dependence," and before the end of the latter's term five States had gone a step further and made the judges elective for a term of years. The representatives in Congress had several times raised their own pay. The Democratic instinct, "than which nothing is keener or surer," had contrived to neutralize without formally repealing the provision of the Constitution committing the election of President to a body of "select men," chosen for that duty. "Finally it was reserved for General Jackson to give the most desperate and fatal blow to the dignity and purity of republican government in America ever inflicted upon it by friend or foe."

"During Washington's eight years of administration, he only removed nine persons from office; one, a foreign minister, at the instance of the French directory; the other eight for causes assigned. Politics had nothing to do with any of these cases. Adams also removed nine subordinate officers, but none for political reasons. Jefferson removed thirty-nine, but, as he solemnly declared and was ready to prove, not one of them because his political opinions differed from his own. . . . Madison made five removals; Monroe nine; John Quincy Adams two only. General Jackson was no sooner inaugurated than he dismissed from office nearly every man who had opposed him, or whose friends had voted for his opponent, and replaced them by partisans of his own. The number thus removed was variously stated: his enemies mention two thousand; his friends admitted six hundred and ninety."

The evils of the practice which has since become so general, of making removals from and appointments to the civil service dependent upon personal and political allegiance, have seldom been so tersely and strikingly set forth as in this essay. The growth and encouragement of the notion of the "manifest destiny" of the nation to despoil other nations of their American possessions, the increasing power of the slaveholding element, the sanction and encouragement by Jackson himself of brutal violence in retaliation for words spoken in debate, are also mentioned among the evidences of national deterioration.

Thirty years later, in Buchanan's administration, the evil tendencies had developed in a yet more alarming degree. The abolition of all qualifications for the exercise of electoral rights had been consummated in nearly all the States. Elections had, as a natural sequence, fallen into the hands of professional agents, who worked the whole machinery for candidates who employed them, "who spared neither calumny, intimidation, promises, nor bribes; and who are, as might be anticipated, among the most noxious class of bankrupts and disreputable rowdies." The elective principle in the appointment of judges for short terms prevailed in twenty-two States; in three others they were elected for the term of good behavior, and in two others they were appointed for a term of years by the governor. The evil working of this policy in various ways is explained, lynch law being one of the outgrowths of its inefficiency. In the matter of the election of President, the business is so managed that he is chosen by a minority, and is so in the control of professional politicians that the most worthy men are seldom nominated by party conventions. The insolent attitude of the slave oligarchy is accurately described, and the brood of fateful phenomena which Sumner so faithfully described in his speech on the "Barbarism of Slavery." Buchanan's character, as a representative of the kind of men who were elevated to high office in that era, is keenly analyzed, and the startling contrast between the leading men of his administration and the associates of Washington is revealed. "Finally," says Mr. Greg, "the recent deliberate treason of three members of the Cabinet, and the proved frauds of one of them, need only be recalled to mind to give us a conception how deeply immorality of every sort must have eaten into the heart of political circles in America."

The supplementary portion referring to the recent history of the United States is characterized by no more hopeful tone. The progress of corruption in all departments appears to be rapid and appalling. His position is fortified by extracts from the North American Review and other authorities that discover the sores of our civil polity. The most dangerous of all present evils, however, is, he thinks, our utterly wrong policy of recruiting the civil service. At the end he presents some important statistics to show that the present condition is not entirely due to the degeneracy of the same people, but to the fact that we are a different people. "The Americans of the days of General Grant can scarcely be said to be the descendants of the Americans of Washington's epoch." He estimates the proportion of original British stock to be but forty-six per cent. of the whole, and says: "Such a change as this since the days of Washington could not possibly have taken place without entailing a change of character of almost equal magnitude, even if other circumstances had not exercised great influence also."

While Mr. Greg's facts and conclusions are suggestive of much that is going wrong, and which it will be the work of the immediate future to correct, he signally fails to take into account facts and influences of supreme importance that are all the time at work counteracting the evil tendencies. Our grand system of popular education, the constantly increasing interest of all citizens in public affairs, which is sure to make itself active and dominant in any grand emergency, the intelligent and self-sacrificing patriotism that can always be appealed to with confidence whenever there is imminent danger,—these are facts that no broad survey will leave out of sight. The corrective forces are always at work, and on the whole they are working successfully. There are wrongs to be righted, no doubt, and diseases to be cured, and tendencies to be balked, and weaknesses to be guarded against; but we believe that, even in the United States, "humanity moves onward." We are yet a young nation, and possibly have grown up rather loose-jointed, and reckless, and uncultured. Nevertheless, we are not utterly insensible of our shortcomings, and if our way of improvement is different from England's or any other nation's, it is pretty safe and certain. The honest men outnumber the rogues by a good working majority, and keep a sharp eye on them all the time. We cannot do everything at once. It is something to have got rid of slavery. Let us not despair of accomplishing civil service reform. As to universal suffrage, we are unlikely to go back, but it can be made unnecessary to go back by educating all to the degree of exercising their privileges intelligently and patriotically.—Boston Advertiser.

A RELIGIOUS WAR NEAR AT HAND.

BY THE ABBE MICHAUD.

Many a quiet reader, on seeing this heading, will say: "Exaggeration again. Another sensation novel. Another partisan trick." Now, though such offences as these are not justly chargeable to me, still upon this question, any more than upon any other, I would not have the reader to accept my statements as authoritative. I mean to prove by facts, which, unfortunately, are unquestionable, that the Romanism of the present day, far from being a religion, is only an aggressive and contentious political system, and that, in view of the gigantic organizations which the Jesus and Rome are everywhere developing, a religious war is inevitable, and even near at hand.

Assuredly it is not the indifferentists in religion who will begin this war. Yet they, too, will perforce take part in it, in defence of their civil and political rights, which will be attacked by the Jesuits and Romanists. For it is to be observed that the Jesuits and Romanists aim not only at universal religious supremacy, but also at supremacy in civil and political matters. The temporal, say they, must be subordinate to the spiritual; the State to the Church. Since the publication of the Syllabus this has been a commonplace; and it is manifest that just now the Company of Jesus and Rome are making every effort to put in practice the subversive and revolutionary principles of the Syllabus.

Do the Jesuits and ultramontanes dread civil war? By no means. Look at Spain, where Carlist ultramontanes and Alphonsist ultramontanes have been fighting against one another for some time. It is a matter of public notoriety that the Carlists have as leaders priests who fire their revolvers oftener than they pronounce absolution. And these disciples of the Curé de Santa Cruz are applauded, upheld, and supported by the ultramontanes of France, Belgium, England, Germany, and other countries. A Parisian, M. Liebman, had in March, 1875, collected for the Carlists 46,304 francs. On the 19th of March the Univers, a Papist journal, published its seventeenth list of subscriptions for the Carlist soldiers, amounting to 1,880 francs; on the 20th of August its eighteenth list, amounting to 2,031 francs; on the 9th of September its nineteenth list, 923 francs. The majority of the subscribers are priests, Jesuits, and members of various religious orders.

Last September the Pope's nuncio at Madrid, Cardinal Simeoni, published a circular letter addressed to the Spanish clergy and people, urging them to uphold the Concordat of 1851, the first article of which says that "the Catholic religion is exclusively dominant in the realm, and that every other form of religion must be excluded and interdicted." This Concordat of 1851 surrenders the State and the civil power to the curia and the Jesuits; and the curia can demand of the secular power all the requisite facilities for preventing the establishment or practice of any other form of worship in Spain. Such a Concordat plainly provokes a religious war, and the Cardinal Simeoni, when he insists on the Spaniards complying with this Concordat, simply incites them to civil war.

A French liberal newspaper, having recently declared that by sending Simeoni to Madrid Rome recognized the government of Don Alfonso, but only to force him to execute the Concordat of 1851, under threat of Ravallac's poignard, M. Veuillot's Univers denied that Rome had officially recognized the government of Don Alfonso; but so far was it from denying the threat of Ravallac's dagger, that it added: "If there is a threat, it will fulfil itself."

In the burning of the city of San Miguel, Salvador, priests led the mob to pillage, and many other facts of the same kind might be quoted. Such conduct is in perfect agreement with Jesuit and Roman doctrines. Last year Canon Torres Asensio, Professor of Theology and Missioner Apostolic, published at Paris, from the house of the "publisher to the Pope and the Archbishop," a work entitled Right of Catholics to Defend Themselves. Under pretence of moderation, the author, nevertheless, recognizes "the perfect right of insurrection." In certain circumstances he holds that the exercise of this right is even "obligatory." To legitimize this obligation of taking up arms, it is enough, he says, if there exists just cause of war. Now, clearly, there will be just cause, according to Rome and the Jesuits, when there is question of defending religion—and religion with them is popery. This declaration is formal. The official journal of the Diocese of Paris warmly commends this work "in view of events which may occur."

Is this plain enough? But this is not all. The new free universities, which must base their teaching on the Syllabus, will, of course, give to students an anti-national education. On the one hand, these clerical universities will teach their students that their supreme chief on earth is the Pope, and that he must be obeyed, under pain of eternal damnation. On the other hand, the State universities will teach the contrary of all this. The result will be that the rising generation will be divided into hostile camps; the point of dispute being the supreme authority to which every Catholic Frenchman must submit, in politics as well as in religion. Does not this lead to civil war?

Then what is the origin and what is the aim of those Catholic committees, so called, which the Jesuit faction is organizing and establishing everywhere—not only in France, but also in Belgium, Switzerland, Italy, and Germany? I might answer this question myself; but I prefer rather to quote the testimony of a French Protestant journal, the Christianisme au XIX^e Siècle. On the 17th of September this journal stated, in accordance with the admission of a member of the Paris committee, that these Catholic committees had their origin simultaneously at Paris and in Brittany, in 1871, springing from patriotic distress and from an act of Christian hope. And it added: "Thus the origin of this work breathes war. The object is to take a Catholic revenge on Protestant Prussia. A tinge of religion is thus given to a purely political antagonism."

But the question grows bigger still with peril and menace when we consider the speech delivered by Cardinal Manning (then Archbishop Manning), on January 20, 1874, at the meeting of the League of St. Sebastian. "Now," said he, "that the nations of Europe have risen in revolt, have dethroned the Vicar of the Church so far as it is possible for man to do so, and have made usurpation of the Holy City a part of international law; when all this has been done, there is but one solution of the difficulty—a solution which I regard as imminent,—and that is the terrible scourge of a continental war—a war which will surpass in horrors the wars of the First Empire. I do not see how this war can be avoided; and it is my firm conviction that, despite all obstacles, the Vicar of Christ will be restored to his legitimate place."

The conspiracy of the Romanists against the present Italian government, their fixed resolve to set up again the temporal throne of the Pope, are thus confessed and plain to be seen. We hear this every day in France. Daily the Romanist pilgrims chant the hymn, "Save Thou Rome and France." Save Rome—i. e., restore the Pope-King; save France—i. e., place Henry V. on the throne. And we all know what would be the policy of Henry V.

In short, it is plain that, first, the Jesuits and ultramontanes virtually hold doctrines which lead to insurrection—even bloody insurrection—against their opponents; that, second, they are getting ready, organizing for this war. This is an undoubted fact as regards Europe, and especially France. As for the United States of America, there, too, are Jesuits and ultramontanes who have the same nature, the same orders, the same designs, as those of Europe. But they are in a minority; they will bide their opportunity with all the more patience since it is only a question of time.—New York Independent.

A REVIVAL OF RELIGION.

[We will guarantee ten minutes of amusement to any INDEX reader who will spend them in reading and reflecting on the following extract.—ED.]

Moody and Sankey have closed their labors in the city of Brooklyn. There cannot be found on the face of the earth a more unpromising subject to work upon spiritually, than the man who does business in New York and lives in Brooklyn. He has all the moral principles belonging to a New York importer, combined with the religious, modest assurance of a member of Rev. Mr. Beecher's flock; and so he is apt to undervalue his silks as much as he overestimates his virtues. With Mr. Evans to look after his legal demurrers, and with Mr. Beecher to attend to his religious devotions, he feels secure in the possession of present prosperity, and looks forward with confidence to the attainment of future bliss. It will take a vast amount of preaching and singing before his invoices are satisfactory to the government of the United States, or his invocations pleasing and acceptable to the court of Heaven. It were easier to change the soldiers' monument into a first-class wet nurse than to alter such a man into a humble, praying Christian. Mr. Sankey would have been fully justified in using the bass trombone or the snare drum to soften and mellow his hard heart to make it pant after the true waters of life.

When will men learn that religion is not to be applied, like a life-preserver, only in times of great danger and distress, but rather to be worn at all times, like our flannel, to comfort and protect, and always dangerous to leave off? If men went on the selfish basis of seeking the most pleasure with the least pain, they would find themselves pretty good imitations of Christians, without having gone through the process of experiencing religion.

The times are not promising for the cause of pure religion. We are all in that deplorable condition of mind where we have just knowledge enough to doubt the first chapter of Genesis, and not faith sufficient to believe in the Sermon on the Mount. Before long we shall become so scientific and well-informed that when a person dies there will be no funeral services. Some one will read comforting passages from the transactions of the American Scientific Association, and the mourners will go about with small hammers in their hands, chipping the rocks and assuaging their anguish by proving the antiquity of creation. Front seats at the scientific lectures will be reserved for the widow and the fatherless, and instead of looking up to heaven for our consolation, we shall bore down a few feet deeper into the earth for our interesting facts. We have traded off all simple religious faiths for a few meagre scientific facts; but there may come that day when we think of bestowing our patronage on some undertaker that we shall wish to trade back again, and in something of a hurry. A slight smell of camphor in a sick room has often proved efficacious in withdrawing thought from questions of mere intellectual or scientific criticism, and fixing them upon the true condition of the individual soul. Darwin's greatest work is the last book we should want to read the last evening we spent on this earth.

It is by no means certain that we are placed in this world to begin a grand hunt after what is called the truth; nor is it clear that our present happiness entirely depends upon having everything proved to us. Our mission here is not so much to keep pace with the facts of science as with the duties of life, and the most ignorant laborer who is patient and uncomplaining in his lot is a far greater man than the gentleman of culture who is restless and snappish in his daily walks of life. The knowledge of the truth often operates to discourage virtuous endeavors. We knew a good man who said that he always lost money as long as he kept a set of books, and not until he had destroyed them did he find heart to go on and give notes, trusting with childlike faith that his assets would somehow or other pay them. It is evident that we have now about all the scientific truth that is good for us, and we ought to add to our scanty stock of faith, or else our brains will resemble the fat man who travelled with Barnum's show, while our poor souls will form a striking likeness to the living skeleton that used to exhibit himself in that tent back of the old Manufacturers' Hotel. We recently saw a man who believed that the whale swallowed Jonah, and we were glad to see him, and to cling to this rare specimen of all faith and no intelligence. He was a much happier looking man than any one of the advanced thinkers of the age that we ever have had the pleasure of seeing.

Macaulay says that George Fox, although he possessed an intellect too much disordered for liberty and not sufficiently disordered for Bedlam, was still able to convert men of ability like Barclay and Penn, simply because Fox believed what he did believe. In close quarters the man who really believes in anything is more than a match for the man who entertains an intelligent doubt on all subjects. Shut Moody and Sankey into a room with Francis E. Abbot and John Weiss for a week, and at the end of that time you would find Abbot and Weiss on their knees reading that excellent little tract called, "What shall I do to be saved?" with tears streaming down their cheeks, and all because Moody and Sankey are just ignorant enough to believe in something, while Abbot and Weiss are so precious knowing that they are not sure that they know anything. In spiritual matters we want a man at the helm who has entire confidence in himself, if he really does not know half as much as we do. What the world has gained in one direction, in the last fifty years, it has lost in another. If we could retain the faith of our fathers with our present worldly comforts, how happy we should be!

We live in better houses, we walk on better sidewalks, and we drink better water than did our ancestors; but we have not their reverence for things sacred, nor their belief in things eternal.

They never saw the railroad, nor the telegraph, nor the last work of Professor Tyndall, but they all believed in the day of judgment, and they all loved the sound of the church-going bell. They lived in contentment and died in peace, and they were more solicitous to know the final destiny of their own souls, than of the "Origin of their Species."

We, their unhappy children, have relinquished the faith that cheers, without attaining unto that knowledge that illumines, losing all our piety in our vain efforts to become profound.

We need a revival of religion, but we fear the firm of Moody and Sankey have not the proper machinery to manufacture the right article for us. E. J. C. —Providence (R. I.) Bulletin, Dec. 8, 1875.

THE BIBLE AND THE SCHOOLS.

A SERMON BY THE REV. M. J. SAVAGE AT THE CHURCH OF THE UNITY.—AN ARGUMENT IN FAVOR OF THE EXCLUSION OF THE BIBLE FROM THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Rev. M. J. Savage preached yesterday morning at the Church of the Unity on West Newton Street, his subject being "The Bible and the Public Schools." The audience was very large, there scarcely being a vacant pew. He took as his text the words of the prophet, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." The prime evil of the present time was not so much ignorance as vice and dishonesty; but as the world went the terms were synonymous. Tweed never could have lived and reigned in New York had it not been for the ignorance of the masses, who thought his rule was more advantageous to them than an honest government. Business would never have been brought so near to ruin had not our legislators been culpably ignorant; no civil service disgraced but for the prevailing ignorance of the people. When the people could be educated to see things as they were, their selfishness, if not their virtue, would demand an honest government, for all men desired what was for their own good. The great step to national safety was national education, and since the ballot could not be taken from the hand of ignorance, compulsory education was necessary to save the country. He believed our common-school system was seriously threatened, and he also had faith that it would not be overthrown. It would not be saved by either of the political parties, but its salvation was in the common sense of the people. The victory would come after a battle which must be waged with energy and vigilance, and not carelessly.

The danger which threatened the school system was the old question of Church and State—whether the State should sanction the use of the Bible in the public schools. It was the same battle which Bismarck and Gladstone were engaged in, and the question arose here because people from all nations had accepted an invitation to come and help build up our country. They wanted to stand on a platform of equal rights, and objected to their children's being taught what they sincerely believed was wrong, and compelled to grow up under the influence of one religion. The question was not whether we were right, for all were sincere in their convictions. The country should be ashamed, as a matter of hospitality, to force its Scriptures on those whom it had invited to come and live here. We should not trample on the sacred feelings of any. It had been a matter of pride with us that we were tolerant; but was it true that we were only tolerant to those of our faith? Our religion ought to receive the contempt of mankind if it asked odds of any one in the battle of supremacy, and be ashamed to beg for legislative majorities and congressional amendments. If Christianity could not sustain itself against the world with a free literature and other advantages which it had here, it ought to fall. We violated the fundamental compact of civil rights in forcing the Bible on the schools which all were taxed to pay for. If we, being in a majority, now compelled the Bible to be used, we should expect similar treatment when the opponents of the Bible got in power. Such an action looked like a religious persecution, and he did not wonder that the Catholics were ready to riot, even, when they truly believed their children were being taught what was wrong. It was strange that the sons of the Pilgrims were engaged in a national scheme to treat others in the same manner from which their fathers suffered. If it could be proved that keeping the Bible in the schools was an act of governmental safety, the law of self-preservation might justify it in some way. The State had nothing to fear from unbelief, but from superstition. In answer to the question, Why should we let the Bible be driven from the public schools? he said it was because we could win by allowing its opponents to have their own way in this instance. We would then establish popular education, and thus make Catholic supremacy impossible. He believed the opponents of the Bible used the injustice of its being forced on them only as a pretext. They hated and feared any education except what they chose to give; they were afraid of modern civilization. Their pretext, however, was a just one, whether their opposition to the Bible was or not. He would remove any just ground of opposition, and, by taking the Bible away from the schools, compel the Catholics to go in. If the Bible could not hold its own where all could read it, it was its own fault. The speaker then noticed several objections made to remove the Bible from the schools. The first was that it ought not to be singled out for removal. He thought that the Bible stood in the way of compulsory education, and could not stand on an equal footing with other books, since it was the sacred book of one creed.

No one would object to its use as a text-book. The next objection was that schools would be godless without it; but the speaker did not believe that education was any more godless without the Bible than with it. The last objection was that a knowledge of the Bible was essential to the best education in literature, history, and morals. He admitted that the book was a masterpiece of English literature, and its use as a text-book in this study the speaker thought no one would object to. It was not reliable as a teacher of history, but as a teacher of morals it claimed a good deal of attention. He thought the Bible's highest moral precepts were equalled by those in books of other nations; but it was absurd to claim that reading many portions of the Old Testament was conducive to the highest morals. No book was less fit to read than certain portions of the Bible.

He concluded by saying that the great need of the republic was universal education, and that it could not be reached if the State taught religion. A false religion should not be boosted by outside help, and a true doctrine did not need that aid.—Boston Advertiser, Jan. 10.

AN EXPERT IN CHAPLAINS.

Obviously Jones knows a chaplain—a good chaplain—when he sees him. And it is no small accomplishment. For there be chaplains and chaplains; chaplains of all ages and sexes and sects; and of all races, denominations, colors, and previous condition of servitude; chaplains that pray extemporaneously, that pray by book, and by book and candle, that don't pray at all, and that spell it with an e. You may find chaplains almost anywhere. But connoisseurs in chaplains are rare. Such is Jones. Jones is a man, mind you, who could soar above a convention of clergymen for just a single moment, and then pounce down upon the chaplain of chaplains in the whole meeting; he could poise himself on equal wing for just one fluttering instant over a camp-meeting of entire strangers, and scoop you up a chaplain at a glance; a chaplain who should have the intellectual grip for a lodge of Good Templars, the fervor and the martial ardor for a militia brigade, or the staying power for a Legislature. And Jones is—but it may be we are too rapid. Possibly some reader of the Tribune may not know who Jones is. Let us pause then a moment while we convene Jones and contemplate him. We are not ourselves so familiar with the history of Jones as we could wish. And yet we think we can get him together somehow, in epochs, like the Pentateuch, and convey a fair impression of him. We are indebted for our facts to the Springfield Republican, which seems to know of him; and as thus far in the canvass for the chaplaincy of the Massachusetts House of Representatives that journal has not nominated the Hon. Char—but perhaps that is irrelevant. The Rev. Jesse H. Jones is a representative from the Twelfth Plymouth District to the Massachusetts General Court; and he represents Labor Reform. Need we say more? We think not; unless, indeed, some one should desire to know how he proposes to reform labor. To that we cannot make answer in detail, but we do feel warranted in saying that if left to himself he will either reform it or do away with it altogether.

The Rev. Mr. Jones has been engaged in selecting a chaplain for the Massachusetts House of Representatives. He has made his choice, and has sent to the members-elect a circular informing them of the fact and the candidate. The Rev. Mr. Jones knew his best hold. The matter of choosing Speaker, and clerks, and doorkeepers, and such, he left to others—to the worldly-minded and profane. "The chaplain," said he, "I will myself select." So nominated he "the Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston," and in the circular before referred to announced it to his fellow-members. He describes him: "Mr. Cook," he says, "is a man of stature, of grip, and strength, and power of body"—considerations of no small consequence in a chaplain. "But," adds the Rev. Mr. Jones, "in stature of mind, in grip, and strength, and power of thought, he far excels." There he is in outline, sketched physically and intellectually; and how bold a figure it is too. Now for the filling up. Says Jones: "He wields his subject as a farmer would wield a flail. He tramples down wrong with an elephantine tread. He handles the teachings of the chief thinkers of our day as the toys of an athlete; not one of them is a labor to him. His keen discernment cuts right through all their sophistries, and he brushes them aside as cobwebs." Let us pause here a moment to say that Cook is the man for the place. The world has waited long for a chaplain who is a flail-wielder, an elephantine-trampler, an athlete among chief thinkers, a sophistry-cutter, and a cobweb-brusher. When we read further that "Mr. Cook has marked originality and freshness of thought and expression"; that "he does not say the same thing over twice"; that "he is a man of immense brain, of great heart, of mighty power"; and that "he is fully abreast of all that is best and most truly progressive in the movements of the thought and life of the world," we are in some measure prepared for what would be otherwise the abrupt announcement, "One hardly needs add that Mr. Cook is every inch a man." Well, hardly. Mr. Jones remarks also that "he is cast in a heroic mould"; that "he moves steadily forward in his purpose with a tread" (he seems an uncommonly heavy stepper) "that it rests one just to feel the power of; and that he is made up on a rare scale of greatness and completeness."

And yet it may, after all, happen that the Legislature—Legislatures are so wayward and perverse at times—may not elect Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston. Who knows but that some light-footed parson, whose tread it does not rest one just to feel the power of, who does not handle his subject like a flail, nor trample down wrong with an elephantine tread, nor handle the teachings of the chief thinkers of our day as the toys of an athlete, nor cut through sophistries, nor brush away cobwebs, may be elected. Well, let us hope for the best. We know at least that the Rev. Jesse H. Jones has done his duty. And if after this the Legislature shall elect another, no member of that body can shake his gory locks at the Rev. Mr. Jones and say he did it. That noble representative of Labor Reform can rest content waiting for the time to come, as come some day it must, when the General Court shall lift up its bowed head from the slumberous exercise of a chaplain not cast in a heroic mould, and with one accord exclaim, "Oh for an hour of the Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston!" Then may the Rev. Jesse H. Jones rise in his place and calmly say, "I told you so."—N. Y. Tribune, Jan. 3, 1876.

NATIONAL RELIGION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE GAZETTE:

Sir,—The nearest approach to a purely "secular" system of national education exists in the United States. The public schools there had no doubt originally a decidedly religious character, and even now, in the majority of them, the Bible is used, and serves as an instrument whereby the teacher may better enforce the principles of virtue and morality. Even the advocates for its retention in the schools pretend to no higher authority than this for its presence there. Having entirely divorced Church from State, and having no national religion, it seems impossible for them to plead that theirs is a Christian nation, and that, therefore, Christian principles must be taught in their schools. No wonder that the Bible is being thrust out in compliance with the "demands of liberalism." These, as explained in the columns of THE INDEX, an avowedly atheistical paper (!), are dangerously consistent and uncompromising. The liberals, or rather libertines (as they were called in Calvin's day), demand "that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished, and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a textbook or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of Christian morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty." How history repeats itself! This sounds like the language of the French Convention in 1793, and the libertine's "requirement of natural morality" corresponds to Danton's Worship of Reason.

All this would be very discouraging were it not that, among our neighbors, to recognize an evil and to provide a remedy are, historically speaking, almost simultaneous operations. Already the "National Reform Association" has been formed, which seeks to imprint a Christian character on the Constitution of the United States, and its organ, the Christian Statesman, discusses with some ability many of the subjects connected with national religion and Christian government.

Meanwhile we may learn that the relations at present existing between the civil government of the United States and the Christian institutions of its people are anything but satisfactory to a large and most respectable portion of that community. It further becomes of the utmost importance for us to ascertain whether our position is sound in this matter, and whether we have nothing to learn from the experience of our neighbors.

Yours respectfully, T. M.
—Montreal Gazette, Jan. 4, 1876.

AN EXAMPLE WORTH FOLLOWING.

When the chief of an Anglo-Saxon community of forty millions takes up the position which President Grant took in his annual Message to Congress, on the vital questions of sectarianism in schools and exemptions from taxation, his words are likely to receive a large degree of attention. The people of the various States and their representatives in Congress are expected to yield a ready acquiescence, and there is every probability that the constitutional amendment suggested by the President will be gladly accepted by the various States. But the words of the American President will be read, marked, and inwardly digested by the people of every civilized country in the world. The statesmen of the old countries on the European continent will rub their eyes, and re-read what the head of the youthful, giant nation has said, and reiterated, against paying for the teaching of sectarianism from public funds, and against exempting ecclesiastical property from taxation. Wherever a State Church exists, the doctrine promulgated by President Grant will cause uneasiness to the hierarchy, and strengthen the hands of those who feel that the State should have nothing to do with paying for the teaching of dogmas, either in school-room or in church, and that the real estate belonging to ecclesiastics should, in equity, bear a fair share of the public burdens.

In the matter of exemptions, the chief city of Ontario has stepped boldly forward to ask the Legislature to put an end to a system so grossly unjust and utterly incapable of defence. Other Ontario cities will doubtless follow the lead of Toronto. Special attention has been directed to the subject in this province by M. Taillon's bill to enable untaxed industry to compete more generally with that which is taxed. Such an attempt serves to open the eyes of all, from the seamstress up to the compounder of medicines, to the danger which menaces trade by unjustly permitting a class in the community to escape burdens that all others have to bear. This province has long been the special victim of this worst species of class legislation. While the American States are taking the steps necessary to place all classes on an equal footing with respect to taxation; while Ontario is about to follow the example thus set, Quebec should not be singular in permitting the injustice to remain. The Canadian public man who may have courage enough to take the matter in hand, and to persevere in the cause of justice and opposition to everything like class legislation in this country, can rely upon soon finding followers and supporters enough to place him and his cause in the front rank. The country is sick and tired of both our miserable sectarian school-system and the exemption of immense ecclesiastical properties from contributing anything toward the improvements which give value to such property long held in the dead hand. A leader or two, imbued with some of General Grant's sound views upon such matters, are greatly needed in Canada at the present time, when public opinion is aroused, and so ripe for putting down class legislation that M. Taillon has threatened to withdraw his obnoxious bill.—Montreal Evening Star, Dec. 22, 1875.

A CLERGYMAN was preparing his discourse for Sunday, stopping occasionally to review what he had written, and to erase that which he was disposed to disapprove, when he was accosted by his little son, who had numbered but five summers: "Father, does God tell you what to preach?" "Certainly, my child." "Then what makes you scratch it out?"

RECEIVED.

Books.

- LETTERS AND SOCIAL AIMS. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1876.
GOD AND THE BIBLE: A Review of Objections to "Literature and Dogma." By Matthew Arnold, D.C.L., formerly Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford, and Fellow of Oriel College. Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co. 1876.
CURRENCY AND BANKING. By Bonamy Price, Professor of Political Economy in the University of Oxford. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876.
WHAT IS PROPERTY? First Memoir. An Inquiry into the Principle of Right and of Government. By P. J. Proudhon. Translated from the French by Benjamin R. Tucker. Published and sold by Benjamin R. Tucker, Princeton, Mass. 1876.
NARRATIVE OF SOJOURNER TRUTH: A Bondswoman of Olden Time, Emancipated by the New York Legislature in the early part of the present century. With a History of her Labors and Correspondence, drawn from her "Book of Life." Boston: Published for the author. 1875.
DAILY PRAISE AND PRAYER. Boston: American Unitarian Association. 1876.
THE BURGESS-UNDERWOOD DEBATE, Commencing June 29, 1875, at Aylmer, Ontario, and continuing four days, between Prof. O. A. Burgess, President of N. W. Christian University, Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. Underwood, Boston, Mass. New York: D. M. Bennett. 1876.
A ROMANCE OF PERFUME LANDS. By Clifford, Perfumer. Boston: Clifford, Perfumer. 1875.
SCIENCE AND HEALTH. By Mary Baker Glover. Boston: Christian Scientist Publishing Company. 1875.
SOUL PROBLEMS, with Other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck. New York: Charles F. Somersby. 1875.
THE PRO AND CON OF SUPERNATURAL RELIGION. By E. E. Guild. New York: D. M. Bennett. 1876.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

- GRER-WALLY. A Tale of the Tyrol. By Wilhelmine von Hillern. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
FROM HEAVEN TO NEW YORK; or, The Good Hearts and the Brown Stone Fronts. By Isaac George Reed, Jr. New York: Murray Hill Publishing Company. 1876.
REORGANIZATION OF ENGLISH INSTITUTIONS. A Lecture by Emeritus Professor F. W. Newman. Manchester: John Heywood.
THE CHURCH, Our Modern System of Commerce, and the Fulfillment of Prophecy. By William Brown. Montreal: John Lovell.
PUBLICATIONS of Thomas Scott, Esq., 11, The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S. E.—Our Insincerity.—Immanuel Kant in his Relation to Modern History. By Dr. G. G. Zerff.—The Mystery of Evil.—Erasmus. By A. Elley Finch.—The End of the Free-Will Controversy. By Henry Travis, M. D.—"Which Things are an Allegory?"—A Discourse on the Presence of God. By Prof. F. W. Newman.—Dreams and Ghosts. By Dr. G. G. Zerff.—Dialogues Concerning Human Nature. By David Hume.—Religious Ignorance.—Signs of the Times: November, December, January.
SERMONS, by the Rev. Charles Voysey.—Oct. 3: "The End We have in View."—Oct. 10: "The Faults of Christianity."—Oct. 17: "The Merits of Christianity."—Oct. 24, 31, Nov. 7: "Reply to Westminster Review."—Nov. 14: "Our Treatment of Sinners."—Nov. 21: "Religious Education."—Nov. 28: "The Reward of Virtue."
SERMONS by Rev. John W. Chadwick, published by Charles F. Somersby, 139 Eighth Street, New York.—A Revival of Religion.—The Great Salvation.—Who are the Infidels?—The Education of Conscience.
THE LEGAL TENDER ACT, Considered in Relation to their Constitutionality and their Political Economy. By Samuel T. Spear, D.D. New York: Baker, Voorhis & Co. 1875.
THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION. By Rev. Henry Powers, Manchester, N. H.
BREAD FOR NOUGHT, AND THE SIN OF EXTRAVAGANCE. By Rev. James De Normandie. Portsmouth: 1875.
THE BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS. By Damon Y. Kilgore. Philadelphia: Philadelphia Liberal League. 1875. [Second Edition.]
THE SUNDAY LAWS. By S. B. McCracken. Detroit.
ROME AND AMERICA. By Rev. Carl Theroke, Cincinnati.
THE ACTUAL RELIGIOUS BATTLE; or, Free Religion vs. the Old Creeds. By A. Van der Naillen. San Francisco: 1875.
ENLIGHTENED SELF-INTEREST. Compiled by W. L. Ormsby.
THE NIGHT BEFORE CHRISTMAS. By Mrs. C. M. Livingston. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co.
A REPLY to Criticisms on Prof. William Denton's Lectures. By Prof. William Denton.
VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE for 1876. Rochester, N. Y.: James Vick.
THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW. Nov. 1. London: Chapman & Hall.
THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. January, 1876. New York: D. Appleton & Co.
THE JOURNAL OF SPECULATIVE PHILOSOPHY. October, 1875. St. Louis: Gray, Baker & Co.
THE UNITARIAN REVIEW. November, December, January. Boston: L. C. Bowles.
THE WESTERN. November and December, 1875. St. Louis: Western Publishing Association.
THE HERALD OF HEALTH. January, 1876. New York: Wood & Holbrook.
THE SANITARIAN. November and December, 1875. New York: McDivitt, Campbell & Co.
THE PENN MONTHLY. November, December and January. Philadelphia: Penn Monthly Association.
SET of Truth-Seeker Tracts. Published by D. M. Bennett, New York.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

SAINT BLUDSO II.

They came in and sat down together,
The cars being crowded that day;
The drover talked crops and the weather,
Stock-market, the tariff on leather,
The Quaker: "Yea, yea!" and "Nay, nay!"
Then thus "struck a lead," as he'd say:—
"Ha'n't heard uv that Bludso? not Jo?
Jo Bludso—own cousing uv Jim?
Wal, now thar! that will do for low!
W'y, papers wern't nothink but him!

"He didn't go put'n on style,
Fes'm singin' an' preachin' and pra'r,
But cum to the gincoine tie
'F religion—you bet he war thar!

"He gambled, in coorse; 'twas his trade;
But, what be a leetle mite strange,
Whats'mever at monte he made
He lost to the Quakers on Change!

"For drinkin', they do say he'd breathe
Jest twict to a quart o' the raw!
He'd lie, and—Wall gold in yer teeth
War safe, ef ye've got the lock jaw!

"No: 'mac'late he wusn't—not much!
That's drawin' it reether too thin;
At fightin', harlotin', and such,
He'd discount the devil, and win!

"But: one Chris'mas Eve ('twas so cold
Thar mought uv ben skatin' in bell)
A wanderin' yo from the fold
Thar's no gittin' back to, named Nell—

"Close by a great church they call 'Grace,'
Jo found her half dead, and the gas
Shone warm on her sin-wasted face
Through that of our Savior—in glass!

"He know'd her? Oh, no, I guess not!
A year ago thar ar same night,
'Twan't her and another, nam'd 'Dot,'
Clean'd him to the bed-rock, when tight!

"He know'd her as soon as he spied;
And what did he do, if you please?
Cum Levite? go by t'other side,
And leave her to lay thar and freeze?

"He lifted her, keeful and kind,
And kerrid her in on his arm—
To church? Not for Jo! would he find
A chance and a welcome to warm

"In thar? Lord! the meanest saloon
Wer better for that! And he went
For th' highest (sign, 'Ring-tail Raccoon')
A cellar—steep stairs for descent!

"Howt' hap'n'd God only can tell!
He stumbled, tho'—struck on his head;
His own heft and that uv poor Nell,
And—thar they laid—dying and dead!

"Put that in yer pipe now and smoke!
Ef them as holds such hands expects
To lose, then the bank must be broke,
Or Jesus gone back on his checks!"

The Quaker then: "Well, with thy creed,
My friend (and this one I may call
Its obverse), salvation indeed
Seems freely provided for all.

"Twixt saints saved by moments of grace
And saints by sole acts of good will,
Methinks, though, the pleasantier place
For honest folk may be—in Hell!"

T. H. R.

RUSHFORD, Minn., Dec. 18, 1875.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 15.

Henry F. Blount, $13; A. H. Roffe & Co., $14.20; H. Rice, $3.20; J. Hall, $2; Isaac Taber, $1; R. Illenden, $3.25; H. D. Dix, $3.20; W. C. Allen, $1.50; J. E. Peck, $3.20; J. W. Marshall, $3.20; E. L. Winham, $3.20; W. C. Preston, $3.20; H. Apthorp, $3.20; K. B. Harrington, $3.20; Charles Almy, $4.40; J. R. Fletcher, $3.20; Charles Fritz, $3.20; B. P. Johnson, $5; F. A. Angell, 10 cents; J. E. Peck, $1.25; H. Powers, $2; Charles W. Slack, $2; George Thorn, $3; G. F. Matthes, $3.20; E. W. Gunn, $2.10; E. Krackowizer, $3; Frank L. Pope, $3.20; D. Landmann, $3; W. E. Mott, $3.20; George C. Young, 75 cents; Charles Wilkins, $4.02; W. E. Lucas, 25 cents; R. Hopper, 20 cents; James W. White, $3.20; J. M. Holmes, $3.20; J. S. Thompson, $3.20; E. Chase, $3.20; W. H. Wood, $3.25; Edmond Frang, $3; L. P. Babb, $3.50; W. E. Lukens, 50 cents; E. Whichey, 50 cents; Mrs. H. J. Lewis, 10 cents; D. L. Shaw, 10 cents; A. T. Wilkison, 25 cents; L. Sisson, 10 cents; C. H. Chace, $3.40; D. K. Boutelle, $12.70; J. M. Hadley, $3.20; James Thompson, $3.20; J. J. Allen, $3.20; E. M. Turner, $3.35; A. M. Dent, $3.20; N. E. News Co., $11.48; Dr. Mergler, 20 cents; W. H. Spencer, $5.70; H. W. Smith, $4.12; O. A. Bailey, $3.20; Miss A. Paterson, $4.12; H. S. Hubbard, $2.25; W. Kennedy, $2; D. B. Morey, $3.20; Adela Gates, $1.30; Samuel Drew, $3.20; O. H. Dana, $3.20; W. L. Foster, $3.55; Mrs. E. D. Lucas, $1.60; W. R. Badger, $3.20; Mrs. Clara Johnson, $3.20; I. P. Greenleaf, $3.20; Photius Fisk, $3.40; Joseph Copeland, $5; H. A. Dean, $3.20; F. R. Association, $50; C. H. Phillips, $1; G. H. Foster, 42 cents; J. A. Gardner, 25 cents; C. H. True, $2; H. W. Kruckeberg, 25 cents; T. W. Higginson, $20; M. Whitney, 10 cents; E. R. Brown, $3.20.

THE LAWS CONCERNING NEWSPAPERS.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, considered as wishing to continue the subscription.
2. If subscribers wish their papers discontinued, publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible. Notice should always be given of the removal.
4. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office or place to which they are sent, they are held responsible until they settle bills and give notice to discontinue.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a paper from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, will be held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers pay in advance, they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to coninue to send it, and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

The Index.

BOSTON, JANUARY 20, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. Toledo Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer. The editor is obliged to reserve the right of withholding from publication any article of a libellous or immoral character.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

MR. VOYSEY'S account of his new magazine will be read with great interest, and doubtless incline many of his INDEX friends to become subscribers. Such a list of contributors as he publishes is a guarantee of at least intellectual success.

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

A BOUND VOLUME of THE INDEX, either for 1871 or 1872, will be given as a premium to each new subscriber who remits $3.20 for a year's subscription, or to each old subscriber who remits $3.20 for a new subscriber obtained by means of his or her efforts. The volume will be sent by express at the recipient's expense; but no volume will be sent at all unless it is claimed at the time of making the remittance. This offer can only remain in force a little while, as the supply of volumes is small; but it is one which those who know the value of these volumes will hasten to improve.

WE WISH to offer very modestly a suggestion which may possibly be of importance. The courts decide that the property of the Roman Catholic Church is under the exclusive control of the Bishops, as individuals, because the title-deeds stand in their individual names. Does not this place such property in the category of all other private property? If so, on what ground is it entitled to exemption from taxation? Why should not the local assessors forthwith assess and collect taxes on it everywhere? If the private property of an individual, no Catholic church or cathedral can be a church-building in the same sense as a Protestant meeting-house, which we suppose could not escape taxation if privately owned. Or are we mistaken on this point? We should be grateful for information.

WE ARE glad to see that the New York Graphic reads THE INDEX, as appears from its issue of December 23: "While the question whether the public schools shall be religious or secular is up for discussion, it may not be amiss to quote the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States, drafted and proposed five years ago by ex-Supreme Judge Harbut, of Albany: 'To the end that the functions of civil government may be exercised without interference in matters of religion: neither the United States nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax or make any gift, grant, or appropriation for the support or in aid of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support or in aid of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.' This is exceedingly explicit and comprehensive—perhaps a little too clear to be at once adopted. But whatever amendment is chosen, let it be transparently precise, and let it not hide any ambiguities of meaning behind the word 'sect.'"

"DELIVERANCE" THROUGH "PERFECTION."

The remarkable letter of Mr. Henry James which begins this number of THE INDEX ought by all means to be read before reading the present article, which will be only a commentary upon it. Mr. James has been so long known to the literary world as an original thinker of a high and rare order, that any introduction on our part here would be a piece of sheer impertinence; and no intelligent reader will peruse many sentences of his letter without being drawn irresistibly, by the mere charm of his trenchant yet polished style, to read it to the end. There are few such masters of words as Mr. James, either in England or America. But those who look deeper than words, and are capable of a fit spiritual response to this "blast from a red-hot furnace of faith" (as Mr. James himself, in an accompanying note, with exquisite accuracy characterized his own communication), will be struck with what is infinitely finer than rhetorical beauty; namely, moral intensity and a fervor of religious conviction almost volcanic in its outburst. For this quality, wherever it manifests itself, and with whatever type of opinion it may be conjoined, we are always overpowered with instant reverence; and, were it not that the idea which Mr. James so impetuously (though so kindly) assails has its roots deep down in the very core of our being, it could scarcely hold its own against such a whirlwind. But it is of a strength too great to be uprooted by any power save that which planted it—the power of thought. The most searching and dispassionate scrutiny of our idea of religion, in all the light of Mr. James' criticisms, leads only to a fresh and confident reaffirmation of it as substantially true; and we are all the more firmly grounded in this conviction by the belief that Mr. James himself, to a large and unsuspected extent, rests on substantially the same conviction. That is to say, we think he misapprehends the real spiritual purport of the definition in question, and may be surprised to find that it covers at least a great deal of his own ground.

The thesis that religion is essentially the "effort of Man to perfect himself" is pronounced "inexperienced, unreasonable, and impious":—

1. "Inexperienced, because it violates the integrity of the race-tradition which implies that religion is the instinct of man not to perfect, but to get deliverance from, himself."

What "deliverance"? The deliverance of absolute annihilation,—of the absolute extinction of self? Nothing short of this is effectual deliverance from self, for, short of this, self survives to plague or bless us. "Patria quis exul Se quoque fugit?" There is no real escape from self while self endures. That Mr. James does not mean such deliverance as consists in absolute annihilation is apparent from his own subsequent words, when he declares that we are to "spend and get rid of our beggarly selfishness" . . . "by simply turning it into the base fuel which alone it was designed to be—fuel to a pure flame of emancipated desires and regenerate affections." These words which we have italicized show plainly enough that Mr. James is not aspiring to any Nirvana of pure cessation of all being, when he seeks deliverance from self; since desire and affection are eminently vital manifestations of self. Destroy self, and you have destroyed the very possibility of desire and affection. What, then, can Mr. James mean by his declaration that "religion is the instinct of man not to perfect, but to get deliverance from, himself"? Clearly, to get deliverance from selfishness rather than self. To get rid of self would be to get rid also of "emancipated desires and pure affections," which are confessedly the great goal of Mr. James' aspirations; yet to attain this goal is to approach dangerously near to the detested—perfection of self! It is very plain to us that what Mr. James would really get deliverance from is not self at all, but simply selfishness—gross, greedy, and slavish desires and impure affections; and that what he really seeks is the opposite of these, or spiritual perfection. So far, then, from the "effort of man to perfect himself" being really rejected by Mr. James, he himself makes it the confessed object of his own religion; and we are left to marvel at his inexplicable rejection of a definition of religion which exactly describes his own religious end and aim. But we pass to the second count of his indictment.

2. "Unreasonable, because nothing can strike a rational imagination as more wantonly absurd than to find a creature charged by its creator with the provision of its own destiny."

Destiny is a large word. We do not know what our destiny will ultimately be. But it is very plain that, so far as destiny comes at all within the scope of human vision, the creature's destiny does, as a fact, depend very largely upon the creature's own provision and action. If there is any absurdity in this arrangement (which we do not admit), it is the creator's alone; and at his door must we deposit whatever "unreason" is imputed to us for the simple recognition of facts we have not made and cannot change.

3. "Impious, because the dictate of true piety the world over is to find none of its cherished or coveted satisfactions in self, but all in God."

Is it not the true "impiety" to find this God-created self so vile, bad, ugly, hateful, disgusting, that it cannot be patiently endured, or even made a "stepping-stone to higher things"? Is self the only spot in all this universe where there is no God at all? If there is indeed none in self, we conclude there is none elsewhere, and the charge of "impiety" has a dreadfully hollow sound. But who is so shrewd an engineer as to run a partition line between self and God? If either is real, they are inseparable; and detestation of self, which is only another shape the blasphemous old dogma of total depravity takes to mask its hideousness, is the most impious of all impieties. To tax God with such moral rottenness as is implied in attributing to him the creation of a whole race of spiritual abortions carries impiety to such lengths that atheism is infinitely lovely by its side.

So much for direct answer to the "three counts." In arraigning our idea of religion for contempt of the past in general and of Christian civilization in particular, Mr. James evidently considers that, when we describe religion as the "effort of Man to perfect himself," we mean the "effort of a man to perfect himself." But we speak generically, no less than individually. The "effort" we intend began with the earliest religious consciousness and will end only with the latest; and, finding the history of religion just as important as Mr. James,—nay, we suspect, more so,—we discredit and undervalue none of the historical forces which have made civilization what it is.

It is the supposition that the definition we give to religion identifies it with egotism, selfishness, pharisaism, absorption of the individual in his own private ends and aims to the exclusion of all that is self-forgetfully or self-sacrificingly universal, which excites the ire of Mr. James, and would justly excite it, if that were a correct supposition. But it is not mere private culture that is included in the "effort for perfection," but the self-dedication of the whole soul to the public, the universal, the non-personal. It is not a stolid self-perfection that the soul should seek, but rather that race-perfection which binds all souls together in mutual helpfulness, disinterestedness, love, and worship of the best. This cannot possibly be realized by degrading or despising or disowning self; the race is no Realistic entity, but merely the sum of countless selves, whose co-laboring devotion, each to all and all to each, is that "effort of Man to perfect himself" which constitutes religion in its purest sense. If the individual, however, neglects self-culture or affects to despise himself, he becomes a religious stumbling-block in the pathway of all. Only self-respect and self-culture qualify for universal serviceableness, which is the true end of all self-culture.

Why Mr. James should consider our idea of religion "a palpably Jewish one," we cannot perceive, unless on the ground that it seems to set the "works of the law" above the "faith of the gospel." But this is a misunderstanding. The "effort for perfection" can consist in no mere routine of performance, no mere technical discharge of external obligations, but requires the internal dedication of our whole being to culture for the sake of usefulness, the unselfish devotion of all our powers to the universal ideal clearly prefigured in the very constitution of human nature. The petty egotism of merely private ends clings inseparably to Christian "salvation," as well as to the old Hebraic legalism. Both Judaism and Christianity are merely successive steps towards the universal religion; neither is or can be a finality. It takes the spirit of a broad humanity which abdicates all special revelations, and despises all merely personal or national interests, to complete the idea of a religion which fulfils all legitimate self-interest in the attainment of the universal good. That all men should devote themselves each to his own personal perfection would not universalize religion: that requires the devotion of each to the service of the welfare and perfection of all. In no narrower spirit was our definition framed. It is a stumbling-block to Jew and Christian alike, for it demands the sacrifice of that very egotism and self-exaltation to which both are wedded. The spiritual pride of a special revelation clings to both alike, and it is the very first offering to be laid on the altar of free religion.

When, therefore, Mr. James imagines that our definition teaches the "principle of selfhood, absolute and unrelated . . . the principle of supreme selfishness and worldliness," and plays the "part of Divinely permitted spiritual egotism, lust, and vindictiveness," it is only necessary to point out that this is a total misconception. Not individualism, but universalism,—not egotistic callousness to all save the interests of a petty personal self-culture, but rather the grand abnegation of all low interests in the service of an uplifting ideal which appeals to us both personally and as members of the great community of Man,—is the principle we would teach; and it is the principle for which Mr. James himself seems to plead. If we are correct in our surmise that he really means to attack selfishness rather than self, and that his own religion aims at the purification of self from selfishness, there is little to differ about.

He asks, to be sure, "Why should you and I crave to be perfect in ourselves, when we are already perfect in our creative source and our spotless kind?" To which we reply, Simply to fulfil the Divinely inherent law of our individual being while that individual being endures. Self may be a "strictly vicious semblance," a "purely fallacious quantity"; nevertheless, it behooves us to obey the law of the fallacy while it lasts, rather than to tax the "creative source" with idleness and fraud. Would it better matters to plunge religiously into imperfection—to surrender the citadel of virtue at the trumpet-blast of the first besieger? That is the only alternative—from which Mr. James too would shrink. His own definition—"religion is a deathless Divine instinct in man, prompting him to despise, disown, and reject himself utterly"—is either a reiteration of the old infamy of total depravity, a summons to a new Nirvana of absolute annihilation, or a simple affirmation that man's true self enjoins him to be unselfish and universal in his aims. We do not doubt for an instant that Mr. James intends the last of the three; in which case, instead of invalidating, he bears fresh testimony to the truth of the definition which he criticises under a misapprehension alone. He denounces "the desire after personal holiness"—but only as "apart from" his kind; and so do we. But the "modest race-righteousness" which he so eloquently exalts above "self-righteousness" vanishes absolutely, if all men give up the pursuit of "personal holiness"; it exists only in and through the latter; and we doubt not that this will be at once admitted. In short, the true interpretation of Mr. James' letter, and the true interpretation of the definition it opposes, appear thoroughly to coincide in thought and spirit. But, if not, we shall be most glad to be corrected.

MR. EINSTEIN'S LETTER.

NEW YORK, Jan. 10, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—It was considerate in you to send me Mr. Einstein's courteous criticism on my "inconsistencies" [published on a succeeding page]. The only objection I see to publishing his communication is the excessive over-estimate of my own ability and performance, which occupies so large a place in it. To the charge that my mind is poetical and imaginative I am compelled to submit—as that is the common opinion; and the unfortunate consequences of such a mental constitution must be accepted. Minds of a poetic and imaginative cast will have visions and dream dreams, will cherish ideals that seem wild in the estimate of the scientific understanding, will ascribe substantial value to ideas, will cherish hopes that common sense does not justify, and entertain beliefs that utilitarian minds discard; and in doing this they will lay themselves open to the reproach of inconsistency from honest, plain-spoken men who are differently made. This cannot be helped.

What can be helped and should be helped is the disposition to dogmatize on the strength of any private endowment; they who, on one side or the other, are guilty of that deserve rebuke, and must not complain if they receive it.

In regard to Mr. Bradlaugh and the "Infidels" of his or of other schools, I have been unfortunate if I have conveyed the impression, by words written or spoken, that in my judgment he or they are any way deficient in intelligence or goodness. His essential right-mindedness and fidelity to very honorable convictions it would be injustice to doubt. Few will claim for him a poetic or imaginative mind. Neither he nor his friends would consider such a description complimentary. All I ever said or meant to say was that, not having a poetic or imaginative mind, he failed to appreciate certain ideas, beliefs, opinions, shades of thought, which to minds poetic and imaginative possess significance and value. That is all, and that does not seem to me unjust or ungenerous. I hope it is not timidity or a disposition to equivocate that prompts the suggestion that Mr. Einstein has taken some foolish reporter's account of my language, and thence inferred that I held a lower opinion of Mr. Bradlaugh and others than I do. That our estimates of the nature and influence differ calls for no apology from either of us.

Faithfully yours, O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—At your kind request I will in my letter this week tell your readers about my new magazine.

A friend of mine warmly interested in the propagation of true religion had been turning over in his mind how best to carry the principles of pure theism into the homes of England. He deplored, like myself, the amazing ignorance and misconception of our views, which were owing in a great measure to hostile rumor, and also to the varied and conflicting utterances of freethinkers, some of whom mix up "spiritualism" with their religious beliefs, while others are simply atheists. He bewailed, too, the fact that freethought, which ought to be the most grave and dignified exercise of our reason, was often tainted by association with the most frivolous theories, and with much that is vulgar and in bad taste—not to say lawless and immoral. While such an impression of religious freethought holds the majority of good and respectable people, it is unlikely and even undesirable that they should look favorably upon our work, or be induced to look upon it at all. Hence the necessity for some kind of propaganda; and my friend knowing the impossibility of our "stumping the country," bethought him of a magazine, one feature of which should be the declaration of religious freethought principles, not set forth in a controversial or scornful spirit, but in a genial, winning way, avoiding needless offence while not sacrificing one iota of necessary truth.

My friend, with abundance of means at his back, paid me the high compliment of asking me to become the editor of this magazine. The religious portion will be mainly, if not invariably, written by myself, and will be restricted as a rule to one article in each number. The rest of the magazine is to contain essays bearing on all varieties of human interest, steering clear of purely party politics, but not excluding matters of general policy. It will give articles on science, on domestic and social ethics, on the past and present of other races and climes, on every subject likely to quicken thought and convey instruction. It will also provide for the amusement of those who wish to be amused by tales of fiction, or narratives of adventure.

Our project having been started in the late autumn, it was found impossible to secure a first-class serial, all the most popular writers having already made their engagements for the new year. This valuable addition is only postponed; meanwhile we shall have a regular succession of short stories quite worthy of the department.

We have called it The Langham, in a sort of concession to the custom of giving local names to magazines. There are already The Cornhill, St. James, Temple Bar, Belgravia, etc., etc., indicating the place of their issue; and as I have been now for more than four years known in connection with St. George's Hall, Langham Place, the title selected is natural and yet unobtrusive. My present staff of contributors comprises the following:—

Professor F. W. Newman; Miss F. P. Cobbe; Rev. Brooke Lambert, Vicar of Tamworth; Rev. Charles W. Stubbs, Vicar of Granborough; Dr. Frankland, F. R. S.; Edward Clodd, F. R. A. S.; Ascot R. Hope-Moncrieff; W. E. Bear; A. D. Graham, M. A.; H. Baden Pritchard (Royal Arsenal); Dr. Ferdinand Hiller, of Cologne; Rev. G. W. Cox (author of the Aryan Mythology, etc., etc.); Rev. John Basling; Dr. Andrew Wilson, Ph. D. (Lecturer on Natural History at the University of Edinburgh); Rev. J. Allanson Picton (London School Board); and Rhys Davids, Barrister. I have not nearly closed my list, nor made all the applications for help which I intend to make.

I have had some disappointments as you may suppose; but I am happy to say that only two out of a group of very eminent men declined to help me on the score of want of sympathy. The rest warmly greeted my undertaking, and would gladly have helped me but for previous engagements or lack of health.

I have no doubt that I could publish their names without their objecting to it; but as I have not asked their permission, I refrain from doing so now. The list would give a glad surprise to all who wish me success.

It is frequently talked of as very likely to have a good run. We have the advantage of not coming out as a rival publication; all the existing magazines have a groove of their own, and we neither would nor could interfere with them.

The Langham will be very nicely printed and got up, and is to be sold at half a crown. This price will carry it better than a lower one into the circles we wish most of all to reach, while it will not exclude it from workmen's clubs and institutes, or any of the public libraries.

It is doubtful at present whether our first number will appear in February or March; but I will send you circulars in due time. I have already opened negotiations with a leading firm in New York, and when these are completed, I will let you know.

This is a very egotistical letter, and I am half ashamed to send it; but no doubt you were acting wisely in wishing me to make this announcement to your readers. At all events, I must offer you my best thanks for the kindness which prompted your request. Wishing you and all your fellow-laborers a happy New Year,

I am, very truly yours, CHARLES VOYSEY.
CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S. E., Dec. 21, 1875.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

A stirring debate upon the question of general amnesty is the event of most interest thus far in the proceedings of Congress, the Democrats, under the leadership of Mr. Randall, attempting to carry through the House of Representatives a measure in favor of universal amnesty, and being opposed by most of the Republicans, who, under the leadership of Mr. Blaine, endeavored to exclude Jefferson Davis from participation in the provisions of the bill. The debate was carried on, evidently, for political effect, and, from this point of view, the Democratic leaders certainly cannot be congratulated. Mr. Hill, of Georgia, who made the chief speech in defence of Davis, said some good things; but on the whole his speech was too decidedly "Southern" in tone to produce a good effect, and his carelessness in statement gave the quick-witted Blaine abundant opportunity for the putting of questions which were not always easy to answer. The bill, which was finally defeated, will come up again, in all probability, in some other form. The question at issue—the continued disfranchisement of Davis—is one which has certainly two sides, and the arguments seem to be so evenly balanced that some members of Congress (including Mr. Blaine himself) have already, at different times, favored both sides. If, as Mr. Blaine asserts, and as seems probable, Davis knew of, and was therefore responsible for, the atrocities of the Andersonville prison, he should have been hung upon the same gallows with Wirtz, ten years ago. If, on the other hand, his offence is to be regarded as a political one only, no reason exists for his continued disfranchisement which does not hold good equally in the case of the seven hundred other men whom it is proposed to pardon fully. To single out Davis as an exception to the rule of universal amnesty would be to confer upon him a notoriety of which no one at the North or at the South believes him to be worthy, and in time would be likely to produce a great deal of that kind of morbid sympathy which many people manage to conjure up for "the poor, dear murderer," who, after strangling his wife, has experienced religion while on his way to Paradise.

The "amnesty debate" made very evident the fact that Mr. Blaine, as a parliamentary leader, is unsurpassed by any man whom the Democrats have yet brought forward on their side of the house. In vigor and effectiveness of denunciation, in readiness of resort, in a quick apprehension of the requisites for the production of popular effect, in knowledge of parliamentary law, in skilful manoeuvring, and, last, in power of mere physical endurance, he is almost unequalled. The way in which he disposed of the amnesty bill, gaining his purpose in face of the large majority against him, was almost, if the expression may be allowed, a stroke of parliamentary genius. Whether the qualities thus indicated, however, are those most to be desired in a President of the United States (for which office Mr. Blaine is at present the candidate most frequently mentioned) is a question which we leave for future discussion. The "amnesty debate" also made evident another fact of a different nature; namely, that Congressional language is, to say the least, peculiar. Such expressions as "You dry up," "Bellow away," etc., in a bar-room would lead naturally to bloody noses and broken heads; but in our House of Representatives they appear to be employed only as playful expressions of affection.

Ever since the opening of the present session of Congress, a large number of lobbyists have been working diligently to secure an appropriation of $1,500,000, for the Centennial Board, and the desired sum may be voted by both Houses before this reaches our readers. Although we ardently desire the success of the Centennial Exhibition, we shall nevertheless deeply regret the voting of this appropriation. Again and again those having charge of the exhibition have formally promised that Congress should not be called upon to make an appropriation, and these promises are now disregarded in the most shameful manner. "Dining and wining," and all the other appliances of the modern lobbyist, have been unsparingly used in order to secure the desired money from the national treasury. When, at the last session, Congress refused to make an appropriation, the members of the Board went to work manfully, and the success of the exhibition, through private enterprise, is now fully assured. A large gift of public money at this stage of the affair would encourage the breaking of positive promises, would stimulate wasteful expenditure in the management of the exhibition, would give new hope and faith (as well as money) to the lobbyist,—in short, would foster those national vices which have already caused our deepest humiliations.

Some facts connected with the management of the West Boston Savings Bank—facts brought to public notice by the suspension of the bank last week—are of more than local interest. The bank was chartered in 1867, and Mr. Franklin Haven was chosen President by the Board of Trustees. Mr. Haven was well and widely known as a gentleman of wealth, of business experience, and of financial ability, being then, as now, the active President of the large and flourishing Merchants' National Bank. His name, therefore, was at once accepted by the public as a guarantee that the new institution would be managed with the skill and caution befitting a depository of trust funds. And now the public has just learned that Mr. Haven accepted the office of President "with the understanding that he would not be called upon to take an active part in the management of the affairs of the corporation," and so well was this understanding adhered to, that, until the day before the suspension, he "had no idea of the real condition of the bank." Most of the Trustees seem to have been chosen with a similar understanding, and the bank fell into the hands of the Treasurer and one or two Trustees, who, as the result shows, were incompetent men, and the bank accordingly failed. In other words, the captain, who had been advertised to manage the vessel, sailed in another ship, and the chief officers remained on shore, leaving the vessel in the hands of unskilful sailors, who have run aground. The West Boston Bank undoubtedly secured the deposit of large sums of money which would not have been deposited there, had not Mr. Haven been its acknowledged President, and therefore, as was supposed, the chief manager of its funds. It is no exaggeration to assert that the use of Mr. Haven's name enabled the bank to obtain money on false pretences; nor can Mr. Haven's conduct be excused by the statement that other men have allowed their names to be used in a similar way. The practice is a thoroughly pernicious one, and, if it can be arrested in no other way, we hope that the various State Legislatures may be induced to pass laws making the Trustees and other officers of a savings bank peculiarly liable in case of its failure. If this should be done, poor people would not be so easily duped, by the use of prominent names, into putting their savings into the hands of incompetent men.

A State Director of the Boston and Albany Railroad has presented to the Legislature a minority report, in which he accuses the Directors of "cooking" their annual reports. He gives also the details of several discreditable facts connected with the management of the road. Among these facts is the following: The Boston and Albany Railroad has recently acquired possession of a connecting road, by taking a lease of this road for 999 years, and pledging the stockholders a large annual dividend for that length of time. The stock of this road, which had been selling at various prices from 50 to 70, immediately went up to 100, and the discovery was then made that the President of the Boston and Albany Road had nearly 4,000 shares of this stock in his possession—partly in his own name, and partly in the names of various members of his family. This President (who is thus charged with making improper use of his official position in order to put a small fortune into his pocket, at the expense of the State, and of the other stockholders of the Boston and Albany Road) has just been elected a member of Congress from Massachusetts; and therefore, if the charge be true, Massachusetts has now at Washington another representative who may be depended upon to sustain the unpleasant reputation which the State acquired in connection with the Credit Mobilier scandal. The charge calls for prompt investigation, alike in the interests of confiding stockholders and for the honor of the State.

The Catholics have proposed, through a Catholic member of Congress, a substitute for the "Blaine Amendment" to the Constitution. The distinguishing clause of this substitute is one which forbids clergymen to hold office. Against the adoption of any such provision we must be allowed to enter a most emphatic protest. What would have been the present condition of our foreign service had Grant been unable to appoint the learned Newman "Inspector of Consuls"? What would become of the poor Indian deprived of the services of the pious Commissioner Smith? and of what avail would be the Declaration of Independence if Holy Harien could not run for office? There are at least a dozen prominent politicians whom that substitute might compel to return to their pulpits, and the mere idea of any one of these men standing in a pulpit and preaching the gospel of honesty, of charity, of self-sacrifice, and brotherly kindness, begets a strange feeling of mingled wonder and sadness. We implore the Catholic member of Congress to withdraw that substitute.

The mutual council which was to be called in order to settle the differences between Plymouth Church and Mrs. Moulton has been given up. After ten churches had been selected and invited by Plymouth Church, and a corresponding ten by Mrs. Moulton, Plymouth Church objected to two of the churches invited by Mrs. Moulton—that of Dr. Storrs and that of Dr. Budington. In consequence of this proceeding, which Dr. Budington declared to be "unexampled in the history of mutual councils," Judge Van Cott, acting for Mrs. Moulton, declined to have any further dealings with Plymouth Church. The church immediately ordered the calling of an advisory council, the decision of which, under the circumstances, is likely to have about the same effect on public opinion as had the decision of Secretary Delano's committee, appointed to inquire into the charges brought against the Secretary by Professor Marsh. At the Friday evening meeting Mr. Beecher made a speech in which he accused Mrs. Moulton of perjury, declared that the proposed council would have been a "hodge-podge" which could not have given him a fair trial, expressed a desire to run his church as an independent organization, and hoped that God's grace would yet give him a fair trial—apparently forgetting that "God's grace" and the American people have given him a pretty thorough trial during the last two years, and that if he has anything further to say it had better be said quickly, for the verdict is about ready to be given.

The revolt of the Christian population of Herzegovina against their Mohammedan masters still engrosses a considerable share of attention in Europe, not so much because of its intrinsic importance as because of the political complications which may grow out of it, if it be not soon suppressed. The insurgents appear to be suffering great hardships, and it is estimated that at least one hundred and fifty thousand refugees are now scattered throughout Montenegro, Dalmatia, and Servia. These have urgent need of food and clothing, and appeals for aid have been made to the Christian nations of Europe. As to the doings and prospects of the insurgents but little can be stated or predicted with certainty. A recent report states that one prominent leader has withdrawn from the contest. On the other hand, we hear that several hundred Turkish troops sent against the insurgents have perished from the effects of severe cold. Mr. Edward A. Freeman has contributed to the Fortnightly Review an article (reprinted in the Living Age) in which he contends that the Turks, notwithstanding their long occupation of Turkey, are still to be looked upon only as a band of robbers temporarily possessed of the property of others. The Herzegovinians, he asserts, are positively determined to live no longer under the oppressive rule of the Turks, and he accordingly appeals for Christian sympathy and European aid. Intervention would doubtless have come to the aid of Herzegovina before now, were not the nations of Europe so watchful of one another, and so fearful of disturbing existing relations. Nevertheless, there seems to be an impression prevalent throughout Europe that the time has come for some of these relations to be altered, and that we are upon the eve of important events which may bring about the final settlement of the much vexed "Eastern Question." It may be, therefore, that the comparatively little cloud over Herzegovina will prove the forerunner of a terrible storm which will spread over all the countries of Europe.

Communications.

DOES THE MIND ACT ON THE BODY?

That depends on whether or not there is such a thing as mind. One class of philosophers has discovered certain phenomena which seem to prove the non-existence of mind.

John Weiss well states the materialist's creed: "All our mental action results from molecular distribution and arrangement. Whatever a man thinks that he feels is nothing but the gambolling of these microscopic spheres. When one is flush with well-assimilated food, it makes him manly, and prompts him to sacrifice his stimulated atoms upon the bed of honor. The physician traces melancholy and self-distrust to acrofulous conditions of the blood, or to a clogged bile-duct; hysteria breeds temper and irregularity, and chronic dyspepsia suggests criminal ideas."

Fish and phosphorus put into the hopper of the stomach, in the brain flame up into a grand epic poem, an inspiring melody, or a logical treatise on science. Atoms rush to the front, and immediately the problems of the universe stand in order before us, its deep secrets revealed; they subside, and knowledge becomes folly. Life is simply the tragedy of matter. Thus the materialist.

But what is matter? Has sage protoplasm, in human form, yet been jostled into just the right arrangement to enable it to see and solve this deep problem?

But admit the facts which the materialist, in common with others, declares; namely, that physical conditions affect mental action. What then? Does it follow that there is no mind? What, then, is the meaning of such facts as the following?

Here is a man in whose blood the red corpuscles dance right merrily. Robust health has its home in all parts of the body; but his bank-stock takes a tumble; or a firm in which he has five hundred thousand of his million dollars invested has the bottom knocked out. The man's table still groans under its charge of broiled steak, turkey, and pudding; his servants are just as obsequious; but melancholy takes possession of his mind, scourges appetite away, and creates dyspepsia. The corpuscles shrink before a power, mighty indeed, but coming without the mediation of protoplasm or atoms. Here is a cause acting from without, and in vain may the scientist direct his microscope to see it, or study the function of the liver, the structure of the blood, or the condition of the stomach. These were all affluent with health and jollity till the external disaster, impalpable to the senses and inscrutable to material science, struck the mind; and it being depressed, the bodily functions all share the depression. It is telegraphed through every nerve that crape is hung at the door of the mind, and every organ of the body defers business, lowers the curtains half-way, and goes into mourning. The materialist's philosophy is inverted. Matter is subordinate to a master. What master? Mind.

A husband goes from home for a few days on matters of pleasure and profit. The fond wife, with bright eye and cheerful heart, kisses him, and twines anew the cord of love around his heart, which neither time, distance, poverty, nor sluggishness of blood can impair, and dances back to her duties, joyful in anticipation of his return. A rap is heard on the door. She flies to open it, when behold, borne by neighbors, the broken and lifeless body of her husband lies before her. She falls, and soon the white cheek and pulseless breast prove that bounding blood has no controlling power in the presence of such mighty forces, which through the mind act on the body.

No matter how symmetrically the protoplasm is arranged, or with what sprightliness the atoms leap into favorable combinations, fear will put upon them the spell of paralysis. No matter how closely the fibres may be knit, when a great grief tugs at the life the heart will break.

When the physician finds melancholy, and announces dyspepsia behind the curtain, sapping the vitals, he announces more than this; he directs that cheerful influences be constantly let in upon the mind,—cheerful sights and sounds; that loving words and deeds be given the key to the citadel, and they will prove mighty angels in casting out the demons of sadness. The physician declares that oftentimes, in its helplessness, medicine is secondary to hopefulness of mind. Create confidence, and the work is half done. If despair depresses, hope revives.

Then if one sees or hears of a very mean act, an emotion (anger) reaches the body through the mind, and controls molecular movements. Says Dr. Traill: "A paroxysm of anger will render the bile as acrid and irritating as a full dose of calomel; excessive fear will relax the bowels equal to a strong infusion of tobacco; intense grief will arrest the secretions of the gastric juice as effectually as belladonna."

Besides, true manliness, clear intellect, and solid judgment, are often found associated with acrofulous blood and a moderate degree of health and physical strength. Giants are not characterized by exceeding wisdom, and the loftiest poems have sometimes come forth when the body was only a prison for the mind.

Last week, in this vicinity, a woman died who had been a great sufferer from scrofula and consumptive tendency for many years; yet, with a husband whose bodily atoms were arranged for exuberant health, she was the wisdom, the inspiration, and mental power of the family; and, with a body worn to the merest shadow, her mind kept its brightness, its confidence and serenity to the last. With the last breath she drew, she gave evidence of a full recognition of friends and her own condition; mind thus triumphing over the wreck of matter, and establishing its existence and supremacy.

Many minds have seemed eclipsed as death approached; but many others have as evidently kept, to a great degree, their understanding, not unfrequently seeming clearer and brighter as they approached the change. Now if only one mind presented this phenomenon of fulness when the bodily forces are so nearly spent, would it not be proof that where the mind seems to be spent also, the conditions prevented its clear manifestation rather than that there is no mind to survive?

So the question has two sides. The materialist has ridden his hobby-horse into that part of the temple where he sees the operators, from every part of the body, sending messages to the brain, and modifying its action, and he says: "This is all. There is no such thing as mind; it is molecules instead." Another, who leaves this horse in the rut, and mounts to the dome of the temple, in its greater light beholds not only what the materialist has seen, but also that here are immaterial forces—powers of mind—which return messages and commands to every part of the body.

Mind and matter, spirit and body—this, it seems to me, is the solution of the double problem. While intimately joined together by vital force, each must exert its influence on the other for good or evil, according to its perfect or imperfect condition and surroundings, material and mental. And while such interdependence exists, each must have means to inform the other of its condition and needs. Whether suffering or rejoicing in sympathy, each must send back its message with recruits, according to its ability. The hand telegraphs to the head that it is inflamed; and the head returns that the hand shall reach up and take the soothing plaster that will scatter the inflammation. The mind sends word to the foot that it is sad, and, under instruction from the mind, the foot bears it to bright surroundings. The material organs respond to the mind with sympathy and obedient action; the mind answers the organs with sympathy and instruction.

It seems to me that facts of the nature of some of those pointed out above indicate as clearly mind in man, as distinguished from matter, as do the materialist's facts indicate that matter plays a part in physical existence. Is this inference sustained or not?

O. K. CROSBY.

MR. O. B. FROTHINGHAM'S INCONSISTENCIES.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Anything emanating from the pen of Mr. Frothingham has such an irresistible charm about it, that expressions which would be severely censured, when uttered by another less enchanting speaker or written by another less bewitching writer, pass without offending. His style is so pleasing, his sentences so weighty, his periods so finished, his sermons or other speeches so full of good sense, of learning, of deep thought, that the enraptured listener or reader is so captivated by them that he overlooks much that might arouse his scorn, if uttered by or read from another man. Whence, then, the not extremely rare aberrations of such a mind? I think I can show. Mr. Frothingham is not only profoundly learned, a deep thinker and strong reasoner, but he has also a fine poetical mind, a rich imagination, and vivid fancy. These latter carry him sometimes beyond the range of reason into the realm of the ideal, or the supernatural; and then he is as much bewildered as any one who ungauily wanders in these pathless regions. Coupled with these qualities is a strong conviction of the correctness of his opinions, and a consciousness of the purity and benevolence of his intentions, that makes him (as it does every one who thus holds to his belief) unjust to the beliefs and opinions of others. This is the only way I can, at least to myself, explain his inconsistencies, and even his harshness, now and then, in judging others; and in this way alone I can explain his censorious allusions to Mr. Charles Bradlaugh, his flings now and then at "infidels" generally, his arrogant claims to "faith" for himself (or the religious) alone, and his denial of it to "infidels," and similar inconsistencies.

And so again is it with his claims for Free Religion, or what he wills to be understood by Free Religion. Now, my dear sir, you certainly must know that by its opponents it has frequently been reproachfully said that Free Religion is no "religion at all"; and I believe that it would be much the better for it if it were not. It certainly does not contribute at all to its benefit, to a closer union of its actively enrolled members, nor to bring those sympathizing with but not yet members of it into its fold. For "religion" is, I believe, (in spite of what may generally be maintained to the contrary) not anything real, much less innate, but only an abstraction, a fancy of the imagination. Hence there has never been, because there cannot be, a definition of it acceptable to all who think. "Religion" must, therefore, be something different with one individual from what it is with another; and must thus, instead of a means of union, become a cause of division of individuals generally as well as members of the Free Religious Association. The inevitable consequence, then, is, as it must be, that the latter is obliged to seek for some other element combining its heterogeneous members into one homogeneous body. This element it found, not in its "religion," catholic or free, but in its "aims and purposes." We find, therefore, that by its very constitution it wisely does not make harmony in some religious views, nor the acceptance of some definite religious tenets or doctrines requisite in those applying for membership and their admittance, but merely a recognition and willingness to work for its aims and purposes. For these only are something real, substantial, definite, on which all can unite; no mere abstractions, fancies, conceived differently by different individuals and different minds—as is "religion," which, in fact, is nothing but the collective name of all that is wise and good, praiseworthy and desirable, in man or in his arts; or, as you yourself phrase it, "an effort to perfect ourselves." In these, and in these only, every good man—whether he be a "free" religionist, a plain religionist, or a no-religionist, a Jew, a Christian, or an "infidel"—can agree, have "faith" (i. e., believe) in them, and endeavor just in proportion to his real goodness to live and realize them.

Why, then, does Mr. Frothingham say that "infidels have no faith"? Will he deny them "faith" because they do not believe in "religion," as he does? I hope the President of the "Free" Religious Association will not be as bigoted as that! But if he is not, why will he find fault with so good a man as Charles Bradlaugh for not believing and for having no "religion"? Can and does Mr. Bradlaugh not believe in, has he not strong faith in, and works he not as earnestly and effectually for, the improvement of humanity in all that can make it better and happier—the very aims and purposes of Free Religion? Is he not doing it better and more effectually without any "religious" belief, but with strong "faith" in, and in the sacred name of, humanity, than any "free" or creed-bound "religionist" is doing, or can do it in the name of his fancied "religion"? How, then, can Mr. Frothingham deny to such men "faith," or speak flippantly of "infidels," generally?

Or has Mr. Frothingham, perhaps, "faith" in the "unseen," the "unknown," the supernatural? If he has, and means that "faith" when denying it to Mr. Bradlaugh, and "infidels," generally, he is certainly right in his denial, but at least more unjust in his implied censure. Neither Mr. Bradlaugh nor any "infidel" will, however, dispute or envy him his "faith." They are so well contented with, and feel so much consolation in, their "faith in humanity," that they can very well dispense with that fanciful "religious faith" of Mr. Frothingham. They think and believe, even, that he would be much less inconsistent with himself, and would appear to much better advantage, if he had less of that sort of "faith" and less "religion"; and that even Free Religion would not be any the less attractive, but more true in name and to its real aim as "Free Humanity" than as "Free Religion."

Mr. Frothingham, in his "Liberal Bigotry," in THE INDEX of Dec. 2, is somewhat irritated against "infidels" for criticising him for the above and other flings at "infidels," with which he seems to me rather a little too liberal—in either sense of this word. We are wont to get them often enough from the Orthodox, and then don't mind them much; but when coming from such a radical, such a generally esteemed man, as Mr. Frothingham, they are—well! rather unlooked for.

Your infidel, but faithful, friend,
MORRIS EINHSTEIN.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., Dec. 12, 1875.

THE SABBATH OF CHRISTIANITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—With regard to the Sunday and Sabbath questions alluded to in my French hymn, and in your short note introductory to it (INDEX, Jan. 6), your readers may perhaps feel interested in learning what the Church thinks upon it from her authoritative documents rather than from me.

The only absolutely authoritative documents of the whole Christian Church are the books of the Old and New Testament, the Nicene Creed, and the Canons of the seven Ecumenical Councils, or rather of five of them, as the Fifth and Sixth made no Canons.

1. With regard to the Bible itself, I refer your readers to it, not objecting, for this particular purpose, even to King James' version. Any man making a thorough study of it with the help of a concordance will be able to convince himself that, while it teaches that the Jewish Sabbath is abolished under the Christian dispensation, it says not a word about the first day of the week, or any other day, having been substituted for the seventh as a Christian Sabbath.

2. Nor does the Nicene Creed breathe a word about it, as your readers may convince themselves by reading that creed in the text contained in the Episcopal prayer-book, to which text, however faulty in so far as it contains the unwarranted addition Filioque, I do not require to object for the present purpose.

3. As to the Canons of the Ecumenical Councils, the only two which make mention of either the Lord's day or the Sabbath are the Twentieth Canon of the First Council, and the Eighth Canon of the Seventh Council, both of which I will give in full.

THE TWENTIETH CANON OF THE FIRST COUNCIL OF NICEA (FIRST ECUMENICAL): A.D. 325.

"Whereas there are some who kneel on the Lord's day and on the days of the Pentecost: in order that all things should be observed in every parish, it has seemed right to the holy Synod that they should offer their prayers to God standing."

THE EIGHTH CANON OF THE SECOND COUNCIL OF NICEA (LAST ECUMENICAL): A.D. 783.

"Whereas some deceived persons, coming from the religion of the Hebrews, have appeared to deride Christ our God, feigning to become Christians, but denying him in secret, and secretly observing the Sabbath and doing other Judaic actions; we define that these be received neither to communion, nor to prayer, nor to the Church; but be, according to their own religion, Hebrews openly, and neither baptize their children, nor buy or possess a bondman. But if any of them should convert himself through sincere faith, and make confession from his whole heart, triumphing over their customs and practices for the confutation and correction of others, let that one be received and have his children baptized, and give assurance that he will separate himself from Hebrew pursuits. And if they be not so disposed, let them by no means be received."

For the full understanding of this last Canon it is necessary to observe that the imperial laws had forbidden Jews from owning Christian slaves.

Your readers have now in their hands the whole of the legislation of the Universal Christian Church on the Sabbath and on the Sunday questions, and I leave them judges whether it is fair to make the Bible or the Church responsible for such a gross superstition as the Protestant Sabbath.

I remain, dear sir, truly yours,
JULIUS FERRETTE.

CAMBRIDGE, Jan. 8, 1876.

THE ENGLISH PAPERS give interesting summaries of the lecture delivered by Dr. Moffatt, in Westminster Abbey, upon the day of prayer for missions. Dr. Moffatt said, in the course of the lecture, that "when he arrived in the Bechuana country, early in the present century, he found the people sunk in the densest ignorance. Unlike most heathen tribes, they had no idea of a God, and no notion of a hereafter. There was not an idol to be found in all their province, and one which the lecturer's daughter once showed to an intelligent leader of the people excited his liveliest astonishment. He was, indeed, so hopelessly removed from a state of civilization that he ridiculed the notion of any one worshipping a thing he had made with his own hands."

Sanctuary of Superstition.

THE GOLDEN VIALS.—"Cold prayers won't do. It is only fervent, agonizing prayers that go up into the golden vials, from which the blessing is to be poured out. We cannot hope for a revival here unless Christians are in an agony. The golden vials are not yet ready!"—A. B. Earle, 1868.

HELL.—"I have been talking to you about heaven; now to-night I am going to say a few words about hell. A good many people say that they don't believe these ministers who preach about hell. But this is Jesus Christ himself who is talking in these verses. I don't want any one to say that I preached for three weeks in Philadelphia without saying anything about hell."—Dwight L. Moody, the Revivalist.

THE HEART OF ST. JOSEPH CALASANCTIUS.—His tongue and heart, which were found after nearly a century to be whole, when the body was disinterred before his canonization, are still preserved in a glass case, and after two centuries the heart is still whole. When the French troops came to Rome, and when Pius VII. was carried away prisoner, blood dropped from it.—Written in a book published in New York in 1858, by Rev. William H. Nelligan, LL.D., M.A., Trinity College, Dublin, Member of the Archaeological Society of Great Britain: (quoted by Mark Twain in "Innocents Abroad").

SALVATION BY SUBSTITUTE.—"How then can I hope to be saved?"

"Your hope must be in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus. Salvation is of pure grace. No mortal deserves it."

"But God is a holy and righteous judge, and he is angry with sin."

"Yes, but he loves the sinner, and in order that the sinner might be saved, he has sent his only-begotten Son into the world to die—'The Just for the unjust.' God has judged, condemned, and punished sin in the person of our Substitute, so that he can now, in his infinite goodness, freely pardon and receive us."—"A Plain Question." Am. Tract Society.

FIRE!—"All these flames in Brooklyn, in Chicago, and in Boston are only prefigurations of the great day of fire which you and I will see as sure as you sit there and I sit here. Before it beasts will dash from the rocks in a wild leap. Coming over the precipices it will be a Niagara of fire. The continents of earth will wrap themselves in a winding sheet of flame, and the mountains will cry to the plain, 'Fire!' and the plain will cry to the sea, 'Fire!' and the sea will cry to the sky, 'Fire!' and heaven will answer back to earth; the caverns will groan it and the winds will shriek it, the thunders will toll it and the storms will wail it, and the nations will cry it—'Fire! Fire!'"—Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, of Brooklyn, N. Y., after the burning of his Tabernacle.

PAID WITH BLOOD.—"Look you, John," continued Mr. Chambers, "if you get a bill as long as from this to the turnpike, two long miles, with thousands of items amounting to thousands of pounds, and you owe it all, what will become of you?"

"I must be a ruined man."

"And if your creditor puts his name, and marks 'PAID' at the bottom of the bill, after all, what will that do for you, John?"

"Then I'm saved."

"That's what God does. He writes 'paid' with the red blood of Christ at the foot of all you have been counting up, and a great deal more besides; and if the list of your iniquities reached up to heaven and down to hell, you can be saved through Christ 'after all.'"—"After All." Am. Tract Society.

THE ATONEMENT.—We will open the glorious well of the atonement. It is nearly filled up with the chips and debris of old philosophies that were worn out in the time of Confucius and Zeno, but which smart men in our day unwrap from their mummy-bandages, and try to make us believe are original with themselves. I plunge the shovel to the very bottom of the well, and I find the clear water starting. Glorious well of the atonement! Perhaps there are people here who do not know what "atonement" means. It is so long since you have heard the definition. The word itself, if you give it a peculiar pronunciation, will show you the meaning,—at-one-ment. Man is a sinner and deserves to die. Jesus comes in and bears his punishments and weeps his griefs. I was lost once, but now I am found. I deserved to die, but Jesus took the lances into his own heart until he had strength only to say, "It is finished." The boat swung round into the trough of the sea, and would have been swamped, but Jesus took hold of the oar. I was set in the battle, and must have been cut to pieces had not, at nightfall, he who rideth on the white horse come into the fray. The law tried me for high treason against God, and found me guilty. The angels of God were the jurors empanelled in the case, and they found me guilty. I was asked what I had to say why sentence of eternal death should not be pronounced upon me, and I had nothing to say. I stood on the scaffold of God's justice; the black cap of eternal death was about to be drawn over my eyes, when from the hill of Calvary One came. He dashed through the ranks of earth, and heaven, and hell. He rode swiftly. His garments were dyed with blood, his face was bleeding, his feet were dabbled with gore, and he cried out, "Save that man from going down to the pit. I am the ransom." And he threw back the coat from his heart, and that heart burst into a crimson fountain, and he dropped dead at my feet.—Talmage.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "
" 26 " 51 "	6 "
" 52 " " "	5 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.
Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston

PUBLICATIONS

FREE

RELIGIOUS
ASSOCIATION.

Report of the Addresses and other Proceedings of the Original Meeting in 1867, at which the Free Religious Association was Organized. Containing addresses by O. B. Frothingham, Henry Blanchard, Lucretia Mott, Robert Dale Owen, John Weiss, Oliver Johnson, F. E. Abbot, D. A. Wasson, T. W. Higginson, and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

(This pamphlet has not been on sale for a number of years, and many persons who have all of the Annual Reports succeeding do not possess this.) Price 50 cents.

Proceedings of Second Annual Meeting, 1869. 50 cents. Contains essays by Julia Ward Howe on "Freedom and Restraint in Religion," and by David A. Wasson on "The Relation of Social Science to Religion," and speeches by O. B. Frothingham, Jesse H. Jones, F. E. Abbot, Wm. Denton, R. W. Emerson, Mary Grew, C. A. Bartol, A. M. Powell, H. B. Blackwell, Rowland Connor, Lucy Stone, Horace Seaver, and others; with an appendix on "Outlines of Judaism" by Rabbi Wise.

Proceedings of Third Annual Meeting, 1870. 50 cents. Contains essays by O. B. Frothingham on the "Ideas of the Free Religious Association," followed by addresses by D. A. Wasson on "The Nature of Religion," by Mrs. E. D. Cheney on "Religion as a Social Force, especially in relation to Philanthropy and Reform," and by F. E. Abbot on "The Future of Religious Organization, as affected by the Spirit of the Age;" an essay by Samuel Johnson on "The Natural Sympathy of Religions," followed by Rabbi Wise on "The Permanent and Progressive Elements of Judaism," by T. W. Higginson on "Mohammedanism," by Wm. H. Channing on "The Religions of China," and Wm. J. Potter on "Religion Old and New in India;" also abstract of a discussion on "The Bible in the Public Schools," by Thos. Vickers, S. R. Calthrop, Rabbi Wise, and others.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. B. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Resh Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shaw-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS. 1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. O. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	2.25
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	30
CARPENTER (DR. W. E.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	3.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	1.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....
Scenes from the Mill on the Floss.....
Felix Holt.....
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life.....
The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems With.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEBERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	30
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.50
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMBERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	1.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	7.00
Twice-Told Tales.....
Mosses from an Old Manse.....
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....
The Marble Faun.....
The English Note-Books.....
The American Note-Books.....
The French and Italian Note-Books.....
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	4.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bite of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountain of the Unseen.....	2.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	80
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Haezhot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treatise of the Physical and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Time.....	2.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	1.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	75
LUBBOCK (BIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	1.50
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	6.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkos from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Deism, and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdeemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHELLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With illustrations.....	50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	35
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 4 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Room Talks. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....
The Newcomes.....
Adventures of Philip.....
Pendennis.....
The Virginians.....
Esmond, and Lovel the Widower.....
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoshals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.50
The Maine Woods.....	1.50
Cape Cod.....	1.50
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.00
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Essent Heat.....	4.00
Forms of Water.....	1.00
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols. III, IV, and VI, each.....	2.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Bauntings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (B. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	2.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I.
METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom. Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homelike.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3 50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6 50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

SPECIFIC PAYMENTS

BETTER THAN

Specie Payments.

THE MONEY QUESTION divested of Verbiage and Technicalities.

By EDWARD D. LINTON.

PRICE 25 cents.

For sale at the office of THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

B O O K

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

1 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. . . . The story is told in a very graphic style. . . . Mr. Holyoake . . . is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN
HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247.
Send for Circular.

WANTED.—A SITUATION

By an Engineer of long experience with Marine and Stationary Engines, who can furnish good reference.

Address GEORGE RUSSELL, care of C. H. Phillips (Jordan, Marsh & Co.), Washington Street, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at anything else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,
and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

SCOTTISH WESTERN LOAN CO.

G. L. HENDERSON & CO.,

BANKERS, LeRoy, Minn.,

—AND—

GENERAL SUPPLY AGENCY
235 BROADWAY, N.Y.

Money invested for Capitalists in First Mortgages on Improved Farms in Minnesota and Iowa, running 3 to 5 years. Notes with coupons bearing 9 per cent. interest annually, or 10 per cent. semi-annually, in advance. Interest collected and paid at Gilman, Son & Co.'s Bank, 47 Exchange Place, New York. No expense to lender. Title and security guaranteed in every loan made by us. We pay 9 per cent. till money is invested. The agency will purchase and forward goods in any quantity to any part of the United States, and transact any business whatever for parties living at a distance.

On receipt of stamp, will send our Circular with Price Lists, or samples of dry goods. 20 to 50 per cent. saved to the consumer. State where you read this.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets to Course, One Dollar.

Jan. 2. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The Soul of Transcendentalism."

Jan. 9. M. D. CONWAY.

"The Natural History of the Devil."

Jan. 16. J. W. CHADWICK.

"Thomas Paine."

Jan. 23. D. A. WASSON.

"Radical Formalism."

Jan. 30. T. W. HIGGINSON.

"The Meeting of Extremes."

Feb. 6. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"Modern Scientific Materialism: its Meaning and Tendency."

Feb. 13. BISHOP MOQUAID.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Catholic American Citizen."

Feb. 20. F. E. ABBOT.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."

Feb. 27. Prof. FELIX ADLER.

"The Old Testament in the Light of Modern Criticism."

Mar. 5. Mrs. E. D. CHENEY.

"The Religious Life of Michael Angelo."

HISTORY OF THE CONFLICT BETWEEN

Religion and Science,

By JOHN WILLIAM DRAPER. For sale at this office. Price—One dollar and seventy-five cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to F. E. ABBOT.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Readers of THE INDEX who desire to purchase English, German, or French Books, or who wish for information as to the price, &c., of any American or Foreign Book, can have their orders promptly filled and their inquiries answered by addressing

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Landaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by

THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... 35

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE NEW RADICAL BOOK!

FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP

IN RELIGION.

A Collection of Essays and Addresses, Edited by a Committee of

The Free Religious Association.

With an Introductory Paper on "The Religious Outlook," by O. B. FROTHINGHAM, and a supplementary collection of short extracts by many speakers and writers, under the caption, Voices from the Free Platform."

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUT-

LOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David

A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF

THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel

Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel

Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John

Wells.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS.

By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND

FREE RELIGION. By Francis El-lingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O.

B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMER-

ICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By

Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ed-

nah D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM.

By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O.

B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom,

Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S.

Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E.

Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe,

C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C.

Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Wells,

Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H.

Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50.

Sent post-paid by

THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1876.

WHOLE No. 320.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
- Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

A NEW Liberal League was organized at Coopersville, Michigan, on Jan. 29. Mr. George A. Farr was elected President, and Mr. H. Potts (editor of the Coopersville Courier) was elected Secretary.

MR. MORSE's bust of Thomas Paine was on the platform at Horticultural Hall when Mr. Chadwick gave his lecture on Paine; but by inadvertence attention was not called to it. It can yet be seen at Mr. Morse's studio, 25 Bromfield Street. He will send a copy in plaster to the Centennial Exhibition next summer.

It is a good sign to see that some of the leading Methodist journals, such as Zion's Herald, the New York Christian Advocate and its Pittsburgh namesake, speak out boldly for strictly secular schools. This fact increases the reasonableness of supposing that the President, himself a Methodist, meant in his Message to take the same ground.

A PROVIDENCE despatch dated Feb. 1 says: "The House of Representatives this afternoon passed, without division, a bill providing that land occupied or owned by churches, schools, colleges, and charitable institutions shall no longer be exempt from taxation. Buildings actually used for religious, educational or charitable purposes are still exempt. Buildings owned by incorporated libraries and free public libraries are exempted by the bill."

THE BOSTON Commonwealth has the following notice of Mr. S. H. Morse's new bust: "S. H. Morse has in his studio, room 13, 25 Bromfield street, a life-size marble bust of Theodore Parker, modelled from existing portraits, representing him without a beard. The likeness, in feature and expression, is regarded as excellent. This bust has been purchased by gentlemen who propose to give it to the town of Lexington, Parker's birthplace, where it will be placed in an appropriate position in the town library. It is by far the best of all the busts made of the great preacher."

THE "Religious Freedom Amendment," at the suggestion of an earnest friend of that measure, has been printed on half-sheets, for the use of all who are willing to interest themselves in getting it fairly before the people. Space is left below the Amendment for writing; and those who are willing to do a little unselfish work for their country at this crisis can use these half-sheets very effectively by sending them to the editors of daily papers, with a written request to publish the Amendment as a matter of common interest. Copies of this printed Amendment will be sent cheerfully to any address on application at this office.

THOSE WHO wish to see the Centennial Exposition opened on Sundays may perhaps contribute to this result by writing personally to Mr. A. T. Goshorn, Director General of the United States Centennial Commission, 903 Walnut Street, Philadelphia. This excellent suggestion is made by a subscriber to whom we are indebted for many clippings of interest from the New York papers, and for various acts of disinterested assistance in carrying on our public work. The Exposition ought to be open on Sundays for the accommodation of thousands of citizens who will find that day most convenient for visiting it; and there is no valid reason for closing it, especially if the Centennial Bill passes and the whole country is thereby taxed $1,500,000 for the support of the exhibition.

WE ARE ALWAYS glad to correct any error into which we have inadvertently fallen—a species of disaster impossible to be avoided by an editor, who must frequently rely on statements in other journals which he cannot verify. A subscriber in Yorkshire, England, thus corrects an error of this sort: "I much regret to see that you say Lord Fitzwilliam refused to reopen his pit at Low Stubbin, saying he was rich enough to do without it. I do not know the earl at all, but I know that his refusal to reopen the pit arose from his having such enormous sums in the pit, and, in consequence of strikes, his capital having been simply wasted. The last strike was on account of his insisting on the men observing regulations with their lamps which were necessary for safety. The men struck sooner than comply. Now that they see their folly, they want him to spend more money in opening the pit again. But with a very large family besides his heir, I do not suppose the earl can afford to waste such large sums, with no guarantee for the proper use of the capital, and wilful caprice on the part of the men likely at any time to make him a loser. He has suffered enough already, the pit having been closed two or three times before."

A DESPATCH from Washington to the New York Tribune, dated January 30, says: "A secret organization has recently been started, and has already a membership of fifteen thousand. It is called the Free School Guard. Its headquarters are in Washington. The rules for government are similar to those of the Patrons of Husbandry. Its objects are as follows: The Union and the Constitution. 'Liberty and Union forever.' The preservation of our public institutions. Free schools, free speech, and a free press. Public schools to be free from sectarian influence and control. No sectarian school to receive State or National aid. The State or National government to provide for the education of every capable child. Education shall be compulsory. No education—no franchise. One term of six years for the President of the United States. Loyalty to the government. Church property to be taxed. The President of the United States to be elected by a direct vote of the people. The declaration of principles is political, but not partisan. Its motto is 'Intelligence, freedom, and union,' and its watchword, 'Preach a crusade against ignorance.' We are sorry to see secret organizations formed for any object. What is right and true never needs secrecy to advance its cause, but rather publicity. Sensible minds will always suspect and distrust any movement, however fair its professions, which has to work in the dark. But such secret organizations as the Free School Guard, the Order of the American Union, and so forth, are the direct result of the neglect of educated Americans to form an organization which shall work openly and above board for substantially the same ends."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Cinto, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, N.E.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Masley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BENDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. K. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 LAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBOO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLARKFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Fotts, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

Almost a Minister's Wife.

BY "EX."

Charlie Allen was, by all odds, the smartest preacher we had in Clinton that summer, when Parson Clarke was sick, and the most of a man every way. We girls all said he was the handsomest and pleasantest young man in the town,—at least all of us said so who were not engaged already.

The old people, too, liked his sermons, and Dr. Brown's little wife spoke the general feeling of the parish pretty well when she said, "Oh, I do so wish Parson Clarke would get better or worse right away! You know, if he should get well enough to preach again, it would be such a mercy to us; and if he should die or have to resign, why, we could get Mr. Allen."

He was a third or fourth cousin of mother's, and so he stopped with us most of the time, and father was very fond of walking about the farm with him. Indeed, father said to mother once, "There's a first-rate farmer spoilt in that young chap. It's a real pity."

Then when mother and I were sewing, he would read us such books as opened a new world to me. I had never read any poetry but Scott and Campbell, and those I had got thoroughly tired of; but now, when I heard him read Tennyson, Mrs. Browning, and Longfellow, so many new thoughts and feelings came to me, that I felt, as I went through the old round of work again, as if I were a different person from what I had been. He read us Ruskin, too, and showed me new beauties in the leaves and the clouds, whenever we walked out together.

He used to talk to me, too, about the good he meant to do when he was a minister; how he wanted to teach his people to read better books and have better amusements. Then he was going to bring all the poor neglected children into his Sunday-school, and have an evening school for young men and women who had never had any teaching. He was going to start a lodge of Good Templars, too, and have it do real work for drunken people, and not be merely a place to have a good time in.

The girls used to tease me about him, but I did not think he cared for me, till one afternoon, when I came in from berrying, and just as I put my hand on the door-latch, I heard father say, "No, Allen, Katie shan't be a minister's wife. It's no use talking about it. I like you well enough, and, if you were anything but a minister, I should say right off, 'What suits her suits me.' But I won't have Katie run up and down, week in and week out, about everybody's business all over town, as Parson Clarke's wife has to. It's well enough to have to honor and obey you; but to have to honor and obey all the people in town is altogether too much."

I know I should not have listened, but I could not go away. Then Charlie Allen said, "But, Mr. Whipple, is it the worst thing we can do to work for other people? Don't you feel happy yourself when you're doing it?"

"Well, yes; but I shouldn't like to make a trade of it. And then the work isn't half so bad as the fault-finding. Why, Mrs. Clarke never buys a dress that somebody don't find fault with. Isn't it so, mother?"

"Yes," said mother; "but then Mrs. Clarke hasn't half so good taste as Katie has. Why, that last dress of hers, that she wears to meeting, is an awful sight too gay for her, especially with her husband so sick. And the one before it! Let me think—was it that black gingham that made her look as old as the hills, or that brown calico with the ugly pattern I couldn't take my eyes off of?"

"You hear," said father; "do you want a hundred women or so talking about Katie like that?"

"Still, compared with the good a minister's wife can do, that's a little thing, after all."

"I don't feel so sure of the good as I do of the hard time. Now just think what it'll be for a girl who has had a good home all her life, to have to keep moving about from one town to another every year or two, sometimes boarding with all sorts of people, and sometimes cooped up in a little pigeon-box of a hired house, and never daring to feel at home anywhere, because you can't tell how soon you may have to pull up stakes again."

"It is a hard life, I know; but I've thought it my duty to take it, and, if Katie is willing to bear her share of it, is it quite right for you to stand in our way?"

"That's so, father. Katie is old enough to speak for herself, and I think she'd be happier with him than any body else."

"May be. But then there's one thing more. I've heard Parson Clarke, and other preachers, too, say it's more than any man can do to bring up a family on his salary, unless he has something besides. You've nothing, as you told me. Well, I don't think any the less of you for it—only the more of you for telling me. But the worst of it is, I haven't much myself either, besides the old farm, and I can't sell that. You see I've been all my life here. I'm getting too old to work it much longer, but I don't want to have to leave it. I'd like right well to have you, or any other good man Katie likes, take it and live here with us; but I can't well give it up, no, nor her either."

"I only want her, not the farm. We shall have a hard time; but I think we can bear it."

"But what says the Good Book? 'If any man provide not for his own, and especially for those that be of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel.' Are you sure you can provide for Katie?"

"Yes, I am. The Good Book says, 'The laborer is worthy of his hire.'"

"He don't always get what he's worthy of in your business. You can't deny that. But it's no use talking. This is a difficult job, and we mustn't be hasty. You did like a man in speaking to us instead of her. Now just go on and do the same way. You can come here and see her just as often as you like, but there mustn't be any courting, or writing, or anything of that kind."

"I give you my word of honor—"

"Yes—yes. I know you're just as good as you say, or you shouldn't have stopped so long here. Go on and get your parish, and try how you like it a year or two. Mind, I don't promise anything. I don't say you shall ever have Katie any way, and I don't say you shan't. And meantime, if you come across a girl that's richer and prettier—"

"Now, father."

"And that you like better—"

"I never shall."

"Well—if you do, why it'll be all right with us. That's all. There, let's say no more about it. And, mother, don't worry Katie about it. Come out with me and see if you can tell what's the matter with the old Chester White. There's something wrong with her."

I made out to run round the house to the other door, set my berry-tin on the kitchen-table, hung up my sun-bonnet, crept up stairs, and lay down on the bed, where I had a good hard cry. By-and-by mother came up and kissed me, and said:—

"Don't cry, Katie. Father means right. Only be patient. It'll all come out right at last. I'm sure he likes you, and that's the main thing. Now just lie still till I call you to supper. You'd better come down then, if you can. I guess he won't stay much longer."

This made me feel enough better to come down to supper. And sure enough he said he must go back to the seminary the next morning, and let somebody else take his turn here. He gave me some real good advice about my reading that evening, and would have lent me lots of books, but I knew father would not let me take them. So I wrote down the names, and father bought them that fall. He did not say a word of love to me, but I heard it in every word he said, and wondered I had never heard it before.

And so he went away, and it was dull enough on the old farm. At last he sent father a paper with a notice of his having had a call in Jackson, and Parson Clarke told us it was a very good parish, with some of the richest people in the city in it, a large salary, and a splendid new meeting-house. Oh, how I wished I could see him ordained, or hear him preach again! Father went down to Jackson that fall, about some business, he said, though we could not guess what. When he came back, he said: "Well, he's working like a horse, and they think a sight of him. I guess I must make Parson Clarke change work with him."

Mother caught at the idea, and Mrs. Brown heard of it, and gave the poor old man no peace until the exchange was agreed upon.

He stopped at Parson Clarke's this time, came late Saturday night, and said he must go back early Monday morning, but would come to supper with us.

He preached that morning on Philippians iii, 13: "Forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before." Such a sermon! It made me feel ashamed of all my past life, and determined to be a different girl ever after. I knew now what it was to be a Christian, and all my soul was roused up to be one. I thought everybody must feel just as I did, and, when he came down from the pulpit and walked away with Mrs. Clarke, and we all sat down together to spend the nooning, I thought nobody would speak of anything but how good the sermon was, and how much it had taught them.

But the old people began to talk about how bad the roads were, and how poorly potatoes and apples were keeping, and how much sickness there was, just as usual. Pretty soon Mrs. Brown, who never will come home at noon, much as her husband wants to, broke in with:—

"Oh, how can you talk about such things after hearing such a beautiful sermon? Why, it was just as good as going to the theatre in Boston. Wasn't it, doctor?"

"It was, my dear, a remarkably fine specimen of pulpit eloquence, especially the closing exordium," replied the doctor. "His voice has deepened and mellowed, too, and I think his gestures have a more graceful flow than when he last occupied our desk. Is not that your opinion, Deacon Spaulding?"

"Well, it was a pretty smart sermon," said the deacon. "I guess we ought to be well enough satisfied with it."

"Oh, if I could only hear him preach all the time!" said Susie Smith. "He's so handsome."

"He certainly does look well," said Moulton, the store-keeper, who always agrees with Susie. "His coat and pants are real heavy beaver, and that great-coat of his must have cost him fifty dollars, at least."

"Now I call that sinful extravagance," said old Squire Skinner, the one they call Skinfint Skinner. "It's wrong for the brethren in Jackson to allow it."

"Oh, well," said Moulton, "they like to see their minister well-dressed, and make him lots of presents. I think I heard that great-coat was a wedding-fee, when I was in Jackson last week."

"I had rather buy my own clothes, as our minister does," said Deacon Rogers. "I don't like this fancy dressing, no, nor this fancy preaching, neither. Why, there was hardly a word about any of the good old gospel doctrines in either his sermon or his prayers. Can't stand such preaching no ways."

"Why, deacon," says father, "he did say a good deal about one of the best of all the gospel doctrines, and he said it pretty well, too."

"Which one? You don't mean endless misery, for he didn't say a word about that any more than if he'd been a Universalist, and he didn't say anything to amount to anything about the Atonement, neither."

"Perhaps not; but he spoke right strong for 'doing to others as you would have them do to you,' and there's nothing better than the Golden Rule in the gospel, I take it."

"Oh, well, that's well enough for mere morality; but a minister ought to preach religion. Ain't that so, Brother Spaulding?"

"Yes, I know that," said good old Deacon Spaulding. "Perhaps he'll give us something better this afternoon. I suppose we must take what we can get, in this world any way. Sold all your cider yet, Brother Rogers?"

And so they went on until the nooning was over, and the second service began.

He preached that afternoon about the next verse to his text in the morning: "I press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

I did not like his sermon so well this time, for I felt that the people were only thinking of his clothes and his gestures. A good deal of what he said, too, had too much theology in it for me to understand. I looked round at the deacons to see whether they agreed with it, but they were both sound asleep. Towards the end of his sermon, however, he drew such a grand picture of "Our One Great Pattern" that I forgot everything else in listening to him.

When he came back with us that night, he told us that his people did everything they could think of for him; that there was more work in Jackson than ten ministers could do. Father questioned him very closely about the success of his plans for poor people, and he owned that he found it hard to get such teachers as he wanted for his evening school, and that his poor children were not so welcome in his Sabbath-school as he thought they ought to be. Still he hoped that in time the people would see the importance of such work better. The lodge of Good Templars was doing more than he had ever hoped. A number of drunkards had been reformed, and some of them would, he hoped, join his church. His congregations, too, were as large as he could wish, he said, and he thought he had some influence over them for good. All this he told us very modestly in reply to our questions. He told me, too, what new books he had read, and what father had better get me, as we all sat around the stove together that cold spring evening. We had no chance to see each other alone, and I felt it was best. On the whole it was a very pleasant visit, but I felt rather provoked at father for not telling us what he thought of his sermons and of his prospects in Jackson.

When Parson Clarke came next to our place, he said: "That young man has got an excellent opportunity; but I am afraid he'll throw it all away. If he only would preach more on popular subjects, and go round more among his own people, and let those beggars and drunkards take care of themselves, he might fill every pew in that great church, and have all the salary he wants."

"Well, I suppose some one has to look after poor people," said father.

"Oh, yes," said the parson; "there is a minister-at-large in Jackson, a very worthy man of long experience in the ministry. He complains that Brother Allen is getting some of his best hearers away. A minister ought to stick to his own parish."

"Just as the apostles did," said father.

"Now those reformed drunkards would be a great deal better off in Father Blanchard's church than in Brother Allen's. I don't wonder his people don't like to take men fresh from the gutter into communion with them."

"Well, I don't know anything about the Church, nor what it is for," said father.

"I wish you did, Brother Whipple. You and I must have a talk together in private about that some time. Then that fire-scape of Brother Allen's will hurt him."

"What was that?" I asked.

"Why, he insists on boarding in the meanest part of Jackson, away from all his own people, and a fire broke out there one evening in a row of Irish tenement-houses, and he ran right out of his room in his dressing-gown and slippers, just as he was, and raced down to the fire, as if he had been a little boy. And there he worked half the night getting out those miserable creatures and their old, filthy duds. Why, he was so knocked up that he couldn't preach the next Sunday, and had to get a divinity student to supply for him. He spoils his clothes, too, and came back to his lodgings all covered with mud from head to foot, looking, they said, worse than any Irish laborer. And then the papers said a great deal about it, and made reflections on the other ministers, who had something better to do than making firemen of themselves. But the worst of it was that a rich infidel heard of it, and insisted on giving him a new suit of very extravagant clothes in place of that he ruined, and he took it and preaches in it. And then that dressing-gown! You see it wasn't clerical at all."

"Too much like the Good Samaritan," said father; but Parson Clarke changed the subject, and soon took his leave.

Month after month passed, and we heard nothing more. I hoped he might come to Clinton in his summer vacation; but a chance item in the Gospel Envooy, which father had just begun taking, said that the society had voted to keep the church open all summer, and I knew what that meant. The Envooy spoke often that fall of his being at different conventions and councils, and quoted good things that he said. Oh, how I missed the paper when our railroad was blocked up by the great snow-storm that December! At last father brought it up, and, as soon as I opened it, I saw at the head of the "Religious Intelligence":—

"Rev. Charles Allen has resigned the charge of the First Church, in Jackson."

This, and nothing more.

We could not imagine why he left. Father asked Parson Clarke, but he could only say that he supposed Brother Allen was tired of writing so much, and wanted to go where he could use his old sermons, or else he had got into some sort of quarrel. Pretty soon Susele came back from her wedding-trip as Mrs. Moulton, and spread all over town the story that he had resigned his parish because he was engaged to the richest young lady in it,—Miss Burton. Parson Clarke thought this very likely, but mother and I could not believe it. I had a very dull time that winter, though, and a cold I caught hung on week after week, as no cold of mine ever did before. At last Moulton's new partner, Harria, came up from Jackson, and said that after all it was the minister of the Second Church who was to marry Miss Burton; but why Mr. Allen went away he did not know, unless he wanted more salary. I felt more puzzled than ever, but winter broke up at last, and so did my cold. I heard nothing about him, and supposed he was still looking for another parish. At last I saw he was going to be a minister-at-large, and hoped it was to take such a place that he had left his wealthy society. I felt sure he would be happy, and tried not to think much about him. The Envooy had very little to say about him now, or Parson Clarke either. Another year passed by in this way, but I was getting more patient than I used to be.

Early the next spring, father had to go down to New York as witness in a lawsuit, and I hoped we might have some news when he came back. He stayed so long that mother was troubled enough about him, and we sat up together, night after night, long after the cars had gone by, waiting for him. At last, late one stormy evening, we heard the tavern-stage come rattling along our road and stop at our gate. What could it mean? Father always used to walk. Had anything happened? We rushed out in the rain, but as soon as father saw the door open he shouted, "Here I am, all right! Keep in-doors. I've company with me, that's all." And by his side was a figure I knew, though the gait was slower than it used to be.

"There, I've brought you home a sick man to nurse up. Get his old room ready, and we'll make ourselves at home by the fire here. There, there, Charlie, you're too tired to talk to-night. Just sit down here and rest. I'll tell them all about it."

Charlie Allen it was, sure enough, but very pale and thin, and dressed much plainer than father.

Father would not let him say a word, but got him into bed just as soon as he could. Then he sat down by the stove, and laughed until the tears came into his eyes, and indeed into mine, too.

"Now I do think that's a shame," said mother; "with that poor young man ready to die, to go on in that way."

"Die!" shouted father; "not he. He'll be all right enough in a day or two. He's just worn out and run down. That's all."

"Has he resigned again, father?" asked I.

"No. He's done better than that. He's just given up the whole beggarly business. He's done his part of it—more than any man ought to do, either."

"What do you mean, father?" asked mother. "He hasn't left the ministry, has he?"

"Well, I take it the ministry left him,—up pretty high and dry, too. You see I wasn't so far wrong about Katie. He told me I'd done just the right thing about it, and I knew so all along."

"But he is so sick," said mother.

"Don't worry. We've had a hard day's ride of it, and I guess I'd better just turn in myself."

"Oh, father!" said I.

"Well, I may as well tell you to-night as any time, only I hardly know where to begin."

"Why did he leave Jackson?"

"Well, it wasn't Miss Burton to begin with, and it wasn't the salary, nor the old sermons, either."

"I knew that, but was there a quarrel?"

"Yes. The old parson just hit it. There was a quarrel, and a mighty mean one, too. You see all those people wanted was to have their pews all let to fancy-looking people. So when he brought poor people in, they just gave them the cold shoulder until they went away again. Then those drunkards he got into the church—"

"Why, they took them in, of course, father?"

"Yes, they couldn't help doing that, but they were mighty unwilling to, and there was nobody that would sit next them at the communion, or speak a good word to them in the church or out of it. Why, some of them would have clubbed together and hired a pew, but they couldn't find a decent one. So they got to staying away from church, and no wonder. Some of them went over to the Universalists, and I don't blame them for going where the best Christians were,—no, nor he didn't, either. One or two got back into the old way again, and he was mad enough about it. He told his folks that if the rich members weren't a-going to act brotherly and sisterly-like towards the poor ones, the church was just good for nothing at all. And I may as well tell you, mother, that's why I never joined it, and never will. Human nature's pretty much the same everywhere."

"Oh, father, don't now."

"Well, to go back to Jackson. It was the same way about everything. It was mighty hard to get teachers for his night-school, or the poor Sabbath-school classes, as they called them. And the poor children never got fairly taken care of. But what brought things to a point was that he had to move the night-school, and he could not hire another room for it any where, not even of his own deacons. They all said that the floor'd get dirty, and the building be set on fire, and all that. So he tried to get the basement of his own church for it, and he asked the trustees, but they hemmed and hawed and kept putting him off, till at last one of them told him that if he'd make a written request for it he'd have to have it; but they'd a great deal rather he wouldn't ask it, for the church built the vestry, as they call it, for themselves, and didn't want it littered up by outsiders. And then Allen tried to find out how the others thought about it, and he found they almost all thought he was doing too much for the poor people. They didn't find any fault about what he was doing for themselves, only they didn't like to have him do any thing for any body else."

"I hope it wasn't quite so bad as that."

"Well, he made up his mind he'd find out. So he wrote them that he was willing to stay with them, and do the best he could for them, but he couldn't do that, unless they'd help him work for the poor people, too, for a living church must be a working one; and if they didn't agree with him about that, they'd better let him go. They tried hard to make him see it their way, but he couldn't do it. So at last he left, and went up and down candidating, as he calls it."

"What's that?"

"Trying to hire out somewhere's else. He says there's so many wanting a place that it's a regular scramble,—just as bad as politics. And the deacons were all shy of him, because he'd taken the bit in his teeth once, and he might do it again. All the old parsons told him it wouldn't do for a minister to try to be independent, or to work for anybody but his own folks. And what he knew were his best sermons were the very ones that took the poorest. He was nearly ready to give the whole thing up last spring when he got this place of minister-at-large. It was precious poor pay, not much more to be made after paying his board than Ned earned here last summer, and you see how he's worn himself out at it."

"But why did he give it up?"

"Oh, he didn't. They gave up him. They turned him off much as old Skindint Skinner did Ned's brother last fall, when he'd worried and starved all the strength out of him."

"Why, father, how you do talk!"

"It's the fact, though. You see he found the people he preached to couldn't understand his theology, so he went to work and told them, as plain and strong as he could, not to cheat, or tell lies, or get drunk, or throw their money away, or quarrel together; but just be neat and good-natured and steady."

"That must have done them good."

"He says he thinks it did, though some of them cared more for the clothes and groceries he gave them than they did for his preaching. Still, he was getting something about their duties into their heads, when the rich people of the other churches, that kept up his, came down on him, just as Deacon Rogers did when he was here last, because he was preaching morality instead of religion. And they insisted on his getting up a revival right away. Their ministers told him that would do a great deal more good than all his schooling and moralizing. Well, he told them he was ready enough to go to work in a revival whenever heaven sent it, but he didn't think home-made revivals were worth much; and so they up and told him that if he wouldn't do as they'd have him, he shouldn't have a cent more of their money. But they couldn't turn him out for that, and he said he'd go on and keep himself, out of some money he'd laid by in Jackson, and so run the machine out of his own pocket."

"How noble!"

"Well, it was. Some of the people went off, though, when he got out of stores for them, but most of them stood by him pretty well. But the first thing he knew, they just sprung a council on him of their own ministers and a lot more, who knew which side their bread was buttered on, and they found him guilty of heresy mighty quick. I forget what they called it, but it was some mighty hard name or other. They all agreed he wasn't sound, and that was as much as to say that he wasn't good for anything at all. You see an unsound minister's worth less than even an unsound horse. I can get a sight of work out of a horse that's a little shaky, by managing him right; but when a minister gets shaky, he's just good for no kind of work at all."

"But when was the council?"

"Why, they're scarcely through with it yet. He fought 'em just as long as he could stand it, but his health broke down at last, and so he sent in his resignation and his letter of fellowship last week, and preached his farewell sermon last Sunday. I heard it. Lord, how they cried!"

"It was a real shame!"

"Just that; but I don't feel free to say what I think, for I wouldn't use hard words before you and Katie. So I had a long talk with him. He hardly knew what to do. He said he couldn't preach any more in our churches, and he'd no heart for trying any of the other ones, and his voice was most gone, too. So I urged him to come back with me and work the old farm for me."

"Did you urge him, father?"

"That I did; and it was because I saw he wanted to bad enough, only he felt ashamed because he said he'd made such a failure. And I told him he'd done first-rate. Then he said he'd no strength and no money; but I told him I had enough for him and us too, and he'd soon get his strength back with us to take care of him. So he gave in, and I've sold all his theology books at second-hand, and his sermons for waste-paper."

"What a pity!"

"Well, I made him pick out some of the best of them for you, Katie. But you and he can settle the rest of it to-morrow."

And we did!

SET THE TUB ON ITS OWN BOTTOM.

One of the speakers at the recent meeting of the Free Religious Association, discussing the question of Church and State, and the need in our country of a more complete divorce of the two, is reported in THE INDEX to have spoken as follows:—

"In this contest we have the Catholic party, the Protestant party, and the Liberal party, including in the latter all who, in any sect or any party, stand faithfully by the secular principle. The Catholics are completely organized, with a recognized head, with an army of priests and bishops to carry on the work. The Protestants are slowly coming together, and organizing for a bold and decided stand. The Liberals are without organization, relying on the purity of their motives, and appealing to reason for support. The Catholics have one purpose to accomplish: it is to gain control of the government, and establish the Pope as the virtual ruler of this nation, politically as well as spiritually. . . . The battle-field is now the schools. The Protestants are at work in their way; they concede that the State must not recognize the CHURCH, but insist that it shall recognize CHRISTIANITY. Protestants and Catholics alike claim to make the State Christian, and education Christian: their principle is the same. But Liberals demand to make the State secular, and education secular. . . . If the Protestant Christian Amendment should prevail, it would carry the nation back to the Middle Ages. This Protestant plan points to Rome, and Rome means a state of affairs of which we of to-day have little conception."

We have italicized the affirmations in the above extract to which we ask particular attention. Are they just and fair? To be more specific, is it true that the Protestants of this country, in regard to public education, stand on "the same principle" with the Catholics, and that they are "slowly coming together and organizing for a bold and decided stand" in favor of the recognition of Christianity as the religion of the State, and to resist the secularization of the schools? Is it true that the proposed religious amendment to the Constitution of the United States is a Protestant amendment in any sense which would involve Protestants, as such, in responsibility for the same? That a small class of Protestants, embracing some men eminent alike for ability and piety, occupy the position and are working for the ends described, we frankly admit; but this fact is far from justifying the broad statements of the speaker above quoted. The association organized to promote the religious amendment of the Constitution is indeed composed of Protestants; and so also is it composed of Americans; but Protestants as such, no more than Americans as such, are responsible for its acts. The Free Religious Association is also composed of Protestants; are the Protestants of the country therefore committed to its principles and objects? We say nay; let the tub of a few Protestant reactionaries, and that also of a few extreme radicals, be set each upon its own bottom. The great mass of Protestants are in no way or manner responsible for either. The small segment of Protestantism represented in the "National Reform Association" has authority to speak only for itself. The movement in which it is engaged is disapproved and discountenanced by the great body of Protestants, among whom the tide of opinion in favor of leaving the Constitution as it is, and of the complete secularization of the schools, is running with irresistible and constantly augmenting force. That the "National Reform Association" is not met by a counter organization among Protestants is owing to the conviction that that association has no more prospect or chance of securing its end than it would have of putting the Pope at the head of the national government. The mass of Protestants are content with the severance of the Church from the State as ordained in the Constitution, and if they are indifferent to the movement for changing that instrument it is because they think any formal or organized opposition thereto is wholly unnecessary.

The speaker above quoted says there are three parties to the controversy; namely, the Catholic party and the Protestant party, the first completely organized, the second "working in their way," and "slowly coming together and organizing for a bold and decided stand" in behalf of "the same principle" maintained by the first; and lastly the "Liberal party," which he makes to "include all who, in any sect or any party, stand faithfully by the secular principle." Now the term "Liberal," as popularly understood, designates a party opposed not merely to a union of Church and State, but to Christianity itself; consequently Christians do not choose to wear it as an appellation. They may be entirely willing to cooperate with "Liberals" and all others on a common platform of opposition to the union of Church and State, but not under a name and a leadership which imply a renunciation of Christianity. The assumption of "Liberals" that they lead the resistance to the scheme of the "National Reform Association," and may properly count as belonging to their party all those who agree with them on this one question, is not over-modest, to say the least. We venture to say that the Evangelical Protestants alone who are ready to fight this battle with religious Bourboisism, so far as there is any need of fighting, are fifty times as numerous as the whole body of so-called "Liberals." The attempt to monopolize the movement in the interest of the "Liberal" opposition to Christianity is alike unfair and mischievous. —Christian Union, Dec. 8, 1875.

THE TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

The most conclusive reply, considered from a merely controversial point of view, that has been made to General Grant's proposal to tax church property, is contained in the letters on the subject written by Tax-Commissioner Andrews, and now appearing in the Times. The President in his message announces the "accumulation of vast amounts of untaxed church property" as an evil that, "if permitted to continue, will probably lead to great trouble in our land before the close of the nineteenth century." He estimates the amount of this untaxed property to have been, in 1850, $83,000,000; declares that in 1860 it had doubled; estimates the present amount at $1,000,000,000, and predicts that by 1900 this property, "without check," will reach a sum "exceeding $3,000,000,000"; and, solemnly assuring us that such accumulations will not be looked upon "acquiescently" by the tax-payers, but may lead to "sequestration through blood," advises the taxation of all property equally, "exempting only the last resting-place of the dead, and possibly, with proper restrictions, church-edifices."

In reply to this gloomy warning, Mr. Andrews shows, first, that New York (and there is no material difference of law on this subject throughout the country) defines "church property," which the President says is growing at such a fearful rate, as simply "every building for public worship"—in other words, the churches and meeting-houses—and "the several lots upon which such buildings are situated," and the "furniture" belonging to them. Secondly, as to his suggestion that the "last resting-place of the dead" be exempted, Mr. Andrews shows that cemeteries, at any rate many of the most important of them, lying near cities which prohibit burials within the municipal limits, are mere stock companies "earning and declaring dividends," and "just as fairly subject to taxation as a bank of discount." In the third place, Mr. Andrews shows very conclusively that the figures given by the President—except those taken from the census for past years—are mere guesswork. Any one who looks at them will see that the President assumes that because the value of church property doubled in ten years between 1850 and 1860, therefore it has done the same and much more ever since. On the same principle it can be shown that the population of any thriving village in the United States will, in a given number of years, equal that of New York. Finally, even admitting the President's wild figures, there would still be no danger of "sequestration through blood," for the simple reason that the whole vast $3,000,000,000 would in 1900 not belong to one privileged church, but would be divided among forty or fifty, none of which could be united against the others in a communistic raid, except on grounds which would prove fatal to its own possessions, while no possible division of forces into the churches on one side and the tax-payers on the other is possible, since it is the tax-payers who compose the churches, and therefore any movement to "sequester through blood" would be a movement of property-owners to destroy their own property for their own benefit.

But though Mr. Andrews thus conclusively disposes of the President's feeble attempt to put forward a church policy, the facts and arguments which he has thus far adduced do not touch the general question of church exemption at all. The main, and indeed only, ground on which the exemption of church property from taxation in modern times can be made to rest is a moral one. Church possessions stand, it is said, on a different footing from all other kinds of property from the fact that they are devoted to higher uses—to uses which it is peculiarly the interest of the State to foster. Differing as they all do from one another in points of creed and dogma, the churches are at one in their general aim of keeping alive and elevating the moral tone of the community, of setting before it lofty standards of purity, of right, and noble examples of self-devotion and sacrifice, and of applying to human action ethical sanctions of a higher order than those of the courts of justice or even of worldly opinion. Churches are, in fact, corporations which perform a very essential, difficult, and praiseworthy office, without pay or reward in this world. So meritorious and necessary has this service seemed to be in other countries that the State has taken the Church under its protection in various ways. In this country, however, it has been left to take care of itself; it gets no State support, or countenance, or honor, and is left to struggle for existence as best it may. In a peculiarly commercial society like our own, this places it at a positive disadvantage. Other "institutions" have for their support the universal desire of mankind to earn a livelihood and to save a competence. Law or medicine will never suffer for want of State support, simply because all people will pay lawyers to save their property from damage, or doctors to save their bodies from disease. The Church, however, has no such motives to appeal to. It does not teach men to be economical, prudent, or thrifty; it teaches generosity, forgiveness, self-sacrifice, and a number of other virtues not at all calculated to help a man in "getting on" in the world. Is it fair to suppose that such an institution as this will pay its way, and are we not bound to do what we can for it by exempting it from the usual burdens of property? In other words, the Church is an institution of the highest possible utility to the State, for its object and practice is to spread abroad voluntarily a love of truth, justice, and right, on which the well-being of the State depends. To foster such a public object as this by a small grant (for this is what an exemption amounts to) seems little enough.

If the modern church were what this argument represents it to be, there might be nothing to say in reply; but as it is, the advocate of the taxation of church property might fairly object. Your picture of the modern church is a fancy sketch. You have brought forward as a description of the existing church a collection of ideal views which bear no resemblance to the reality. The modern church is no doubt, so far as the men who unselfishly devote their lives to it in the pulpit and in missions are concerned, an institution aiming at the noble object you mention; but so far as it consists of a number of associations with the right to take and own property, to sell pews, to buy organs, to hire ministers and organists, to erect costly buildings on expensive corner lots, it resolves itself into corporations of a purely business character, conducted on purely business principles. When we examine the reasons why in any thriving modern community a man owns a pew, or becomes a shareholder in a religious corporation, in nine cases out of ten it turns out to be that he expects to get back, in social consideration and other solid advantages, every cent that he puts into it. On Sundays, indeed, he and his family get returns for the investment a good deal like those which a club-man derives from his club on week-days. His church is to him a sort of Sunday club, out of which the family gets society, social consideration, some good music, and the "privileges of the house." The money which he and his friends put in, if spent in accordance with the principles which are preached from every pulpit every Sunday morning, would go first to the erection of a modest, unostentatious house of worship, which would be put up on a side street and not a "corner lot"; and, second, to bringing within the reach of the poor (i. e., the class especially in need of help and enlightenment) the benefits of religious and moral teaching. Instead of anything of the kind, the money goes first to the purchase of the most expensive lot that can be got for the money at command; second, to the erection of a gorgeous church a little bigger and higher than any put up before; third, to what we may call a band of music, a little more skillful than any other in the neighborhood; and fourth, if possible, to the salary of a minister who will, by striking preaching, attract more money. Every thing, from the corner-stone up, is based on money, and the result is, as we say, a Sunday club, from which those most in need of religious help are rigidly excluded; in other words, the main object of the State subsidy is wholly frustrated. It would only be a little step further if churches were carried on like a railroad or bank, with "puts" and "calls" on the stock sold in Wall Street, and an occasional "gobble" of one church by its wealthy neighbor further "up the avenue." Indeed, as a curious illustration of the effect of this business system on church morality and decency, take the story which has been recently published without contradiction in this city with regard to a well-known church that is practically bankrupt, that the stockholders, feeling that the church was "good" for the first mortgage, but for no more, were going to let the second mortgagees foreclose, so that the church might be "bought in" at the price of the first mortgage. The pastor himself is reported to have said coolly in an "interview" that the second mortgagees will have to be "left out in the cold," or, in other words, that the church will be reorganized, as a broken-down railroad or an insolvent bank might be. That there is a great deal of truth in this cannot be denied, and it all points necessarily to taxation of those branches of the Church to which it applies. So long as the Church was an organization which did a noble and necessary work, which nobody else would or could do, and among those who could not do it for themselves, there was the same (or a greater) reason for exempting it from taxation that there is still for exempting schools and colleges; but in certain quarters, as is the fact, the grant of the subsidy has simply resulted in the abandonment of this work, and the conversion of the Church into a collection of Sunday clubs for wealthy people who manage them with an eye to the main chance, the reason for the grant, or the exemption, is so far gone. It is hardly necessary to say that the church organizations to which this applies are the wealthy churches of the cities. The country churches—or, in other words, the Church at large—stand on a different footing. But the accumulations of property in the shape of churches in the cities are pretty sure to use the name of "church" as a cover to a good many social objects which are not elevated and have a distinct money value. There is still one church, it is true, which does keep up its proper work among the poor and unenlightened, and which is, if any Church is, entitled to exemption on that ground. But, on the other hand, the Catholic Church in this country is, perhaps, in as little need of assistance from the State as any, for it has a firmer hold than any other on the affections, veneration, and superstition of its members. There is no church which is able to obtain more money than it, from both rich and poor. It is, indeed, now building in this city a cathedral far surpassing in expense any edifice for church purposes previously put up in this country. The effect of a tax on city church property hereafter acquired would, in the case of the Catholic Church, amount to little more than putting it on a level with the Protestants, while in the case of the latter it would simply be the withdrawal of a bonus to real estate and social speculations of a most demoralizing kind. —N. Y. Nation, Jan. 13, 1876.

THE DISPERSION OF THE JEWS.

BY WILLIAM DENTON.

The present condition of the Jews is generally considered as being a fulfilment, to the very letter, of prophecies made respecting them thousands of years ago; they are confidently referred to, triumphantly pointed out, and there is hardly a church in the land but has rung with the account of this wonderful fulfilment of prophecy—this "standing miracle which has nothing parallel to it in the phenomena of Nature."

With regard to these prophecies, in the first place it may be said they are quite indefinite as to time. They do not say that the dispersion of the Jews should take place in one hundred, one thousand, or ten thousand years after the prediction, and, if it had not taken place yet, Bible believers would simply say: "Well, the time is not yet come; the Lord will do it in his own due time." Again they are made contingent. Moses says: "It shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I command thee this day, that all these curses shall come upon thee and overtake thee."

If there had been nothing that looked like a fulfilment of these curses, how easy it would have been to say: "The greater part of the Jews do keep the commandments which Moses gave them that day, and therefore God has not allowed the curses to fall upon them." Only a part of these prophecies has been fulfilled, and the part which has been is neither astonishing nor remarkable, much less miraculous. The prophecy-fulfiller, writing for the American Tract Society, quotes two verses in Leviticus, and, skipping sixteen verses, dovetails them into two more, takes one from Deuteronomy, two from Jeremiah, and ends with one from Hosea; making altogether a most miraculous prophecy.

Suppose that I was to prophecy all the things that I thought were likely to happen to the United States, if they adopted a certain line of policy say, for instance, continue to uphold slavery, is it not likely that some part of my prophecy would be fulfilled? Would there be anything miraculous in its being so? Would anybody conclude that a large book containing the writings of Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, and Adams, in which my prophecy was recorded, was the word of God in consequence of it?

In the prophecy contained in the twenty-sixth chapter of Leviticus we read: "I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes and cause sorrow at the heart." Are Jews more liable to consumption and ague than other people? Are Jews afflicted with consumption and ague at all, where the diseases are unknown to other people? If so, it would be well to let such facts be known.

In the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy we read: "And the Lord shall scatter thee among all the people, from one end of the earth to another; and there thou shalt serve other gods which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. And among these nations thou shalt find no ease; neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest, but the Lord shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind. And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee, and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life." Do the Jews serve other gods—gods of wood and stone? Do they fear day and night, and have they no assurance of their lives? You know these things are not so.

We read in the twenty-fourth verse: "The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust; from heaven it shall come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed." When was this prophecy fulfilled? When did powder and dust rain from heaven, and destroy the Jews? "Thou shalt not prosper in thy ways, and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled evermore." Is it true that they never prosper in their ways? "As rich as a Jew" has become a proverb. Who ever saw a Jew begging? They seem to have inherited the money-making propensity of their father Jacob. It is true they are scattered through all nations; but is there anything wonderful in that? Americans are found in every nation; so are Englishmen, Scotch, Irish, and French.

Had the negroes been the people referred to, how literally then would the prophecy have been fulfilled! They are cursed in the city and in the field; they "betroth wives and other men lie with them"; they "build houses and other men dwell in them"; they "beget sons and daughters but enjoy them not, for they go into captivity"; they "serve their enemies in hunger and in thirst, and in meekness, and in want of all things"; "he puts a yoke of iron upon their necks and destroys them."

Read the twenty-eighth chapter of Deuteronomy with the negroes in your mind instead of the Jews, and you will find that it applies with ten-fold more force than to the Jews, though many parts are quite inapplicable to either. I am told that they remain a distinct nation, though they possess no national domain. And why so? Simply because they are, as a nation, a religious sect. Let a Jew renounce his religion, and he is no longer a member of the nation—no longer a Jew. Let any nation do so, and they would retain their nationality as long as the sect should exist. In America, in consequence of religious toleration, they bid fair to become amalgamated and lost—merged into the Anglo-Saxon race.

The curses pronounced upon the Jews were to come in consequence of disobedience to Mosaic Law; but prophecy-fulfillers of the present day tell us that it is in consequence of a disbelief in Jesus, as the Messiah, and that they can never be restored till they "bow in adoration at the foot of the cross."

In foretelling the dispersion of the Jews, as they loved their own country with intense fervor, what would be more likely to induce them to act in a certain manner than to tell them, if they did not, they would be scattered among the nations of the earth, and their lands pass into the hands of strangers? This the prophet accordingly did, and, among a multitude of prophecies which never came to pass, this single item was fulfilled, and hence the "living miracle" among us at the present day.

WOMEN'S CLUBS.

Twenty-five years ago women found they had a tongue which could be used in public, and since then have celebrated the discovery. But the era of talk is fast giving way to that of work. Women have found that fine words butter no parsnips, and, having shown men that they can lecture, and plead, and preach, and even lobby quite as successfully as their brothers, are now turning their attention to other things. When it was proposed to form a women's club, the idea was pronounced absurd. Men declared that woman was not a clubbable creature. She could never associate with her sisters on terms of equality. She had no tact for management, and no talent for affairs. She must stay at home and tend babies, and receive calls, and try to entice her husband to forsake his club and spend the evenings with her, by the spells her loveliness might throw over his wayward inclinations.

The Woman's Club was organized, and all the more quickly because men said it could not live, and must not be. Experience has proved that men were mistaken. Woman has shown that she is a clubbable person. She not only enjoys the social and intellectual stimulus that comes from intercourse with her kind, but she has developed an unsuspected capacity for conducting her club with discretion and economy. While most of the men's clubs in this city are heavily in debt, the Woman's Club, which was a target for ridicule for years, has over $1,500 in its treasury. The Brooklyn Woman's Club is also financially prosperous, and that in Chicago is notably successful. The men's clubs are convivial, but the women manage to make their club sufficiently attractive with intellectual stimulants, and the charms of conversation and music, varied with a little delicious gossip now and then. There is no intoxication, though there is a little wholesome excitement occasionally over an election, or an engagement, or some social event. Their entertainments are certainly delightful, and are always inexpensive. They have displayed a conservatism in their management which quite surprises those who looked on woman as a bundle of erratic impulses and unreasoning whims. Their personal attachments are strong, and they hold to those who have served them faithfully with something of the tenacity with which they cling to husband and child. Mrs. Severance was at the head of the New England Woman's Club for years, and Mrs. Howe is likely to hold the office as long as she can fill it. Miss Kate Hillard has been re-elected so many times that the members feel that the office belongs to her of right. Alice Cary, the first President of the New York Club, was unfortunately too ill to keep the office she seemed made on purpose to fill. The conservatism which is one of the strong elements in woman's character is one reason of the success of these associations. It has kept them from introducing questionable topics for discussion, or sanctioning crude and loose social theories, or admitting persons of doubtful reputation to membership; and, perhaps, were woman to take part in politics she would be a conservative rather than a reforming or innovating force, and possibly, judging by the way she reflects officers, might advocate a third term. The Radical Club in Boston owes its success very largely to the conservative instinct, tact, and discretion of Mrs. Sargent, at whose house it now holds its sessions. It is a purely literary and intellectual association, and has shown what the organizing capacity of one woman can accomplish in that direction. The club in Dubuque has something of the same character and influence. In short, the Woman's Club is a demonstrated success. It has survived opposition and answered criticism by what it has become. And while the clubs of the other sex are entirely for social interchange and conviviality, the Woman's Club has ventured in more than one instance to render needed and useful service in philanthropic fields. The Brooklyn Club has set a fine example in this direction, and its members have surprised themselves quite as much as they have astonished and delighted others by what has been achieved. The next ten years will doubtless witness a large increase of these institutions, which will have an important influence in forming public opinion and directing social movements to the best ends.—N. Y. Graphic, Jan. 18.

THE ROMAN CATHOLICS AND THE SCHOOLS.

The question of tolerating sectarian control over a portion of the public schools is one which will not down at the bidding of Democratic politicians. In fact it is to this class of politicians that the whole trouble is due, as it is only by their consent in various places that the entering wedge has been inserted, which threatens, if not checked, to divide and destroy the free-school system. The course of procedure is in nearly every case the same as that now proposed in Jersey City, notwithstanding the recent constitutional amendment. The Rev. Father Hennessey, of that place, is the principal of a parochial school of six hundred pupils, which has been in existence for six years. The support of the school he finds a burden in these hard times, and he follows the customary programme in offering to unload. In a letter to the city Board of Education he offers to place the school nominally under their control, asking no rent, and agreeing to keep the building in order, and provide fuel. The only right reserved is in the appointment of the teachers, and these are to be subject to examination by the Board. He even goes so far as to agree that the Bible shall be read in the school, and the Lord's Prayer recited. On the face of it this seems like a favorable proposition, but it is to be hoped that the Jersey City Board of Education will not hesitate to reject it. The State of New Jersey is not so poor as not to be able to furnish to all its children the same educational facilities. If Jersey City has not at present enough school-houses, it is able to provide the additional number required, and to equip them all with teachers without assistance from any ecclesiastical source. It should give to the Roman Catholics precisely the same privileges which it gives to the Presbyterians, or Methodists, or Jews. No more, no less. If it allows one sect to appoint or nominate the teachers for one school, it must in justice allow the same privileges to every other sect. It should refuse all alike, and provide alike for all.

A very bad precedent has been set in this matter in New York, Connecticut, and a few other States. Offers like this of Father Hennessey have been made and accepted, and parochial schools are now in full blast under the pretended supervision of the local Boards of Education. The Roman Catholics are not to be especially blamed in the matter. They are following a definite policy under shrewd leaders, and have reason to congratulate themselves over every success. The blame and the responsibility rest with the local school boards which, from supposed reasons of economy or policy, have given their sanction to the dangerous innovation. It is full time to call a halt.—Hartford Courant, Dec. 30, 1875.

THE PLEASANT INQUISITION.

We look out upon many objects of interest from the dome of St. Peter's; and last of all, almost at our feet, our eyes rest upon the building which was once the Inquisition. How times changed between the older ages and the new! Some seventeen or eighteen centuries ago the ignorant men of Rome were wont to put Christians in the arena of the Coliseum yonder, and turn the wild beasts in upon them for a show. It was for a lesson as well. It was to teach the people to abhor and fear the new doctrine the followers of Christ were teaching. The beasts tore the victims limb from limb, and made poor mangled corpses of them in the twinkling of an eye. But when the Christians came into power, when the holy Mother Church became mistress of the barbarians, she taught them the error of their ways by no such means.

No; she put them in this pleasant Inquisition and pointed to the Blessed Redeemer, who was so gentle and so merciful to all men, and urged the barbarians to love him; and she did all she could to persuade them to love and honor him—first by twisting their thumbs out of joint with a screw; then by nipping their flesh with pincers—red-hot ones, because they are the most comfortable in cold weather; then by skinning them alive a little; and finally by roasting them in public.

She always convinced those barbarians. The true religion properly administered, as the good Mother Church used to administer it, is very, very soothing. It is wonderfully persuasive, also. There is a great difference between feeding parties to wild beasts and stirring up their finer feelings in an Inquisition. One is the system of degraded barbarians; the other of enlightened, civilized people. It is a great pity the Inquisition is no more.—"Innocents Abroad," by Mark Twain.

M. J. E. MARTIN gives in the Monde the following curious answer to the often asked question, "Was Lincoln a Catholic?" He was once holding a conversation with the late Mgr. Lefevre, Bishop of Detroit. "We came to speak of political events, and of the assassination of President Lincoln, and we were not a little surprised to hear Mgr. Lefevre say with sadness, 'Ah! poor Lincoln; if he had remembered my advice his end would not have been so deplorable; why did he not remain at home on Good Friday, and why did he not continue to say his beads?' 'His beads!' we exclaimed; 'but Lincoln was not a Catholic?' 'He was not so latterly; you say rightly,—he had become an infidel. But in his youth he was baptized by a Catholic missionary of Illinois, and I myself heard his confession many times. I frequently celebrated holy mass in the house of his parents. Later in life he aspired to honors; he married a Presbyterian, and he became a member of the Masonic society. We felt it a duty to break off our relations.' We confess," says M. Martin, "that we did not at all expect this revelation, the authenticity of which we guarantee upon the testimony of Mgr. Lefevre, and Americans need not have the least doubt that they have nominated a Catholic for President. But Lincoln did as many others have done, he abandoned a religion he had freely embraced upon serious examination, and to arrive at fortune and position he became an apostate and an infidel."—Catholic Review.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

WINDOWS.

"Words are windows," so I said,
As I read
Authors two (and neither dead):
Words they parried, each intent,
With purpose bent
On saying straightly what he meant.
Words are windows: some are stained,
Or frosty-paned;
Others clear as ether strained.
Each its honors! When my mind,
Faith-enshrined,
In its narrow halls confined,
Court comfort, cares for naught
But the thought
For its present pastime wrought,
Let the sunlight pictured fall
On the wall,
With its rainbows over all:
If I turn an eager eye
Toward the sky,
For its word of prophecy,
Leave the windows broad and fair,
Clear and bare;
I would read my heavens there.

E. M.

GROTON, N. Y.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 5.

W. W. Spalding, $3; A. A. Knight, $3; G. A. & S. Hill, $3.20; M. Pfau, $6.40; J. S. Hill, $2; American News Co., $3.75; N. L. Hall, $6.45; A. Werner, $3.20; H. Fletcher, 36 cents; T. G. Hovey, $3.20; M. B. Sherwin, $3; J. Wilson, $1; M. M. Ballou, $3.20; Leo Schiertz, $3.20; T. L. Smith, $3.20; J. C. Michener, $1; Mrs. Sarah S. Russell, $60; O. Ditson & Co., $20; J. Eddy, $1.60; N. D. Street, 10 cents; W. F. Jamieson, 40 cents; J. S. Perry, $3.20; Mrs. A. Lawton, $3.20; B. F. Horton, $3.20; Lorenzo Stone, $3.20; George Lewis, $2.15; Z. Hockett, $10; J. Helstand, $1.50; E. H. Hinton, $3.25; G. Iles, 65 cents; W. C. Gannett, 10 cents; O. C. Clogston, 10 cents; A. H. Roffe & Co., $2.70; R. C. Bassett, $5; J. H. Elliott, $3.20; R. W. Love, $3.20; N. M. Hatch, $3.20; David Prince, $3.20; H. Watkeys, $6.65; Thos. Davis, $10; V. H. Seaman, $6.40; J. T. S. Smith, $6.65; Mrs. H. F. Angel, $3.20; C. Lenk, $6.40; Mrs. H. Colt, $3.20; G. Hagemayer, $3.20; A. A. Vaughan, 25 cents; S. R. Koehler, $3.20; Mrs. W. J. Rotch, $3.20; Geo. W. Wood, $3.50; John Albright, $3.20; L. G. Feich, $3; Jas. Mackenzie, 25 cents; F. Chase, $3.25; J. C. Fargo, $1.60; A. D. Straight, $3.20; A. N. Alcott, $3.70; G. E. Corbin, $3.80; R. R. Atchison, 25 cents; Wm. V. Wannington, $2; Henry James, $1.35; Cash, $5; Mrs. C. B. Richmond, 40 cents; O. Monroe, $1.10; Wm. H. Hamlen, $3.20; John Buntin, $3.20; T. G. Tuft, $3.20; Mrs. H. B. Champion, $3.20; N. Littlefield, $3.41; D. Y. Kilgore, $2; A. Williams & Co., $3.60; L. B. Tuller, 10 cents; L. Hawthorne, $2; A. O. Simpson, 25 cents.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

THE LAWS CONCERNING NEWSPAPERS.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, considered as wishing to continue the subscription.
2. If subscribers wish their papers discontinued, publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible. Notice should always be given of the removal.
4. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office or place to which they are sent, they are held responsible until they settle bills and give notice to discontinue.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a paper from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, will be held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers pay in advance, they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to continue to send it, and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 10, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street; J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENNEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

A PHILADELPHIA lady writes glowing accounts of Mr. Cephas B. Lynn's eloquence and success in that city as a lecturer on behalf of the secularization of the State. Mr. Lynn is one of the Spiritualists who do not limit their sympathies to their own number or their own peculiar belief, but speak a brave word for all that would make this life nobler, freer, and sweeter.

THIS is what a Kansas correspondent writes about THE INDEX: "I am glad you did not stop the paper, as I cannot get along without it. Have read it since the twentieth number, and admire it more and more every year. It is, in my judgement, a better literary paper than the Nation. It has more solid reading in keeping with the spirit of the time than any other journal printed in America, that I have any knowledge of, unless I might except the Popular Science Monthly. It has the mature culture of the magazine, with an aim and purpose infinitely more practical and useful. I could select from the first-page essays a half-dozen worth more than a year's subscription. For example, Wendell Phillips' 'O'Connell,' the 'Church and State' by Wasson, 'Atomism in Religion' by the editor, and the incomparable essay by Weiss in a recent number. The latter disappointed me only by its brevity. Give us Weiss as often as possible. He can't be prosy if he tries. Then there is O. B. F., whose 'poetic fancy' is such a thorn in the side of the sensitive men of the Investigator: one never tires or sleeps over his sermons. But I have spun out unconsciously, and must not detain you longer."

WE CONFESS that the following paragraph from the Brooklyn Catholic Review of January 11 has staggered us: "The Liberal Christian clothes a true thought in an apt phrase when it says of the free-thinkers, with no doubt a side glance in the direction of Mr. Francis Abbot: 'The few deeply earnest men in the free religious movement owe whatever power they have to a remorseless creed of a highly dogmatic character, a reverence for truth to which they would sacrifice life, and do sacrifice fortune, and ease, and outward success; a faith in private intuition which is more solemn than the infallibility of the Church, a creed of self-denial and resistance to the Church (which is their world, and flesh, and devil) which makes them strong to do, and bear, and speak, and command. There is something truly heroic and apostolic in this dogmatic narrowness which presses against all the world with the force of a hydraulic ram. But free religion, without this basis of dogmatic conviction (be it false or true), is as weak as marsh water—too feeble to run in any direction, and equally ready to go in all.'" That a Catholic writer should identify all moral earnestness with devotion to a "dogmatic creed" is a quite intelligible, though mistaken, opinion; but that any Catholic writer should concede "reverence for truth" to any one who deliberately rejects "Catholic truth" as scientific error, and who openly opposes the Church which teaches it as a sincere but dangerous foe to the world's liberty and highest welfare, utterly confounds us. We have always supposed that every consistent Catholic must necessarily condemn such disbelief as ours as involving wilful and malignant hatred of the truth: how is it possible for him to concede "reverence for truth" to such as we are? Or have we misconstrued the tenor of the above extract? If it is possible for any Catholic who will not sacrifice his religious faith in his creed to a good-natured but illogical sentiment (and he is just the Catholic whom we most respect) to concede sincere love of truth to any determined "errorist," we shall have to reconsider our whole estimate of Catholicism. Will the Catholic Review please answer our question as seriously and frankly as we put it?

THE "PROTESTANT CHRISTIAN" PARTY IN POLITICS.

An editorial article published in the New York Christian Union over two months ago will be found copied in another column of this issue. So many other matters have been clamoring for attention that we have not been able to notice it as it deserves until this week; but "better late than never." It quotes certain remarks of ours at the late Worcester Convention of the Free Religious Association, and thinks that they were neither "just" nor "fair." We should be sorry to believe that such strictures were deserved, and therefore feel unwilling to let the matter pass by without such an explanation as will satisfy at least the unprejudiced and the candid that what we said was true.

Alluding to the tendencies of the time on the question of State Secularization, we pointed out that three great parties are forming on this issue; namely, the Catholic, Protestant, and Liberal parties. The Catholics, representing the subordination of the State to the Church, are thoroughly organized and substantially united; if they ever gain political supremacy, they will make Roman Catholicism the State religion, establish the Roman Catholic Church as a national institution, and place the public schools under the control of their own bishops and priests. The Liberals, representing the complete independence of the State and the absolute non-recognition of religion (as commonly conceived) in all political action, are as yet wholly unorganized as a whole; but they will, if they carry the day, complete the divorce of Church and State, abolish the last vestiges of their political union, and thoroughly and consistently secularize both the State and the schools. These two parties represent opposite principles which are unmistakable, logical, and incapable of compromise. The defeat of either must be the victory of the other. But the victory of the Catholics will be the bitter persecution and grinding slavery of all non-Catholics, while the victory of the Liberals will be the religious liberty of all whose religion does not consist in enslaving and oppressing those who differ from themselves.

Between these two great parties, however, there is a large body of Protestants which occupies a half-and-half, inconsistent, and in the end untenable position. They are equally opposed to "Romanism and Infidelity"—the latter being their designation of all forms of rationalism. They are bred to a traditional, not intelligent, acceptance of the verbal proposition that Church and State ought to be separate; but they stultify themselves by holding that the State ought to recognize what they call "unsectarian Christianity"—as if Christianity itself were not self-evidently a sect in a country containing a vast multitude of citizens of various non-Christian beliefs. They uphold the existing practices and laws by which Christianity is really, though indirectly, recognized by the State, and in virtue of which there is "some show of reason for claiming that this is a 'Christian country.'" They keep in force the laws which virtually recognize Sunday as the "Christian Sabbath," exempt from taxation the "Christian Church," and retain the Bible in the public schools as a mere flag of the civil supremacy of "Protestant Christianity." Chiefly by the sufferance of the indifferent majority (for they do not themselves constitute a majority of the population), they thus violate the principle of non-union of Church and State by making the State officially recognize the Church's sacred day and the Church's sacred book. To retain their unjust privileges and advantages, they cherish a fixed and dogged determination to uphold the present laws in their own favor. This is manifest by the action of their ecclesiastical bodies, which are everywhere adopting resolutions to this effect, and from which alone the real drift of opinion in this Protestant party can be wisely inferred; for the talented "Liberal Orthodox" preachers who are reported so widely in a few cities are outnumbered hundreds to one by their less brilliant but far more conservative brethren throughout the country whose names scarcely ever get into the papers, and the few "Liberal Orthodox" journals, like the Christian Union and Independent, represent only the more intelligent minds which are scattered thinly through the thousands of stiff Orthodox parishes of the land. He is a very credulous radical who catches at these comparatively isolated voices as representing the sentiments of the bulk of the Protestant population. Men are always prone to fancy their own opinions as on the point of sweeping away all opposition before them; but the emphatic declarations of ecclesiastical bodies on behalf of Sabbath and Bible laws, which are published almost daily by the press, ought to show that the great, sincere, powerful convictions of the Protestant community are enlisted on the side of the political recognition of "unsectarian Christianity," and not on the side of the secularization of the State. If it were not so, these laws would have been abolished long ago; and the gathering storm, when it bursts, will satisfy every doubter that it is not the part of wisdom to assume that the great mass of Protestant Christians hold their own professed creeds in utter insincerity. There is enough faith in these old creeds still left to make the impending conflict a desperately and formidably earnest one.

Now this Protestant party, which is daily intensifying its own purpose to defend the Bible in the schools at all hazards, cannot possibly succeed without the help of the Christian Amendment. They must adopt that measure and carry it through, or they will be beaten off the field. The Christian Union may protest as much as it pleases, but it cannot affect this iron necessity of the case. Either the growing pressure of American principles and American precedents will thoroughly secularize the State and the school, or else the reaction of the churches will plant in the Constitution new guarantees of Protestant Christian supremacy. Disbelieve it who may, we state the truth and appeal to time for proof of it.

The Protestants and the Catholics stand substantially for one principle—that government and public education shall be Christian, not secular; but the latter alone represent this principle in all its logical force and completeness, declaring (what is evident enough) that "unsectarian Christianity" is an absurdity, and that you cannot recognize Christianity at all without thereby recognizing the Church, whence all knowledge of Christianity is necessarily derived. This many Protestants perceive, and, recoiling from the Roman principle with alarm and horror, are prepared to adopt the full secular programme. All such are "Liberals," and must, in spite of all the squeamishness of the Christian Union, act with those who share the same convictions. But the Christian Union is wide of the mark, when it says that "the Evangelical Protestants alone who are ready to fight this battle with religious Bourbonism, so far as there is any need of fighting, are fifty times as numerous as the whole body of so-called 'Liberals.'" There is no little squad that can monopolize that name, which simply denotes all who will faithfully stand by the principle of religious liberty and a secular State, as opposed to the principle of religious usurpation and a government that is Christianized according either to the Catholic or Protestant plan. Is the Christian Union ignorant of the fact that not half the population of the United States go to church on Sunday? That, if all the churches of the land were crowded to their utmost seating capacity, they could only hold a little over one half of it? It is this vast body of the unchurched, not the handful of Protestant Evangelicals who think with THE INDEX and the Christian Union on this subject, that constitutes the strength of the Liberal party; and, whenever this party comes to self-consciousness as the great army of religious liberty and the protector of man's dearest hopes in this Western World, there will be no danger at all. The only danger lies in the apathy, the indecision, the jealousies, dissensions and timidities, of the Liberals themselves.

REASSURANCE.

A farmer, as a storm was rolling up black and furious, and he was making haste to get everything under cover from the tempest, recollected having heard that the cause of these uproars in Nature was the sun. Thereupon, in his impulse of vexation at the prostration of his corn, the frightening of his cattle, and the threatened devastation of his fields, he was disposed to hurl malediction at the heart of the solar system. Soon the tempest had spent its rage, the wind subsided, the clouds rolled away, the trees and fields smiled in the sunlight, the meadows were radiant in freshly-renewed green, the cattle came happy from their sheds and coverts, the farmer's heart was glad, and he blessed the sun for what seemed to him a new creation.

The apologue is an old one, but venerable as well as old. The sun is the regenerator; the farmer is the timid person who lives on its light and yet dreads the effect of its constancy to the laws of light. He would have the sun shine gently, in proper places, and on fitting times—shine benignantly, so as to keep the fields in excellent condition for the husbandman,—with an even and well-appointed temperature, of which he should not be disposed to complain. He hates disturbance of all kinds, especially tornadoes.

But the experienced know that they must take the solar system as it is, and be grateful so long as it continues running. If the sun will only keep on shining, the laws of its shining may be left to themselves; since to alter them for our convenience might extinguish the luminary altogether. The agitation of the slavery question by Mr. Garrison and his friends occasioned dreadful commotion, and, without doubt, was the indirect though not unremote cause of the civil war. Thousands of people cursed the abolitionists, and said that slavery would die if it were but let alone. The war actually put an end to it; and now the timid conservatives of peace and social tranquillity are coming out of their snuggeries, and claiming the credit of having been original abolitionists.

The moral is plain. If a principle is just, its pressure is imperative; consequences must not be construed according to the apprehensions of the timid, but according to the presentiments of the brave. Great social movements are in a sense predestined. They come in their time, according to fixed laws of the social and moral world. The men who start them are their servants rather than their masters, their followers rather than their leaders, their creatures as truly as their originators. The hour comes, and with the hour the man. The demand for the secularization of the government is in order at this juncture, and timely. The development of our institutions has reached the point when the next step is clearly indicated. The evils of the old, mixed system are glaring, and call for remedy. No remedy offers but a complete adjustment of institutions to ideas. Even, therefore, if the new agitators had taken the initiative, and raised their cry of alarm when all was apparently tranquil, they would be justified, as Garrison was. The volcano slumbered yesterday; it slumbers to-day; but there it is, gathering force for an eruption, and the villagers on its slopes must guard against to-morrow.

But the agitators have probably not raised the cry of alarm too soon. Ideas hasten to realize themselves as soon as their strength permits. The Church of Rome, which has been gaining of late years with considerable steadiness, cannot help pushing its theory of Church and State to its logical conclusions. The Protestant sects, which have also been gaining, inevitably drive at the conclusions to which their principles point. It is not so much a deliberate policy as it is a necessary and a logical impulse, which the influential men and controlling bodies could not check if they would, and have no power of willing to check. If the impulse that bears them on should prove more masterful than the impulse that impels the liberals, the result must be a perpetuation of the present system, with additional guarantees of its permanency and additional pledges of its power. The best chance of checkmating any such move seems to be the timely and earnest insistence on the principle of absolute secularization. These hints are thrown out in the hope that they may be of some use in removing the scruples we gave expression to week before last.

O. B. F.

MR. WASSON'S LECTURE.

Mr. D. A. Wasson's recent lecture at Horticultural Hall on "Radical Formalism" touched the key-note of the American situation, and the hearty response it met with from the audience showed that his genius spoke the word longed for by many hearts. The wider observation of men and governments, and the historic studies of his late residence in Europe, showed their value in the broad generalizations he made, in the condensed force of his statements, and in the good taste and aptness of his illustrations. The long lecture was listened to with undivided attention by the fine audience who braved the stormiest day of the winter to hear the words of this honest and careful thinker.

The Advertiser responded to his generous defence of the press by giving an unusually full and good report.

Only one exception had to be made to the lecture. Alas! that there is one class who long in this Centennial year to join in the general jubilee, to change the sword into a pruning-hook, to cease from the work of agitation, and devote themselves to the far more congenial duties of construction and culture, but who dare not do it, because their rights are not yet placed under the safeguard of law, their individuality is not recognized, and their work is degraded and nullified by the contempt thrown upon them.

Mr. Wasson said that to this century belonged the work of emancipation; but it closed with the abolition of negro slavery. But one-half of the human race yet stand in America without the rights of citizenship, without equal privileges of education; and for them the ungracious demand for personal rights and liberty is still a duty which stands in the way of the moral and intellectual work which they are longing to do. There is yet emancipation which must be accomplished before edification can go on.

"Let us take hold of this question of woman suffrage and settle it," said one of the noblest workers of Boston, "that we may be rid of it and go on to other work."

She knew that it could be settled only by going straight through with it, and having the right secured. Then, with our good friend Mr. Wasson, we will say, Now that the whole moral and intellectual force of the community is free to work, let us all work together to organize justice, truth, and wisdom.

Many a woman's life has been given to the woman's suffrage cause, during the last decade, that is wanted, sorely wanted, for science, education, art, philanthropy, the better development of domestic and social economies, and the direct influence upon vice and crime. But as Washington must leave the culture of Mt. Vernon, which he loved so well, to fight the battle of independence, so have Lucy Stone and Julia Ward Howe been forced by conscience to quit the fair gardens which they would gladly dress and till, to engage in the wearisome duties of the convention and the lecture-field. Do not say it was heroism in the man and love of notoriety in the women; it was the same motive in both. There are times when fighting is the first duty and must be done; and for women the war for liberty is not yet ended.

E. D. C.

FREETHOUGHT NOTES.

No. XI.

THE ATTWOODS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

A short time ago we lost a man of singular powers, Mr. Charles Attwood. He died at Wolsingham, in the north of England. When he was seventy years of age he built himself a large and commodious mansion in that great iron-stone district. He had barely completed it when I last visited him. Self-reliant in all things, he was his own architect; and, though the solid structure was not beautiful, the great rooms in the interior were simple, complete, convenient, healthy, and comfortable. He lived many years enjoying it. He had a brother, little known to the public, who, like the rest of the family, had great accumulative capacity. For seventy weeks before his death he sent anonymously every seven days a bank-note for $5,000 to some hospital or charity which he thought deserved assistance. He had lying by him an odd sum of $2,800, which he at last gave away, and then died. His remaining fortune, said to amount to $20,000,000, he left to his brother Charles, whom I have mentioned, and who had more than $5,000,000 of his own, and who died himself a year after receiving it. I am giving only the newspaper statements of their fortunes, not being able now to examine records. I have not seen his will, which is of course accessible.

The eldest brother of this remarkable family was Thomas Attwood, no doubt known in America to many students of modern political history as the founder of the famous Birmingham Political Union, which mainly carried our Reform Bill of forty-five years ago. Thomas Attwood was a banker, familiar with money as well as politics. Charles Attwood, whom I first mentioned, was a great coal and iron-master, acquainted with science, though it was little cultivated in those days by manufacturers. He knew thoroughly, and better than any other man, the mineral geology of England. It was he who first predicted the spot where the great iron-stone treasures of Cleveland would be discovered, which was the same thing as seeing in some disregarded spot a thousand koh-i-noors where no one else saw anything. When a young man, he engaged in a colossal lawsuit involving enormous claims, famous and profitable to lawyers during two generations. During the well-known trial of Queen Caroline he wrote a letter of remarkable power to the Times newspaper in the year 1821, displaying such profound constitutional knowledge that it arrested the attention of the State, and prevented the divorce of the queen. Nearly half a century later he was desirous of recovering a copy of this letter which he had not preserved. I searched a file of the Times in the British Museum, and sent him a transcript of it. As the letter did not bear his name, but the initials which he had adopted, it was a work of difficulty to discover it.

When we last met, our conversation was upon questions of theological dubiety, to which his powerful mind had been directed, as it had been to most subjects of human interest. Neither his riches nor his capacity had placed him above the prejudices which is created by rumor; but he had a way of judging most things for himself. He consented to receive me in company with a valued friend, who had the double merit in his eyes of being a man of political capacity and an iron-master also. I was very much struck with his appearance. He was a tall, slim man, of commanding air, his shoulders somewhat bent with years. His profuse grey hair seemed part of the machinery of his head, where manifestly all his power lay. His nose was as aquiline as that of an eagle. His eyes were the most piercing I had ever seen in human head. He addressed me at once by a phrase which showed that he imagined me to be related to a subterranean family. In writing afterwards to his friend, he said:—

"I am very sensible of Mr. Holyoake's kind feeling, which accompanied the transcript of my article in the Times, and, 'Son of Perdition' as you know I then called him, I remember with pleasure that I found him so candid and sincere as to listen with attention and interest to the words which I had occasion to use against his own 'Naturalism, or Cosmical Religion.' It was the scope of his argument to attribute to the merely verbal entity which he called 'Nature' that power of creating and arranging the world of matter and of life which involves intelligence as expressive and ubiquitous as others ascribe to God. The power of arranging the world can be nothing else than the complex of qualities belonging to that effect, the world, which cannot therefore be its own designing, arranging, and creating cause. His error arises solely from a misnomer; but nothing can be more irrational or more fatal than misnomers in such matters as involve those most destructive consequences which result from the conclusion that there can be any other cause of things created or existing than some power which has conceived, designed, and given existence to them.

"It is one thing as to reality and truth of doctrine to take the statue or simulacrum of a man or other being for a veritable God, and another to understand it as, to the mind's eye of the beholder, exhibiting only an image intended and adapted to excite the mental idea of him.

"I do not know that I can in anything so well convey the impression that Mr. Holyoake has in him—that which ought to make him something else than what he is in these respects—than by thus reminding him of the views which I recollect having really endeavored to awaken him to the perception of."

Though said in good humor, I did not quite admire being addressed as a "Son of Perdition," since I did not see how a person taking a view of Nature different from my own was entitled to describe me so. The term might as reasonably pertain to him as to me. I dismissed it from my mind, however, as one of those eruptions of spiritual egotism which even a gentleman of education does not always succeed in repressing. I quoted his argument as one exhibiting great closeness of thought in a man of his years, and as one having in it some instruction as a purely theistic statement. Of course the term Nature is a verbal entity, expressing the aggregate of life and force. There is something known and actual connoted by that term, which is more than can be said of the term which theists employ on their side.

Yours ever faithfully,

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

22 ESSEX STREET, Temple Bar, London.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The most important measure brought before Congress thus far during the present session is, without doubt, the new Tariff Bill introduced by Mr. Morrison, chairman of the House Committee of Ways and Means. The bill is said to have been framed with the assistance of Mr. David A. Wells, Mr. Moore, the "Parsee" writer on the tariff, and other gentlemen of ability. Some of the Republicans, as well as some of the Democratic papers, are attempting to throw discredit upon the bill as a free-trade measure; but even the Boston Journal, which is nothing if not Republican, is obliged to admit its general excellence. It changes mixed into specific duties, restores the tariff on tea and coffee, places more articles on the free list, and simplifies our present cumbrous and complicated tariff. That the bill, taken altogether, is, as asserted, a step toward free-trade is doubtless correct, for the sufficient reason that any improvement upon our present bungling tariff would have to be a step in this direction. There is, however, but little probability that the bill will pass without essential modifications.

The United States has received a deserved snubbing from England and Germany, the facts regarding which are briefly as follows: Some time ago Secretary Fish addressed a circular letter to the leading European governments, telling a long story about the sufferings endured by the people of the United States in consequence of the continuance of the insurrection in Cuba; complaining of the non-fulfilment of the promise of Spain to bring Captain Burriel to trial; suggesting intervention by this country in Cuban affairs; respectfully requesting the opinion of European nations upon the present condition of Cuba; and asking them to suggest to Spain the necessity of putting an end to the insurrection so that the United States need not be forced to interfere. England and Germany are the first to reply to this remarkable letter, and state, in substance, that they see no necessity for intervention in Cuban affairs, and suggest, moreover, that Spain be given time to settle her difficulty with the Carlists before being troubled about other matters. If this quiet intimation that we had better mind our own business and let Spain alone should result in putting an end to the Cuban humbug, we shall strive to endure the snub with resignation. We have really nothing to do with the way in which Spain manages Cuba; our commerce with Cuba is steadily increasing in spite of the insurrection; Spain has always professed a willingness to give redress for injury done to American subjects or their property in consequence of Cuban troubles, and even a little delay in some things is pardonable in a country which has so recently passed through severe political changes. With the exception of a few scatterbrains who bought the Bonds of the Cuban Republic in New York, no one in this country is at all affected by the condition of Cuba. Let us pay Japan the $1,000,000 or more which rightfully belong to her, settle a few other just claims of a similar character, and put an end to the existing insurrections in a few of our own States. When these things have been fully attended to, it will be time enough to talk about the tardiness and inefficiency of Spain.

When last week we referred to Winslow as only a somewhat intensified specimen of ordinary American rascality, we did not know that the Advertiser had already published an article asserting that forged paper is very common in banking circles in this city, and that some bankers even prefer to discount paper known to contain forged names because of the greater certainty that the issuer of the note will take it up at maturity, as otherwise his forgery would become public and he would be sent to jail. This assertion has since been disputed by some of our papers, and reaffirmed, with modifications, by others. Whether it be true or false we do not know; but recent events go far to show that in all probability it is true in part at least. When Duncan, Sherman & Co. failed, and it was ascertained that one of their clerks had been employed to draw bills upon them which they accepted, and afterwards by the aid of various brokers sold to the banks, some of us learned for the first time that this was a common method of business, and was not considered dishonorable. The other day two firms failed in our city; and after the failures it was learned that they had long been in the habit of giving one another blank acceptances, upon which any desired, or at least any obtainable, amount might be filled in; and now we are told that this also is a common method of business. Time was when these last methods would have been considered dishonest, and classed with forgery and defalcation, and the fact that they are not so considered to-day is a sad sign of the present degeneracy of commercial honor.

From the numerous illustrations of American dishonesty which press upon us from almost every direction, it is refreshing to turn and contemplate a genuine case of commercial honor just reported from England. It will be remembered that Senator Boutwell, when Secretary of the Treasury, took the banking business of the United States from the Barings, and gave it to a new firm (since gone to pieces) known as Clews, Habicht & Co. The Barings at one time were interested in the bonds of the Eastern Railroad of Massachusetts, and advised their depositors to invest in these bonds. The Eastern Railroad, as our readers well know, after years of bad management, and systematic falsehoods told at the annual meetings of stockholders, has virtually failed. The Barings have now issued a circular in which they state that they were deceived with regard to the condition of the Eastern Railroad, but having given the above mentioned advice in good faith they will themselves pay the interest upon the bonds for the coming year to those who bought them in consequence of their advice. Is it possible to imagine a like standard of honor among us? Imagine, for instance, the editor of the Independent sending a circular to the confiding country church-members who bought Northern Pacific Railroad bonds in consequence of his advice, offering to pay the interest on the bonds to those whom he unintentionally deceived!

The sphinx has spoken; in other words, the long-silent Bowen declares, in answer to charges brought against him by Deacon White of Plymouth Church, that he has been silent long enough, and that he has been gonged at last into opening his mouth. And now that he has opened his mouth, there are probably some people ready to wish that he had continued to keep silent. He declares that, in his opinion, the Rev. Henry Ward Beecher is "an adulterer, a perjurer, and a hypocrite." Moreover, he affirms that he knew the said Henry Ward Beecher to be an adulterer years before the confiding Tilton became aware of his pastor's misdeeds. And lastly, he asserts his ability and readiness to furnish all needed proofs in support of his opinion before any appropriate tribunal. He has already been cited to furnish proofs of his statements before a committee of Plymouth Church, and before this paragraph reaches our readers they may have learned something of the nature of his proofs. What effect Bowen's revelations may have upon Beecher we do not know; but what shall be said of Bowen's character, in the light of what is already revealed by Bowen? For years Bowen has been one of the prominent members of Beecher's church, outbidding others in the annual contest for choice of seats, and doing all in his power to bolster up, and foist upon the confidence of religious people, a man whom he knew, upon his own statement, to be an adulterer and a hypocrite. And Bowen is to-day editor and proprietor of one of the most influential religious newspapers in the country; and good, pious ministers and college professors all over the land are writing articles for Bowen's paper, and paying some of their bills with Bowen's checks, and are helping Bowen to coin the money which makes him an influential man. And yet the majority of people in America are stupid enough to fancy that there should be some connection between religion and morality.

The State Legislature has refused to pass a bill forbidding railroad companies to furnish free passes to members of the Legislature, or to any State officer. It was maintained by some who favored the bill that the railroads would not annually furnish each member of the Legislature with a pass, equivalent upon an average to a gift of $100 in money, unless the amount so expended was regarded as a paying investment, and that the pass was therefore an indirect bribe intended to influence the action of legislation. This is undoubtedly true, and even if it were not true the free-pass system has become an enormous abuse, as is evident, for instance, in the case of the Eastern Railroad, which is said to have issued three thousand free passes annually. Nevertheless we are glad the bill failed, not only because of the ridiculous penalties affixed to it in the present instance, but because we regard the evil as one which cannot be reached by legislative enactment. The evil is one which can be corrected only by a change in public sentiment. A few years ago a solitary member of the Legislature of a Western State refused a free pass, on the ground that he would be called upon to legislate upon matters affecting the interests of the road which offered it, and his name was printed in all the newspapers with derisive epithets and jeering remarks. Since then, like refusals have become common; the newspapers have ceased to ridicule, and are already beginning to intimate that the example is worthy of imitation. A few years hence the legislator who accepts a free pass may come to be looked upon with suspicion; but not, we suppose, so long as forged notes and blank acceptances are regarded as legitimate belongings of honorable business.

Whenever the incipient millennium indicated in the last sentence fairly sets in, the President of the United States will not be the principal guest at an evening reception given by a man who has acquired the title of "Boss," even if he possess all the money of the notorious "Boss" Shepherd of Washington, at whose house General Grant was publicly welcomed last week. Nor shall we have a foreign minister who has pleaded his "privileges" as a bar to criminal prosecution, as General Schenck is reported to have done last week. Nor shall we have a President's private Secretary on trial for defrauding the United States Treasury by conspiring with whiskey distillers, as General Babcock is this week. The utter lack of any nice sense of the conduct due to official position on the part of public officers of high station testifies, even more than many examples of fraud and dishonesty, to the general toning up needed by our politics before we can look for the maintenance of any high standard of official integrity.

The conduct of General Chamberlain ever since he was chosen Governor of South Carolina has been meritorious in the highest degree. No State in the Union was in a more deplorable condition than was South Carolina at the time of his election, and inasmuch as General Chamberlain, when occupying his former official position, had been suspected of knowing more about the practices of the corrupt set into whose hands South Carolina had fallen than any honest man had any right to know, no great faith could be given to his promises of reform. Nevertheless his promises seem to have been fully, faithfully, and courageously kept, in the face of strong and bitter opposition. When Moses and Whipper, ignorant men of vile character, were elected to Judgeships by the Legislature, he prevented them from taking their seats by refusing to sign their commissions, and he has now prevailed upon the same Legislature to expunge from the official record, by a very large vote, a disgraceful speech recently made by the negro-gambler and Judge-elect Whipper. He has also brought about a reduction of one-third in the appropriations for public expenditure, and in other ways is at least attempting to do the things which must be done if South Carolina is to be saved from utter ruin.

As Dr. ECKERMANN was quoting to a few friends assembled in an adjoining room these last two lines of Faust :—

"The traces of my earthly days Cannot be lost in the depth of ages,"—
Goethe expired.

Communications.

DELIVERANCE FROM OUR FINITENESS.

SALEM, Ohio, Jan. 29, 1876.

MR. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—The communication from Mr. Henry James, entitled "Deliverance, not Perfection, the Aim of Religion," in your issue of Jan. 20th, and your reply in the same number, interested me very much; but while I incline more to your side of the argument than his, I can agree wholly to neither, and think there is truth on both sides.

Your definition of religion does not appear to me satisfactory. I think "the effort, or aspiration, of man towards the infinite" would better express the meaning as felt by the mass of mankind. I do not consider any amount of human perfection, either in bodily presence or in the ideal, however grand and beautiful, could wholly satisfy this want; we should reach beyond it to the great, first cause from which we came, and towards which we are evermore tending.

Neither do I believe that the desire for perfection has anything to do with our religious aspirations. It is more, as Mr. James says, that we seek to be delivered from ourselves,—that is, from our finiteness and its limitations,—and merge ourselves in the infinite and unfathomable. By intercourse with what is so far above us, our natures are elevated and purified; but that is a result, not the cause.

Truly yours, M. E. S.

[We think our definition will never be understood, until it is seen to embrace all types of religion, from that which aims at the highest development of individuality to that which would surrender all individuality through absorption into the infinite. Each soul seeks the perfection it craves, one by intensifying its own being and another by pouring it back into the eternal ocean; both aim at what seems to be their own higher good, and so both come under our definition.]

But let us understand each other. This "deliverance from our finiteness and its limitations," if it means anything, means deliverance from our very existence; for we can exist only as finite beings. Do we really mean that? Is non-being a higher state than being? Is annihilation really better than finite existence? Let us say yes, if yes is the true answer. But do not let us delude ourselves with a form of words. We can never be "delivered from our finiteness" so long as we exist at all; and if we do not aspire to the absolute extinction of our necessarily finite being, let us not pass meaningless phrases from mouth to mouth.—Ed.]

A PLEA FOR THE UNCONVERTED.

MR. EDITOR:—

While the churches are now inspecting their armories, drilling their forces, and devising "ways and means" for prosecuting a vigorous campaign in the interest of sectarian creeds, should not those who are rejoicing in religious freedom put forth some special effort in the interest of truth, and in behalf of those who are suffering for more light?

Whatever may be the views of Free Religionists concerning the danger of souls hereafter, I think we must all agree that there are many in this life who "are ready to perish," and that the word "conversion," as applied to their necessities, is no unmeaning term. In view of the crushing effect which a superstitious religious excitement is sure to bring upon the community, is it not time, the time, in all possible ways, to make the religious atmosphere so healthy that it will not be possible for the epidemic to spread, or at least to ameliorate the condition of those who are brought under its influence? It is the observation of the writer that effort in behalf of reforms, and for a higher religious attainment, is exceedingly fruitless after excitements of this kind, and the cause of truth gains but little by waiting for the reaction which is sure to follow. Such reaction may, nay, will, reduce the churches to their common level in point of numbers, and far below that level in religious vitality; but the Free Religionists will gain nothing thereby. Those who have become exhausted by chasing shadows are ill prepared to grapple with substance, and coin true ideas into vigorous, consistent life and character.

If this be true, the work of the philanthropist is especially called for at the present time. What that effort shall be, or how this work can be done, needs combined wisdom to tell.

In looking over the instrumentalities used by the Free Religionists for the conversion or enlightenment of the world, it seems to the writer that there is one class in the community which is not sufficiently reached by them—a class composed largely of church-members, who, to all outward appearance, are loyal to the popular creed, but who possess sufficient light to cause them to live in conflict with reason and conscience,—too timid to be seen among the exponents of a more liberal faith, too fearful of self-condemnation or of outside censure to go far in any direction to gain the relief which in their very souls they are hoping sometime will come. For this class do I desire in a few words to enter a plea. The effort required in their case must be of the most gentle, inductive character. No iconoclastic labor for them will have the desired result; images before which they stand, with questionable faith perhaps, must not yet be rudely broken, but with friendly heart, word, and hand, gently transformed into rudimentary helps to higher and more vigorous truths.

Those who have been reared in a religious atmosphere comparatively free can, I think, scarcely conceive the depth of mental obscurity which surrounds those into whose very life has been woven the teachings of the Evangelical Church; and still harder perhaps, while dealing hard blows against such teaching, to discriminate justly between the error and its victim; but labor in behalf of the class in question will be fruitless when such discrimination is wanting.

The writer, having been "plucked as a brand from the burning," knows well what the rescuing cost, and knows also the value of that timely and kindly human sympathy which came amid the struggles and conflicts, and which imparted that strength which was as the strength of angels.

The battles which are met on the road to mental and spiritual freedom by him whose conscience has kept pace with his religious teachings are no mere skirmishes, as all can testify who have, point by point, conquered their way up from the popular Church.

THE INDEX, the writer rejoices to know, by its consideration and fairness, is doing much for the sincere inquirer. It finds its way into hands and places which make it appear like a stranger. Although I find my numbers properly folded and returned to their place, we know they are quietly doing missionary work. No persons visiting my store wait so patiently for attention as those who can take up THE INDEX; and those readers most likely to forget the ostensible object of their visit are still considered by their brethren in the Church as loyal to the popular faith. But more work is needed for this class than THE INDEX can stop to do. It has demands upon it of a different character. It was not "ordained" to do such rudimentary work.

What, then, can be devised as instruments for this work which shall have the wide-spread influence demanded at this time? Tracts have from time to time been issued which no doubt have done good; while some have been sent out from so-called liberal sources which have been like dashes of water from the Polar Sea, and, in the opinion of the writer, have done little more than close the pores of the mind and heart, and cause the timid reader to retreat to his inner sectarian chambers, take council of past experience, and buckle on his life-preserver tighter than ever.

The churches, with all their professed faith in tracts and their other publications, rely mainly upon "the preached word," as is indicated by their prayers, which are largely spent upon that effort which they have learned by experience needs them the least: that of the "living preacher." Would that Free Religion had such power in that department of effort in point of numbers as would give it a fair chance with the churches! While acknowledging with thankfulness all the strength the liberal cause has in the field, it is the opinion of the writer that there is one place which is peculiarly fitted to do, is doing (according to the means given it) much, and is anxious to do more, of the work so loudly called for at this time. Would that more who are seeking light had the courage to avail themselves of the means to that end which are provided at the "Parker Memorial" every Sunday morning; and would that all these, also, who are strong in their religious freedom, felt it their privilege and their duty to add, by their presence and all other means, to the strength of the few who are struggling not to maintain a shrine at which to worship the name or creed of any man or sect, but to keep alive those ideas which the nineteenth century has indicated to be the best means to elevate the human race.

Men and women discourse there who have arrived at that platform over the route which eminently qualifies them as teachers of those who are striving for a clearer mental and spiritual atmosphere; and those, also, who think they have fought and conquered most of the battles, will in some discourses heard there meet questions which will make them feel that reinforcements are required for farther advancements. There we feel we have turned the leaf on which can be read the great duty of the hour for the Free Religious community to consider and discharge: that of concentrating the influence of their presence, and by all other means so to strengthen this enterprise, that it shall be beyond a peradventure that this legacy of Theodore Parker, of a few men and women, shall never be crippled in their efforts to maintain, as they ever have done, not only a free platform, but one from which can be heard discourses of the highest order this world affords.

There never was a time so favorable for intelligent, considerate radical work, as the present. Speaking after the manner of the Church, the people everywhere "are in a very hopeful state of mind." Look at the crowded seats in front of the so-called Liberal Evangelical preachers, who are popular, not so much by what they preach as from what they leave unpreached. So anxious are these crowds of prisoners (mostly from other evangelical churches) for a little religious freedom, that it is eagerly taken in this negative form, and thankfully received, even from hands of doubtful honesty. But let us all remember that above all preaching and all combined effort, stands this great individual power, which is continually used for or against any cause we may wish to help, namely: that of character. If any class of people at this time should more than any other possess all the graces which bless and perfect human life, that class is the Free Religious.

The Christian name is fast losing its weight in the world. The merchant, the mechanic, and men generally, are loosening their grasp from that which they have found, by sad experience, gives no guarantee for safety when the trying hours come, and with great hope, mingled with curiosity, are watching the daily lives of those who profess to walk without the crutches which the Church insists upon furnishing, as the only means to consistent life here and safety hereafter. May all radicals be equal to the position given them, and fully realize that the exhibition on their part of any of those defects which mar the character in any relation of life is not only fatal to influence for good, but a discouragement to those who are seeking refuge from the inconsistencies and intolerance of the Christian sects. May we all in our daily living keep in mind the great need of the present day—that of religious, political, and commercial honesty.

What power is given to the work of Theodore Parker, what safety in his ideas and teachings is promised to those who are timidly striving for a more rational faith, by the consistent, unblemished character which he maintained through all his earthly career! Such blameless lives, these garments without seams, are always found to have been worn by the saviors of the race, revered by all the good, and the roughest of mankind "cast lots" for them, that they may be preserved in their wholeness.

BOSTON.

[We add our mite of hearty recommendation to our correspondent's plea for a better support of the Twenty-eighth Congregational Society, which still perpetuates Theodore Parker's noble work in the Parker Memorial Hall. It is one of the institutions of which Boston should be most proud; and all liberals who live in the city should help sustain it by presence and purse. A few are carrying a heavy burden, which would be easy to bear if all did their part; we wish that all our city readers would determine to do what they can to keep this lighthouse of free-thought bright and radiant with its cheerful beams, which have guided many a weary mariner already to the safe harbor of a rational and ennobling view of human life.—ED.]

THE CHESTNUT STREET CLUB.

AMHERST, Jan. 24, 1876.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I cannot refrain from giving you a specimen, which has recently come to my notice, of the way in which the Orthodox endeavor to assure themselves that their cause is not declining.

Rev. Mr. Joseph Cook, of Boston or vicinity, drew and interested large audiences at the College church yesterday. To substantiate his statement that free-thought is on the wane in "the Hub," he asserted that the Radical Club of that city had recently changed its name to "Chestnut Street Club," because so many of its members had come to accept the Thirty-nine Articles that they were unwilling to be known as radicals. The gentleman has recently published an article in the Bibliotheca Sacra to prove that rational criticism is declining in Germany. His assertion with reference to Boston gives us a valuable suggestion as to how much allowance we ought to make for his statements in other matters.

Yours very truly,

HENRY DOTY MAXSON.

AMHERST COLLEGE, Amherst, Mass.

DR. BARTOL'S REPORTED CENSURE OF THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In a recent number of the Universalist, in which the editor indulges in his customary fling at the Free Religious Association, I noticed the following statement: "Even Dr. Bartol, who used to be considered one of their patriarchs, does not scruple to say that he finds them more intolerant than the Essex Unitarian Conference."

As this has been going the rounds of the press for some time, and as I have seen no denial by Dr. Bartol of having made this statement, I should like to know if it be true.

If Dr. Bartol has any charge of intolerance to bring against the Free Religious Association, I should say he is in duty bound to make his specifications; and I trust the columns of THE INDEX are open to him for that purpose.

A STORY not unlike one that everybody has heard already, is related by a German correspondent as being a true account of an incident that occurred after the late imperial hunt at Hubertusstock. The Emperor William feeling unwell, proposed to return to the castle on foot in company with the King of Saxony and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg. But tiring on the way, the party got a peasant to give them a lift in his cart. Presently the man's curiosity being excited by the appearance of his passengers, he said, turning to one of them, "And who may you be?" "I am the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg," "Oh, indeed!" replied the peasant, with a wink; "then who may you be?" he inquired of the next. "I am the King of Saxony." "Better and better," cried the carter. "And you?" accosting the third member of the party. "I am the Emperor of Germany." "Well, then," said the countryman, in high good humor, "I will tell you who I am; I am the Shah of Persia, and can hoax people as well as you can." But when he drove up to the castle of Hubertusstock, the honest fellow found that of all the potentates in the cart he was the only one whose claim could not be substantiated.

NEW IDEAS do not gain ground at once, and there is a tendency in our mind to resist new convictions as long as we can.—Maz Müller.

Sanctuary of Superstition.

HELD TO HIS WORD.—"While I was on my knees in my room this morning, Jesus promised me that he would grant the prayers now to be offered in Park Street Church!"—Rev. A. B. Earle, in Boston, 1866.

ON HIS KNEES.—I have lately been reading much of the New Testament on my knees, and I mean to read the whole of it so, if God spares my life long enough.—Rev. A. B. Earle, the Revivalist, in Boston, 1866.

BLOOD REQUIRED.—We desire to ask short-sighted parents who send their children to the Sunday-school and keep them from church, if they ever stop and inquire how these children are employing God's holy day? Sunday is a period of time set apart for God's more peculiar worship. This being so, are your children engaged in worshipping God, or are they amusing themselves? The child is father of the man. If your children do not attend church in their youth, put it down as a fixed fact, they will not attend church when they grow to man's estate, "and their blood will be required at your hands."—Church Journal.

HOW THE CATHOLICS RAISE MONEY.—The bearer, —, is a member of the Association of Our Lady of Perpetual Help. The object of this association is to raise funds to pay the debt of the Redemptorist Church and Convent at Boston, Mass.

In order to become a MEMBER of this association you have to contribute twenty-five cents a month. In consideration of this small contribution of three dollars, to be paid in the course of the year, or all at once, the Redemptorist Fathers will enroll you among the number of their benefactors and as a member of the Association of OUR LADY OF PERPETUAL HELP.

ADVANTAGES.

1. The holy sacrifice of Mass will be offered up for you ONCE A WEEK as long as charitable contributions will be made toward the object stated above.

2. The litany of the Blessed Virgin, together with two other prayers to the Mother of God, will be DAILY recited for you by all the members of the society, which counts at present over 1,300 members.

3. Every member of the society will say for you, EVERY DAY, ONE OUR FATHER and ONE HAIL MARY, so that 1,300 Our Fathers and Hail Marys are said for you every day.

4. ALL OUR STUDENTS, and NOVICES, and BROTHERS, 638 in number at present, will hear Mass on EVERY SATURDAY for our benefactors, and ALL THE FATHERS of the Society, 664 in number, will offer up for them the good work of saying Mass, of hearing confession, of preaching, and of giving instructions to the people at home, in their mission, or on other occasion; besides every FATHER STUDENT and BROTHER of the society will say the Beads on every Saturday for our benefactors, and also offer up for them on that day more than thirty other good works and prayers prescribed by their rules.

5. Besides these prayers, every member of the Society is obliged to recite TWICE A DAY the Psalm DE PROFUNDIS, "Out of the depth," together with two other prayers for the deceased benefactors.

6. During the Octave of All Saints, there is a SOLEMN REQUIEM MASS to be offered up in every Church of the Redemptorist Fathers for their DECEASED BENEFACTORS, and as the society has at present seventy-two churches, it follows that every year, during the Octave of All-Saints, seventy-two solemn requiem masses are offered up for their deceased benefactors.

REV. WM. GROSS, Superior,

1545 Tremont Street,

Boston, Mass.

NOTE 1. As long as the Society of the Redemptorist Fathers shall exist, which we hope will be to the end of the world, the prayers and good works mentioned in Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, will be offered up for all our benefactors. (Rules and Constitutions of the Redemptorist Society, page 147, No. 9; page 148, No. 16; page 153, No. 7; page 358, No. 11.)

NOTE 2. These Masses and Prayers may also be applied to your deceased parents and friends, if you have them enrolled as members.

NOTE 3. The Proverb "OUT OF SIGHT OUT OF MIND" may become true in your regard after death; but by contributing 25 cents every month towards the object stated above, you will make sure of having the above prayers and good works offered up for the repose of your soul.

Profit, then, by the present opportunity to imitate the charity, mercy, and liberality of your Heavenly Father. Every little contribution will add to the beauty of your soul; it will render your prayers more powerful; it will multiply your temporal goods a hundredfold; it will cancel your sins and temporal punishments due to them. Every little alms will avert from you God's anger. The sacrifice of propitiation and praise of your charitable donations will cause great joy in heaven; it will be for you a subject of consolation in the hour of death; it will inspire you with great confidence in Jesus Christ, your Eternal Judge, and gloriously prevail upon him to pronounce sentence in your favor. Every little contribution will give you one more claim on heaven; it will be one more precious stone wherewith to adorn your palace in paradise; it will bring you nearer to the delightful company of the great Saints, the children of God in heaven, where you will exclaim with joyful accents: "Benediction, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and strength to our God for ever and ever."—Apoen. vii., 12.—Catholic Circular.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 8 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
 Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
 Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
 has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENSON,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition.....	5.00
The Intellect.....	1.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Priest.....	2.25
The World-Friest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. All volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1811-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Foot Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MARGARET D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Paraday, Liebig, and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Paraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship. Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Stilas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 3 vols.....	5.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 3 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahl. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	1.50
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Berman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Weddings.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeelings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, The Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection" and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion, India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	3.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Amongst my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women. Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Geneals of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	3.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	3.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swinging' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Eskoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.35
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans. Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.90
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Wheel.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Second Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours; the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.50
BENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.). A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.). Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Discussions of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.25
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.00
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomen.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.25
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.50
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TITTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Saunterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
W. G. G. A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS.
PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I.
METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.
PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.
LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.
THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.
Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is Homelike.

Fifth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.
Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.
PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.
§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.
§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.
LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 30 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. ANY OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

B O O K

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

1 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

SUNNY SIDE

A New Singing Book, prepared expressly for Sabbath Schools of Liberal Churches.

By C. W. WENDTE and H. S. PERKINS.

The words throughout the book have been prepared and selected with great care. Weak sentimentalism as well as crude doctrinal statements have been rigorously excluded from this collection, and it is believed that the literary contents show a higher grade of writers than have ever before appeared in a book of this character. The music, original and selected, is bright, fresh, vigorous, and altogether of a much better class than is usually found in Sunday-school books.

Price in Boards, 35 cents, or $30 per 100.

WM. A. POND & CO., 57 Broadway, New York.
SUNNY SIDE.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and Its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. . . . The story is told in a very graphic style. . . . Mr. Holyoake . . . is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of TWO DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

WANTED.—A SITUATION

By an Engineer of long experience with Marine and Stationary Engines, who can furnish good reference.

Address GEORGE RUSSELL, care of C. H. Phillips (Jordan, Marsh & Co.), Washington Street, Boston.

$5 TO $20 PER DAY.—Agents

wanted. All classes of working people of both sexes, young and old, make more money at work for us, in their own localities, during their spare moments, or all the time, than at anything else. We offer employment that will pay handsomely for every hour's work. Full particulars, terms, &c., sent free. Send us your address at once. Don't delay. Now is the time. Don't look for work or business elsewhere, until you have learned what we offer. G. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES, and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,

WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets to Course, One Dollar.

Jan. 2. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The Soul of Transcendentalism."

Jan. 9. M. D. CONWAY.

"The Natural History of the Devil."

Jan. 16. J. W. CHADWICK.

"Thomas Paine."

Jan. 23. D. A. WASSON.

"Radical Formalism."

Jan. 30. T. W. HIGGINSON.

"The Meeting of Extremes."

Feb. 6. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"Modern Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency."

Feb. 13. BISHOP MCQUAID.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Catholic American Citizen."

Feb. 20. F. E. ABBOT.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."

Feb. 27. Prof. FELIX ADLER.

"The Old Testament in the Light of Modern Criticism."

Mar. 5. Mrs. E. D. CHENEY.

"The Religious Life of Michael Angelo."

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 26 Bromfield St., Boston.

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... 35

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

TRACTS.

No. I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton.

No. II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

No. III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. New and enlarged edition, with index and text of important citations.

No. IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published. (Soon ready.)

Of No. I, single copy, mailed, 5 cents; ten for 30 cents; one hundred for $1.50.

Of Nos. II, III, IV, single copy, mailed, 10 cents; ten for 80 cents; one hundred for $3.00.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, a volume made up chiefly of essays and addresses given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. "One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucetta Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50. Sent to Office of THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1876.

WHOLE No. 321.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmingled with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 22, 1875.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

WHAT SHAME is felt by every honorable citizen that the American Minister to England can only escape prosecution as a swindler by pleading his official privilege, and that the private secretary of the President should be on trial for conspiracy to defraud the Government!

REV. DR. SPEAR, of Brooklyn, is writing an admirable series of articles in the New York Independent, in defence of the secular view of the school question. He is proving himself a "Liberal" in the true and best sense of the word, by showing himself to be a faithful friend to the principle of religious liberty.

THE ABLE LECTURE of Bishop McQuaid last Sunday on the school question will be published in full in THE INDEX, to be followed by our own lecture on the same subject. A large audience listened to the Bishop, whose views were received with the respect to which his dignified treatment of the subject justly entitled him.

THE CABLE informs us that, "by order of the Spanish Bishops, the bodies of all persons dead prior to the ninth of July, 1875, who were only civilly married, are to be exhumed and removed from consecrated ground." If their only offence was being civilly married, why should they now be so very uncivilly treated?

THE POPE has "threatened the whole Imperial family" of Russia with "the chastisement of the Lord," on account of the alleged persecution of Catholics in that Empire, and "recommends the Czar to the judgment of God." This fact is chiefly important as showing the inevitable tendency of the Vatican Decrees of 1870 upon the political independence of nations.

AS AN argument against a property qualification for the suffrage, ex-Governor Hoffman, of New York, lately said: "The daily developments of the times do not show that the possession of property affords a guaranty of public or private virtue, or of fidelity even to the ordinary duties of citizenship; but experience does show that some of the most faithful and efficient men in public or private life live poor and die poor."

A QUAIN old story is told (if we remember rightly, by Boccaccio) of a miser who, being forced in time of war to bury his treasure in a field, set up a cross over it to mark the spot; and, to give the place all the semblance and sanctity of a grave, he inscribed upon the cross—"Resurgam [I shall rise again]." A shrewd soldier, knowing the man and suspecting his trick, dug up the supposed corpse and appropriated the treasure; but, in order to carry out the joke, he put a new inscription on the cross—"Resurrexit [He has risen]."

THE PHILADELPHIA Liberal League is so well attended that, in the language of a correspondent, "hundreds of people are obliged to stand up in our meetings for want of room to seat them." And why? Because that League is in earnest, and, by its bold action in petitioning the Board of Education for the removal of the Bible from the schools, has commanded that respect of the community which always follows in the wake of genuine pluck. The time for mere talk is over; the friends of liberty must now gird themselves for action.

IT IS ONE of the more pleasing signs of the time, forming a happy contrast to the indications in so many quarters of intensifying bigotry on the school question, that a Jewish Rabbi should be invited to occupy a Methodist pulpit at New Haven. The day will yet come, we trust, when Christians will treat the believers in other religions or in no religion with at least respect and common justice; and the way to hasten its advent is to render the State absolutely oblivious to all distinctions of religious belief. Equality is the precursor of good will.

WE INVITE special attention to the resolution of the San Francisco Liberal League, published in the department of "Communications," and proposing a memorial bust or statue of Thomas Paine. Not only do we cordially favor this proposal, as embodied in the resolution, but we would help it on by suggesting that Mr. S. H. Morse, 25 Bromfield Street, Boston, be at once engaged to prepare a copy in marble of his fine bust of Paine for the purpose indicated. If the money can be raised, and if the Philadelphia League will accept the trust proposed, the project is as feasible as it is timely and appropriate to the Centennial Year.

AT A business meeting of the Free Congregational [Unitarian] Society of Baraboo, Wisconsin, on Jan. 17, a resolution to convert the church into a public hall was, as we are informed, passed without a dissenting vote. "Our town," writes our informant, "has always felt the want of a good hall, and this our society now supplies. Next summer it is proposed to add ante-rooms, and it is confidently expected that our facilities for social, humanitarian, and religious work will be largely increased. At the same meeting a resolution favoring the taxation of all church property was passed unanimously; and, had it included Bible-reading in the public schools, it would doubtless have been equally acceptable." Such movements as this are symptomatic and significant.

THE Christian Union thinks a quartette is preferable to a duet: "Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester, has been invited by the Free Religious Association to present the Catholic view of the school question in Boston, on a Sunday afternoon in February, and has consented to do so. On the following Sunday, Mr. Francis E. Abbot, editor of THE INDEX, will present an argument for the 'Liberals,' in favor of the complete secularization of the public schools. This question, like every other in this country, can be permanently settled only after a fair hearing of all the parties interested. If the Association would next invite a champion of Bible-reading in the schools to make an argument for that view, and then ask some Orthodox Christian to give his reasons for demanding the secularization of the schools, the quartette would be complete, and the four discourses might be printed together as a complete presentation of the subject in all its bearings."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, N.E.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BURLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; S. G. Rollins, Secretary.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 BAKK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Canrad, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Drano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carris S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSTOWN, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

Society versus Selfhood.

A THIRD LETTER FROM HENRY JAMES.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

Let me, since so it must be, prepare my pathway to your understanding by distinctly rejecting the doctrine of annihilation which you charge upon me. I have no need of this doctrine, because I hold the selfhood to be a sheer illusion in man, without a corresponding reality, and we don't annihilate illusions, but are content to correct them by letting in upon them the light of a higher truth. The misery of every illusion is that it is already without reality, already a mere nothing, and therefore does not require to be reduced to nothing, but only to be substituted by a better intelligence upon the subject. For truth alone is capable of dispelling illusions; and if I replace the illusion of selfhood in your mind by the truth of a spiritual Divine creation, which means the truth of a perfect Divine society, fellowship, or equality of all men with each, and of each with all, I can't for the life of me see what you lose that is worth preserving, while your gain seems literally immense. You simply lose a mistaken principle of action, which may sooner or later vitiate every title you now possess to men's regard. And you gain a freedom and breadth of intercourse with all mankind, arising from the identity of your material interests with theirs, which would seem to me, I confess, infinitely exhilarating. Do you not see that it is not my thought, then, so much as your interpretation of my thought, which is contradictory, in attributing to my remedial ideas any such gross designs as uncreation or annihilation?

Let me next reject the doctrine of a depraved nature in man which you attribute to my ideas, inasmuch as I ascribe all our evil to an insane personal illusion on our part—which, however, we are historically competent to correct in the amplest manner,—and so leave our nature not only uncontaminated, but actually informed with all Divine sanctity. I not only attribute no manner of depravity, but all manner of righteousness, to human nature, and even consider the private selfhood depraved only when it survives the uses which primarily led to its inflation, and so impedes rather than furthers the majestic social ends for which alone it has been allowed to exist. The private selfhood has been an illusion of the Divine benignity to the evolution of our present growing unitary consciousness, inasmuch as the manifestation of the endless evils wrapped up in ourselves is the only solid ground we have in experience for our rising appreciation of society as the sole true form of human life.

And finally I distinctly reject the doctrine of moral culture which you yourself espouse and advocate, inasmuch as it sets a directly false issue before the mind as the true problem of human destiny. The meaning of human history has never been to make man self-righteous, but to invest him with the righteousness of God, by developing in him a real or race-consciousness fatal to his isolated or phenomenal one. The practical voice of God throughout all human vicissitudes has been: He that findeth his life in himself shall lose it; he that loseth his life in society, or fellowship with his kind, shall save it. You obviously conceive that our veritable life or being is constituted by selfhood or personality. This to my conviction is utterly untrue. Our true human life or being is wholly constituted by the sentiment of unity we cherish with our kind; and we have no distinctively human life or consciousness until we experience that sentiment. We may severally have the life of the rat, or the tiger, or the sheep, or the fox, or the dove, or the serpent, until then; but we have no properly human life, and we ought to be ashamed of claiming such a thing. The more we disown all private ends of action, accordingly, and cultivate only public ends—which is only saying, in other words, that the more we renounce selfhood and acknowledge society as the beginning, the middle, and the end of our aspiration,—the more we come into our true life or being.

No doubt our true life or being is conditioned for its development upon our experience of a thoroughly finite existence, a thoroughly corrupt and fallacious selfhood; just as the life or being of the chick is conditioned for its development upon its undergoing the hideous decay of the egg. But the chick, unlike us moralists, does not feel its life to be constituted by the conditions of its development. On the contrary, it instinctively struggles away from its environment in the egg until finally a higher or freer life is gained. The chick has none of our scientific dread of extinction in leaving the egg, because the instinct of a higher life impels it so to do. And so no man, in whom the instinct of a higher life in his nature than he realizes in himself has not been sophistically reasoned down, would ever dread the extinction of his proper life or consciousness in rejecting the addled egg of his earthly maternity—selfhood,—and soaring away to the free ineffable heaven of society.

You and I have absolutely no life-consciousness at present, with all our cultivation, save what we derive from the social sentiment. What we enjoy at present is really a death-consciousness which we mistake for life only because, being densely ignorant of our true being in God, we have yet a fallacious sense of independence grounded in our physical existence. I call this sense of independent existence fallacious, because we ourselves do not even exist, let alone live. What alone exists in our callid personalities is the creative substance of the world—the infinite love and wisdom—working out under the subtle mask of our personal imbecility his gracious will towards universal man. The one needful condition, then, of our realizing life-consciousness (and not by any means of our losing it, as you conceive) is to give over cultivating or improving our selves, and devote all our energies to the promotion of human society, fellowship, equality. We simply cannot attain to life-consciousness in the way of self-consciousness, however that consciousness may be tamed out of its aboriginal savagery by the specious arts of culture or concealment. We attain to it only by inwardly dying to ourselves, only by feeling that the life of selfhood in us is sham life, and so getting spiritually swallowed up in the sentiment of a hallowed and perfect unity with our kind in God. Thus alone shall we ever be able to feel ourselves both instinct and armed with all the goodness and truth and power of an emancipated Divine nature. It is preposterous to suppose that the chick has a gleam of its proper life while undergoing incubation, but only when it is empowered to reject the egg existence from it, and feels the larger substances of earth and air hardening its tender organs, and winging and pluming it to the busy commerce of its species. So you and I, boast ourselves as we may of our culture and accomplishments, have as yet no proper consciousness of life, the life that belongs by God's greatness to humanity, so long as we are shut up to the process of spiritual incubation named selfhood, or the interests of an isolated existence in space and time, but only in so far as these trumpery walls of selfhood crumble down, and so admit us for the first time to our true Divine inheritance, the freedom of universal man.

I have now, I think, met all your doubts very amply, and shall at once draw nearer my subject by stating what my idea of selfhood is, and in what the evil of it consists.

Selfhood, then, is a strictly subjective illusion in man—an illusion primarily in the sphere of feeling and thence of thought—which leads him actively or passively to deem himself his own sole substance or reality: first, in the compass of his physical organization, or the realm of sense; next, in the family sphere, or the realm of emotion; and, finally, in the civic and political sphere which is the realm of his moral and rational culture, or his voluntary activity.

The reason why I call it an illusion in man to deem himself his own substance or reality, or attribute to himself anything but a phenomenal or shadowy existence, either in the realm of sense, in the realm of sentiment, or in the moral and rational realm, is simply because he is eminently a creature of God, and hence is not only void of life in himself, but is actually incapable of receiving and enjoying life save through such a discipline of heart and understanding as leads him cordially to acknowledge the truth of his absolute divine dependence, and so confess the life of selfhood to be purely factitious. It is open to you to deny all this by rejecting man's creatureship, or maintaining that he is and exists in himself alone; but not otherwise. And as you hold to creation, I doubt not, quite as sincerely as I do, I have no need to anticipate any such cavil on your part here.

The ground of this superb illusion in us—the illusion of selfhood—lies in the fact that man is essentially, or in virtue of the creative perfection, a rigidly SOCIAL form of life or consciousness; and society, we know, becomes constituted not by any arbitrary methods or methods of outward force, but by a free marriage between self and the neighbor, or a hearty frank union of man's private or particular interests with his public or universal interests. Now marriage is always a work of time, involving a previous acquaintance between the parties to it, and an opportunity to learn and estimate each other's worth, together with a subsequent wooing or courtship, and a more or less protracted engagement. But the marriage in question involves in itself all time both before and after, for the parties to it are each man in all the conceivable minuteness of his microcosmic personality, and all men in all the magnitude of their macrocosmic personality; and it requires, accordingly, a comparative infinitude of opportunities for parties so excessively antagonistic to recognize each other's existence even, much more to make each other's frank undisguised acquaintance, and much more still to come into each other's hearty fellowship. What wonder, then, in this state of things that the public and private, or universal and particular interest in humanity should have been so long in becoming reconciled! What wonder is it that we each one of us, on the one hand, profoundly ignorant as we are meanwhile of our social nature and destiny in God, should look upon our neighbor, or the interests of public justice among men, as inimical to ourselves, or the interests of private freedom; and so hug the principle of selfhood to our bosoms, as veritable flesh of our flesh and bone of our bone! And what wonder, on the other hand, that the public life of the world, profoundly ignorant as it has been of the spontaneous subordination it is destined to undergo to the private life of men in our coming social enfranchisement, should look upon freedom or selfhood in man as the sole evil it was bound to antagonize in compelling the wealth of human relations into the limits of an inflexible outward order!

Such has been the providential scope of selfhood in human affairs: gradually to call forth or develop by its fierce libidinousness (or instinct of unlimited freedom) a conception of order in human life, or a public consciousness of man, which should not only foster and promote his private freedom, but should eventually bloom into a social consciousness, and so constitute human destiny. The uses of selfhood, accordingly, in the past, have been unquestionably Divine, since they have been inextricably interwoven with the gradual development of our public consciousness and the coming consequent acknowledgment of a purely associated life in man as the true beginning and end of human discipline.

What, now, is the evil of selfhood? It is, that it has ceased to be a working force in humanity, and become almost wholly a luxurious, idle, and ostentatious one. The public life of the world—the distinctively universal interest in humanity as opposed to men's isolated and contrarious interests—has become clear and palpable to every man's recognition, and there is no longer, as a general thing, any intelligent person amongst us who does not find every man's private or personal pretension, whether physical, emotional, or moral, inexplicably frivolous, tiresome, and revolting. The evil of selfhood, in short, is that, having forfeited by the advance of a public conscience in humanity its original raison d'être, or that Divine instinct of battle which led it to champion human freedom à outrance, it looks upon itself no longer as a transient providential means to a great social end, but as a strictly providential end in itself; and so spends its imbecile days in tentatively pirouetting by poem, or essay, or novel, before the looking-glass of men's idle opinion or worthless convention.

It must be palpable enough by this time, I conceive, that our disagreement in regard to the meaning and evil of selfhood is mainly due to the fact that I am bent upon viewing selfhood as a great historic phenomenon of the mind, having only universal issues; while you contemplate it as a fact of mere biographic interest, of purely private science, a mere chronic experience of some particular memory. I regard it, in short, philosophically, or as a generic fact; you scientifically, or as a specific fact. This difference in our point of view—I regarding it as a living or spiritual experience of the mind wholly, you regarding it at most as a possession of the dead or reflective memory—must be fatal to any final good understanding betwixt us, unless we can manage to put it away. I, for example, am perfectly free to admit that it is not scientifically demonstrable—or possibly will never under the light of our earthly day become verified to sensible observation or experience,—that selfhood is illusory, and hence the sole existing source of evil and falsity known to man; while yet, at the same time you yourself cannot doubt that myriads of human beings unaffectedly feel their inmost Divine peace and joy perpetually slain by it. Here, then, is a chance for agreement between us. For we may thus fairly conclude that the evil I assert is a subjective evil exclusively, an evil known only to one's inward sense, without having at the moment any necessary ground in the sphere of objective or sensible fact. It is true my subjective conviction in the premises may receive its original quickening from some casual act or acts of wrong-doing on my part—some special act or acts of false witness, theft, adultery, or violence; but the precise sting to my conscience of all my evil-doing is that I see it to proceed from a root in me of evil-being; that is, see it to inhere unmistakably in my self. I would gladly refer my faulty morals to some outward cause, if I could—some pressure of outward circumstances; for I unfeignedly love my self, and abhor to recognize any blemish in it. But the bane of my vicious morality to my conscience is that it refuses to affiliate itself to any foreign cause, any outlying tyranny of circumstance, and claims a strictly domestic genesis. The whole legitimate effect of it, in short, is to impress me with a conviction that the deepest evil I shall ever know is spiritual or subjective, as being inherent in my very self, and not the least natural or objective, as inherent in other men.

I don't know whether you have ever considered it, but acts of false-witness, theft, adultery, and murder are wholly unknown to human nature, as that nature stands Divinely formed and avouched only in a perfect society or brotherhood of man with man; they are acts known and noticeable only to statutory law, which reigns only while human society is still in abeyance. False-witness, theft, adultery, murder, are none of them things: that is, they are none of them offences estimable by sense, which yet is the criterion of real or objective existence. On the contrary, they are terms, all of them, of an interior or invisible Divine relationship between man and man, deriving their sole and entire raison d'être from each particular man's living or spiritual disjunction with all other men, or his habitual tendency to make self and not society his end of action. They are, in short, mere surface manifestations of a universal, spiritual, or subjective evil in man, the evil of selfhood, and will be ineradicable from our manners so long as we find our life and hope in it. And what we need to get rid of, accordingly, is just this evil selfhood, source of all the minor moral evils known to human intercourse. We need not think we are ever going to abate moral evil by direct diatribes against lying and all the rest of it. All men know even to nausea, know better, probably, than the preacher, the evil of lying, and fraud, and treachery, and violence. What we want now to know is the insane root of these evils, or what makes them irresistibly sweet to their subject; namely, the pride of selfhood, and so cut them off in their source. Our civic righteousness, engendered by the existing concubinage of Church and State, has become, in fact, so fly-blown in recent years, that our courts seldom open without more or less depravation to the public sense. I cannot persuade myself that God's justice is not exquisitely outraged every day by the obscene perquisitions—at once so foul, so frivolous, and so voracious—which we continue to make into men's private lives. Can any interest even of earthly justice be promoted by a judicial process, which, under the skilled manipulation of mercenary attorneys, deluges the public atmosphere with the most fetid odors of hell? If I myself chanced to be a breaker of law and not a keeper of it, and found myself suddenly confronted by its vengeful hand—not with an enlightened judge solely, and an honest jury, both alike disposed in the fear of God to judge wise and dispassionate judgment between us, but rather with a foul and ignorant public rabble, habitually pastured upon the coarsest newspaper-garbage until it itches to find every decent man guilty,—I should at once, as it seems to me, and whatever might be my legal guilt, feel myself so inwardly succored and upborne in the unequal strife by the inflowing Divine sympathy and that of all good men, as to look down with hearty contempt upon the godless crew that thirsted for my disgrace. But this by the way.

If, then, the deepest evil I know is spiritual or subjective evil, or an evil inherent in my self, can you wonder that my most intimate blessedness lies to my own conviction in getting rid of selfhood? I am not so silly as to contrive getting rid of it by suicide, as many a tried heart and mind is driven to do. I have no such gross notion of selfhood as to suppose that it can be got rid of by violence, much less by tagging at my own moral suspenders. On the contrary, it is an evil so subtle, so sinuous, and serpentine as to be really strengthened by every direct effort to overcome it, and so confess itself corrigible only by the advent of a universal righteousness in humanity, or the inward operation of God's spiritual infinitude in man's social form. If selfhood be not properly confined to the absence of society in men—if it will always be a breathing of the Divine Spirit in me to prize my self, or value in me what makes me to differ from my fellow-man,—you take away all my hope and joy in God, which are absolutely contingent upon my finding Him infinitely opposite to my self, because infinitely at one with my nature or kind alone. But if, on the other, you admit the selfhood in man to be a signal unreality—if you allow that it is only a gross fallacy of judgment in me operated by the tyranny of sense, and having absolutely no foundation in rerum natura,—you leave my hope and joy and peace in God unimpaired, since you show me to myself unidentified with my wretched perishable self, and alive only in my imperishable race or nature.

Do you continue to say nay to all this? Do you continue to say there is no rat-hole mean enough to house the man who is so base as to condemn himself? Don't misunderstand me. I certainly feel no contempt for my self relatively to that of other men; my contempt for myself is an equal contempt for selfhood in your bosom and in that of all other men put together, from the highest angel in heaven to the lowest devil in hell. But why "rat-hole" any way? I am a little curious on this point. For, although my zoological lore is not profound, I still am led to believe that there is no more active servitor of the instinct of selfhood on earth or under the earth than that robust little vermin. I am told, indeed, that when, in spite of all the prudence he brings to bear upon this instinct, he gets fairly nabbed at last, his grief and desperation invest the trap with a sadness touchingly human. Why, then, I repeat, should any man's self-contempt consign him above all things to rat-holes, if only rat-holes were not too good for him? In fact, what are we already—all or any of us dainty moralists—but so many vicious old rodents, burrowing in the meal of the creative substance and appropriating it to our private greed or lust, as if it had never been meant for any higher human use?

I am sincerely sorry to have gone on at such length; but I have not time to be shorter, and so sign myself, as ever,

Truly yours,
CAMBRIDGE, Feb. 5th.

HENRY JAMES.

[For THE INDEX.]

THE GOOD AND THE EVIL IN ORTHODOXY.

BY CHARLES E. WHIPPLE.

The form of religion commonly called "Orthodox" has one very great merit; namely, its energetic hostility to "sin"; its persistency in maintaining the doctrine set forth by a Scripture writer, that sin is "exceeding sinful." Orthodoxy often misjudges in its estimate of what is sin; often departs, both by allowance and prohibition, from the Scriptural view of what acts are sinful; sometimes stigmatizes as wicked things perfectly authorized by its "infallible and sufficient rule," the Bible; and sometimes enjoins as indispensable duties acts in nowise enjoined by that rule. But, nevertheless, it does this great service to its generation of holding up sin as always dangerous, always unjustifiable, always to be resisted and avoided.

The danger and evil of Orthodoxy lie chiefly on the other side. Its specially dangerous and evil influence comes from its doctrine concerning "righteousness." With the best intentions towards God and man, it utterly misrepresents both in the attempt to describe the relation of each to this quality, "righteousness."

For themselves, the professors of Orthodoxy, utterly disclaim righteousness. Though many of them are plainly seen to be honest and worthy people, doing the very things that men ought to do, and seeming to be actuated by good motives, playing well their parts as husbands, fathers, friends, tradesmen, citizens, philanthropists, they persistently call their best actions filthy rags, and declare their hearts to be corrupt and depraved. I barely mention this in passing, having intended to speak mainly of their misrepresentation of the righteousness of God.

Claiming for God in the gross, as everybody else does, absolute perfection of character, and also specifically claiming for Him justice, mercy, wisdom, goodness, love, pity, true friendliness, and fatherly feeling towards all his human creatures, and unchangeableness in the exercise of all these perfections, the professors of Orthodoxy make in detail such representations of every one of these as to neutralize or even to reverse them. Although they never intend to speak of the Deity but in terms of praise and honor, the details of their account of his relation to the human race in its origin and destiny are so framed as to attribute to justice things plainly unjust, to mercy a course decidedly unmerciful, to wisdom obvious defects of plan and failures in execution, to goodness deliberate allowance of an ultimate triumph of evil, to love characteristics not only unlovely but repulsive, to pity the extreme of relentlessness, to fatherhood, as shown in the Divine Being, a serene and unmoved contemplation of the permanent misery and ruin of vast numbers of his children.

No doubt, many Orthodox people are utterly unconscious that their system makes such representations as these. I will therefore note down some instances, beginning with the attribute called justice.

Orthodoxy adopts Paul's representation (Rom. ix., 21) that from a mass of unconscious clay God does make and may rightfully make "vessels of wrath fitted to destruction," knowing that a destiny of conscious suffering throughout eternity awaits them. And it also adopts Paul's horrible conclusion (v. 20) that the human sufferers thus doomed before their birth have no right of remonstrance. Its professors thus (let us hope, unconsciously) attribute to God something positively unjust, an act and a purpose essentially evil.

Orthodoxy also attributes to God another act of enormous injustice; namely, making the salvation of men depend upon their "belief" in a certain doctrine, quite irrespective of the evidence for or against that doctrine; or, to come nearer to the case in hand, quite irrespective of the absence of evidence for it, and an accumulation of the strongest reasons against it.

We must believe, on peril of damnation, Orthodoxy tells us, that Jesus of Nazareth is Christ, the Messiah of Old Testament prophecy and Jewish expectation. Our welfare throughout eternity must depend on our acceptance of this theory, although whoever reads the two Testaments may see that, in fact, Jesus fulfilled neither the prophecy nor the expectation. The prophecy announced a Messiah, descended from David, who should be "the Lord's anointed" as David was, who should rule as king in the land of Palestine with full acceptance of the Hebrew people, as David did, and who should continue to rule in that land forever, making that nation supreme, overthrowing its oppressors, and bringing all other nations into permanent subjection to it. The Jews expected precisely the thing thus predicted, and rejected Jesus because he did not fulfil it. He never either ruled the Jews, nor was accepted by them in any manner, either literally or spiritually. He was not even a son of David unless he was the son of Joseph; a supposition which, however probable, Orthodoxy vehemently rejects. He was the teacher of a doctrine far better than Judaism; but he was not, in any sense, the predicted and expected "King of the Jews."

Yet, assuming him to be "Christ," Orthodoxy further requires that he be acknowledged as "Lord" by all who live, have lived, or are to live in this world. It might suffice to say, in reply to this demand, that we need and desire only one Lord, our Creator and Preserver, the Father of all mankind; and that, belonging already to God, we cannot honestly "give ourselves to Jesus," as the propagandists of Orthodoxy require that we should do. But there is also another reason. Sundry errors of doctrine and judgment into which Jesus fell, if we may trust the evangelists, his biographers, make it plain that his statements should not be taken as authoritative. His predictions, no doubt, expressed his genuine opinion of what was to take place, but events have shown the erroneous character of sundry of them. He assumed, if the evangelists have given us his words, that the end of the world, and a final judgment forever separating the righteous from the wicked, would occur within the lifetime of the generation to whom he preached. Some of his precepts can be accounted for and justified only on the supposition of such speedy ending of this world, and its business and pleasure. But these predicted wonders did not occur, and nearly nineteen hundred years have passed since their failure was made manifest. And, though many nations during that period have called themselves Christian, assuming to adopt the religion taught by Jesus, not one of them has pretended to practice his precepts of non-resistance, of unlimited and indiscriminate giving and lending, of refusal to lay up treasures on earth, of neglect of provision for food and clothing, and of abstinence from oaths and from public prayer, etc., etc. The people who most loudly claim to be followers of Jesus do not follow him in all respects, nor is it well that they should do so. His doctrine of everlasting misery for a considerable proportion of mankind (if the biographers represent him rightly upon that point) has unfortunately met with very wide acceptance. That dogma alone, if he taught it, should suffice to prevent our taking his teaching as authoritative.

Since, then, the particular beliefs demanded by Orthodoxy not only fail of evidence, but are counterpoised and overbalanced by opposing reasons, we may conclude them to be not only unessential to our future welfare, but destitute of all basis of truth or justice. Belief must follow evidence, and to require it without or against evidence is unjust. Let us pass to the next item.

Orthodoxy attributes to God a character and an attitude of loving kindness to men in this world, quite irrespective of their state of penitence or impenitence for the sinfulness common to all. He loves all men, even the worst in act and the worst in purpose (the upholders of Orthodoxy say), until their bodies die. After that time (they say) he will not only cease to love and begin to hate a certain portion of them, but he has arranged that from that time onward forever, neither repentance nor reformation shall be of the least avail to improve their condition.

Orthodoxy, theoretically claiming God as the perfection of goodness and excellence, demands equally belief in Satan, the enemy of man and the embodiment of all evil. Yet, after the death of the body, it represents God as holding, to that large proportion of mankind which it calls "the impenitent," not only the same relation of implacable spite and vengeance which Satan holds, but union with Satan in the work of tormenting them forever. Orthodoxy frowns upon those people who, in careless talk, say that this or that was done "like the devil"; but its own deliberate representation of God's future relation to millions of men and women paints him as precisely "like the devil" in spirit and in action; it affirms that he will laugh at the calamity of a portion of his human creatures, and mock when their fear cometh.

Orthodoxy claims God to be the perfection of wisdom, and joins Isaiah in saying:—

"Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor hath taught him? With whom took he counsel? and who instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and showed to him the way of understanding?"

But, unfortunately for the consistency of Orthodoxy, two other passages of the book which it calls "The Word of God," give "Moses" as their infallibly inspired answer to all the specifications of the above inquiry. If that collection of early Hebrew and Christian literature be really "God's Word," observe what was divinely dictated to the writers of Exodus and Numbers, as follows:—

"And the Lord said unto Moses, I have seen this people, and behold, it is a stiff-necked people; now, therefore, let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them; and I will make of thee a great nation. And Moses besought the Lord his God, and said, Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and with a mighty hand? Wherefore should the Egyptians speak and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth. Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel thy servants, to whom thou swarest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it forever.

"And the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people."—Ex. xxxii., 9-14.

"And the Lord said unto Moses, How long will this people provoke me? And how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have showed among them? I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation and mightier than they. And Moses said unto the Lord, Then the Egyptians shall hear it (for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them), and they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land; for they have heard that thou, Lord, art among this people, that thou, Lord, art seen face to face, and that thy cloud standeth over them, and that thou goest before them by day-time in a pillar of cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night. Now, if thou shalt kill all this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of thee will speak, saying, Because the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land which he swore unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the wilderness. And now, I beseech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou hast spoken, saying, The Lord is long-suffering and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and by no means clearing the guilty, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, unto the third and fourth generation. Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people, according to the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people from Egypt even until now.

"And the Lord said, I have pardoned according to thy word."—Numb. xiv., 11-20.

According to these passages, MOSES was the counsellor of the Lord, teaching him in the path of judgment, showing to him the way of understanding, and even availing, by prudent counsel, to change the determination which he had formed and expressed!

Orthodoxy requires that these two narratives shall be received as "the Word of God," equally with those opposite declarations in the same volume which impute to God perfect wisdom.

Orthodoxy attributes to God pity, mercy, goodness, and love, each perfect in quality, and each unchangeable. Yet, regardless of the absolute self-contradiction therein expressed, it specifies a time (the death-hour of the "impenitent sinner") when, to him or her, God will at once and forever cease from the exercise of these kind affections, and take on, in their stead, the extreme of implacable vengeance throughout eternity. Towards these condemned ones God, according to the Orthodox creed, will then feel and act, and will forever continue to feel and act, just as that same creed represents Satan as feeling and wishing to act now.

It must be remembered, moreover, that the expression "impenitent sinner," in the dialect of Orthodoxy, means not only specially corrupt men and women, practised and hardened evil-doers, but all who have not "believed" and accepted the chief theological dogmas of that system. With its advocates, "mere morality" is a term of reprobation, differing in degree only, not in kind, from theft and drunkenness. With that system, exemplary life in man or woman, loveliness of character, the exercise of the sweetest human affections, a life devoted to perfect fulfilment of the duties of spouse, parent, friend, citizen, philanthropist, as far as human eye can distinguish, avail nothing to secure acceptance with God. Without the special "belief," these go for nothing, in his view, as Orthodoxy interprets him; with the special belief, Divine acceptance is sure, even to a life utterly destitute of these best traits of humanity. Belief, in the very act of death, saves the ruffian who suffers strangulation once, after meriting it a hundred times; "mere morality," or what Jesus and James specified as the main requisition which God makes of men, will neither save nor help. On the contrary, he or she who has only led a noble life, pure within, and helpful to the family, the neighbor and the community, if without this special belief, must not only be rejected and condemned by the judge, but must be cleared thenceforth forever to associate with the vilest and most corrupt of human beings!

Let us look at a few of the details of this classification.

*Forty-seven years ago, a young man of Massachusetts, with only the average of worldly advantages, awoke to recognition of the fact that a poor and despised minority of his nation were suffering the most cruel oppression at the hands of the majority, and that this oppression had become so fortified and systematized by accomplices of the functionaries of law and religion with its perpetrators, that both State and Church combined actively to uphold it. This system of oppression was so dominant and triumphant that even to speak against it was to incur odium from the officers of government, the bench of judges, the reverend clergy and the members of their various churches, the mercantile and manufacturing interests, and the periodical press, not only the secular, but that which called itself "religious." To oppose the tyranny in question was not only to excite the rage of its perpetrators and their partisans in these various classes, but to risk the failure of one's own means of living. Nevertheless, the young man of whom I speak trusted so thoroughly in God, and saw so clearly that duty led in the path of justice and righteousness, that he espoused the cause of the black sufferers, the least, the lowest, and the weakest of his human brethren, and never ceased speaking and striving in their behalf until their yoke was broken. From the beginning of this struggle the clergy set themselves against him, and threw every discouragement in the way of the accomplishment of his object; and the majority of them stigmatized him also as an infidel, holding his practical maintenance of righteousness as nothing while he withheld his assent from their theological dogmas. The most amazing feature of their position, however, was this: that, claiming Jesus, the great teacher of righteousness and exemplar of self-sacrifice, as the final judge of men, they assumed that he would class Garrison with tyrants and oppressors for condemnation. This judgment was not merely the spite of such partisans of slavery as Blagden and South-side Adams, President Lord, and Bishops Soule and Hedding, but the deliberate verdict of the theological system they taught. Orthodoxy spoke through their mouths in that decision.

Let us look at another instance. A man of good character, pure morals, and keen sensibilities, seeing the ruin wrought among his fellow-men by intemperance, devotes his life to the work of rescuing from it as many as possible, and of warning those yet uncontaminated against the beginnings which tend towards such an end. He spends years of assiduous labor and self-sacrifice in these efforts, and dies as he lived. But, as he had merely loved and helped his brethren without acknowledging Jesus as either Christ, or Lord, or vicarious sacrifice, Orthodoxy classes him with drunkards and drunkard-makers, and condemns him to partnership with them in sin and suffering throughout eternity.

Take one case more. A good and pure woman applies herself to seek and to save those of her sisters who are emphatically called "lost." She follows them in their wanderings, and counsels, helps, and saves such of them as do not refuse her good offices. Her life is crowned with the blessings of those who were ready to perish. Reclaimed wanderers, reunited families, follow her memory with honor, gratitude, and love. But as she had never believed in purification by "blood," as she had never applied for God's favor through an "atoning sacrifice," Orthodoxy assumes that God will class her with prostitutes and seducers, removing from her, at the same time, all possibility of benefiting or reforming them!

Such are some of the absurdities resulting from the Orthodox dogma that men, on the death of the body, are permanently to take place in one of only two classes, and that the dividing line will be, not character, but redemption by blood.

Orthodoxy, claiming that "God hath made of one blood all nations of men," necessarily claims Fatherhood for God, and brotherhood for the human race, with the duties and responsibilities belonging to those relations. A father is bound in duty to love and benefit his children; brethren are bound in duty to love and help one another.

By men these duties, however obvious, are often violated. Many cases have been known in which a brother has first hated and then killed his brother. If, however, on examination of such a case, the murderer should be found to have acted by instigation and direction of the father himself, this would intensify the horror and the crime. Yet precisely this, the direction of brothers in very many cases to kill brothers, and in one case the command to a human father to kill his son, is what Orthodoxy attributes to the Universal Father.

Orthodoxy, through its dogma of the infallible inspiration of the Old Testament, teaches that God, by the mouth of Moses, commanded the sons of Levi to kill great numbers of their brethren the children of Israel. Here is the record:—

"Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the Lord's side? Let him come unto me. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him. And he said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel: Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbor. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses; and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men. For Moses had said, Consecrate yourselves to-day to the Lord, even every man upon his son and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day."—Ex. xxxii., 20-29.

Again, Orthodoxy teaches that God, by the mouth of Moses, gave to the Hebrew nation the command here following:—

"Of the cities of these people which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth; but thou shalt utterly destroy them; namely, the Hittites and the Amorites, the Canaanites and the Perizzites, the Hivites and the Jebusites, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee."—Deut. xx., 16, 17.

And one small portion of the execution of this command, after the taking of the city of Jericho, is thus recorded:—

"And they utterly destroyed all that was in the city, both man and woman, young and old, and ox, and sheep, and ass, with the edge of the sword."—Josh. vi., 21.

Thus, according to portions of the Old Testament history, God himself has abused and violated the relation of fatherhood equally with the very worst of those inhuman fathers whom men imprison and hang for violence done to their own children. According to that history, he has many times enjoined his human children to kill their brothers and sisters, expressly forbidding the exercise of pity or compassion, even to women and babes. That a semi-barbarous people should have imagined a deity capable of giving such orders, is conceivable. The wonder is that Christians, sharing the civilization, the intellectual culture, and the enlarged humanity of the nineteenth century, should take these notions for reality, and take the belief of the semi-barbarians for proof of such reality.

Then there is the story of Abraham and Isaac, too well known to need rehearsal. That the grand old Arab sheik should not have philosophized enough to distinguish that the God who had put paternal love into his heart could not undo and reverse his own work by the command here in question, is conceivable. It is even conceivable that Paul, educated a Jew and a Pharisee, and living only in the dawn of Christianity and civilization, should have spoken of Abraham's purpose to cut his son's throat as a specimen of meritorious faith. The wonder is that sharers in the present grade of English and American intelligence should continue to think thus un-worthily of the Universal Father, and content themselves with Abraham's poor idea of him.

But Orthodoxy calumniate God, and misleads its hearers in regard to him, by a doctrine even worse than the above. That system teaches:—

1. That God will forever inflict unspeakable torments upon millions of the men and women he has created here.

2. That this doom will be inflicted upon these persons as a punishment for living in accordance with the inclinations and propensities with which they were born.

3. That, throughout the eternity which is to follow this short mortal life, God has provided that these sufferers shall receive no benefit from repentance and reformation, and shall have no encouragement from him in the attempt to do right rather than wrong.

We hold the deliberate killing of a child by its father to be one of the greatest of crimes. To kill him by slow torture would excite our highest indignation. To wish to keep him alive to suffer unending torture would be the extreme of fiendishness. Yet precisely this is what Orthodoxy represents its God as not only wishing, but as actually doing, after elaborate preparation before the human race was created!

Such is the Orthodox view of the attitude of God's Fatherhood to sinners; but one feature of its action upon saints is equally noteworthy, and hardly less repulsive.

It is regarded as the crowning excellence of Jesus that he came to seek and to save the lost, and that his life was actually spent in such seeking and saving. Men have ranked also as worthy of the highest honor and applause his followers in later times, men and women who, out of affectionate solicitude for their kind, devoted their lives to the help of the suffering and needy. Howard and Florence Nightingale, Clarkson and Garrison, applied themselves to the relief of material suffering; Mrs. Fry, Henry Martyn, and Harriet Newell went out as preachers of repentance and reformation. These felt impelled by the mental and spiritual nature which God had given them to choose and pursue this work. In it they found their highest satisfaction. If, in the next world, they retain the characteristic excellences which distinguished them here, their predominant desire will be still to seek and save the lost; and, according to Orthodoxy, "the lost," by thousands of millions, will be there, suffering far more than they ever did on earth. Orthodoxy assures us, however, that the souls of missionaries and other philanthropists will not be allowed to enter upon this ministry of love in the future world. Will God make them miserable by forcibly preventing the exercise of this strongest impulse of the nature he gave them? Or will he obliterate this divinest of their faculties, crush out from their souls all desire to relieve the suffering, and reform the sinful, and make them morally inferior in heaven to what they were on earth? Let Orthodoxy choose between the horns of this dilemma.

The system of Orthodoxy, including, as it does, tenets unjust and dishonoring both to God and man, does not furnish a solid basis, either of direction for the present life or hope for the future. Its Gospel, providing for damnation not less thoroughly than for salvation, is not "glad tidings"; its Bible, a vain attempt to unite Judaism and Christianity into a single rule of life obligatory upon all men, contains such inconsistencies, self-contradictions, imperfections, and errors mingled promiscuously with its truth and wisdom, as to prove it neither an "infallible" nor a "sufficient" rule; its heaven is a fabrication childish in its irrationality and absurdity; and its hell is a libel upon God not surpassed by the worst imaginations of heathen mythologists. This system, I say, does not furnish a solid basis for our trust.

Where shall those look for a guide who have heretofore thoughtlessly accepted this system?

First of all, we must content ourselves with such guides and such lights as God has provided. He has given us reason and conscience, but has not chosen to make either of them infallible. He has put into our hearts expectation of, and aspiration towards, a future life, but has told us nothing of its place, manner or form, of its occupations or its capabilities. He has bestowed various powers, physical, mental, and spiritual, for the ordering of our earthly life, with the means of knowing that these are of different grades, and that the lower should be subject to the higher. He has provided that conscious wrongdoing shall be followed by self-reproach, and by the impulse to turn away from the evil and turn to the good; and he has given us hope and perseverance, the impulse to seek further light, and the stimulus to rise and press forward after every fall.

Such are the materials and the instruments of welfare which God has placed in our hands. Nevertheless, as the ignorant and uncultivated, that is to say, the majority of mankind, prefer happiness to welfare, and desire a short and easy road to it, there have always been persons or parties offering to furnish the commodity thus sought for. Just as there have always been empirical practitioners, offering "infallible" remedies for the ills that flesh is heir to, just so the Catholic and Protestant churches undertake to insure future happiness for you, if you will trustingly submit yourself to their manipulation. The Jew, the Mohammedan, and the Brahmin offer a similar prize as the result of following their infallible systems. These all undertake to give what God, in his wisdom, has chosen to withhold. Infallibility is not to be found among men, and those who trust to men's assumption of it will be disappointed.

For best use of this world, and best preparation for the next, a faithful employment of God's methods, above indicated, seems most reverent, most rational, and most promising.

CATHOLICISM IN CANADA.

The priests of the Catholic Seminary of St. Sulpice, immediately on the heels of the Guilford affair, have precipitated on themselves another difficulty, due, as previously, to an adherence to the letter of the law rather than that generous equity which might be expected of a wealthy religious order.

Two centuries ago they were appointed seigniors of this island of Montreal, and of the Indian district of the Lake of Two Mountains, distant thirty-three miles from this city. The Indians were to enjoy the use of the land, while the Sulpicians were to own it, and instruct and have a general fatherly care over the red men. The treatment of the Indians has latterly been such as to wear about half of them from Romanism to Methodism, which change has made the Sulpicians very indignant. The Indians were notified about two years ago that their little Methodist chapel, at Oka, must be removed by a certain time, or the ground it occupied paid for in the sum of $300.

This was resented, and suit was brought; and, as the defending attorney neglected to appear, the case went by default, and in due legal course the little chapel was razed to the ground by the sheriff.

Instantly a storm of indignation and sympathy filled the land. The technicalities of law were on the side of the priests, but the stronger claims of equity and humanity were emphatically with the Indians, who at the first settlement of Canada were the powerful and efficient allies of the very order which in its wealth and strength is now chastising the red men in their feebleness and ignorance. A great mass meeting in sympathy with the Indians assembled in Mechanic's Hall here, and stirring speeches were made to an enthusiastic audience. There and then it was resolved to form a Protestant Defence Association to watch and resent the continual encroachments of Romish power.

This Association, now strong in men and means, has retained eminent counsel to bring suits against the seminary on behalf of the Oka Indians and on other counts. It is claimed that the cessions of land made to that institution carried with them obligations to instruct all children and relieve all poor in their parishes, which obligations have not been fulfilled. These charges the Sulpicians have answered in the press; but their opponents, unsatisfied, are to make a most searching inquiry into their titles and contracts, and all shortcomings are to be fully and promptly righted in the courts.

As an instance of the parsimony of this wealthy corporation, I may state that a few weeks ago a deputation of a most extensive and respectable Catholic Benevolent Society waited upon it to say that they had personal knowledge of hundreds of destitute families, and solicited aid. After due consultation the paltry sum of $25 was given. It would, however, be wrong not to state that the Seminary and the rest of the Church here support many vast charities; though in some cases ill-conceived, they are all managed with excellent economy. If their protected inmates can underbid, and so demoralize independent workers outside, not a fault can be found with any detail of practical administration. Their managers are trained and fitted for their places. There is one strong, competent will, which all obey. There is no playing with work by amateur devotees, but the carrying out of well-tested plans for the most thorough use of every dollar and resource by people whose life-business it is. These institutions exhibit the rewards of that unity which we who are not of Rome hope and work for. The most notable charity of all is the Foundling Asylum of the Gray Nuns, where two to four babes whose parents are unknown are usually received every day. Commonly neglected at birth, sometimes diseased, and without mother's care, scarcely one in a hundred ever reaches maturity. In point of fact, sending infants there is a most debasing kind of genteel murder, where superstition blunts the edge of conscience and remorse. This institution is recognized as an easy means of shirking parental responsibility by the vicious throughout the entire Province. Yet it is so well-kept as to be one of the stated shows of the city; and withal many pictures adorn the building of that Holy Virgin in whose "Immaculate Conception" all concerned are bound to believe.

Our school system in Quebec is peculiar. There are two boards of direction, one Catholic, the other Protestant. Taxes are levied on real estate, which the payer can give to either board, as he chooses. Besides these taxes, all the schools charge fees, which in some cases are considerable, and the division in management is an injury which appears in many other ways, preventing fusion of the people; for Canada is not a nation, and has little national feeling, but is simply an aggregation of various kinds of emigrants and their children, retaining with tenacity the ideas of the lands of their origin, and only blending here and there to harden at other points by antagonisms. In this city there are some eight English, German, and other national societies, some of them quite influential; and this persistence of European ideas might be greatly weakened if the rising generation blended together at school. The illiteracy of this Province under its priestly rule is astonishing. In proportion to population, three persons in Quebec are unable to read and write for one in the rest of the Dominion. This fact, shown in the official census of 1871, is commended to those of your readers who do not think schools should be purely State affairs.

Throughout our continual religious quarrels, the Witness newspaper is the sturdy Protestant champion. It is quite a curiosity in its way. It was founded in 1800, by John Dougall, as a religious daily, and its columns have always been kept free from all questionable advertisements, an example worthy to be followed by some religious journals of more pretensions. It sells for a cent, is of respectable size, the best paper for news in the city, and a paying enterprise. The founder is now in New York engaged in a similar work. The Witness is the unscrupulous foe of Rome and rum, and belabors in every issue the Man of Sin and the demon of strong drink. It has always given, daily, a set admonition from the Bible, at first called "Green Pastures for the Lord's Flock, by Rev. James Smith." Mr. Smith gave place to Mr. G. Washington Moon, who in turn has been eclipsed by a "Lamp to the Feet," for our safety. That none may be neglected, the "Precious Promises" are also set forth in the French tongue. In denouncing Rome, the Witness often uses language singularly applicable to all dogmatic religion, but the editor does not know it. Last winter it published in attested detail several ugly scandals about the Catholic clergy, and there have been followed up by an ex-priest, who purports to reveal the woful effects of the confessional.

The church, however, is strong enough to maintain a policy of silence, which always leaves these statements ex-parte ones, which fall despised and unbelieved into the ears of her children. However, in hearing these scandals constantly repeated, it is impossible to forget that, if celibacy is a virtue, it is the only one that has not the benefit of inheritance. And yet Roman Catholicism can be transcendentalized, and some of its devotees manage to do it. One such I knew, to whom its infallibility meant only the goodness of a fatherly God, too loving to leave his children uncertain and merely probable guides to truth. The monastic lives of the clergy to him spoke of the revulsion the higher nature of man feels from the lower—the head in the clouds and the feet in the mire. Even the Eucharist was to him the token of the Divine presence with men, manifested in a perfect and absolute way. He could show how his Church, in her preaching, did not dwell with despairing persistence on hell, but rather on the transient and useful flames of purgatory, and he could contrast the rigor of a Protestant Sabbath with the kindly freedom of a Sunday in his communion.

But such spirits are rare, and the condition of the rank and file of the Church is not to be raised by them, but by an internal impulse for expansion, freedom, and individuality, which can only come in the due course of evolution. J. G. H.

MONTREAL, Jan. 31, 1876.

SPIRIT MATERIALIZATIONS.

[We have received a copy of the appended circular, with a request that we should "make some scientific comments on Materialization." But we fear that the only "scientific comments" of which the case admits are already made in this circular itself.—ED.]

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Jan. 25, 1876.

We, the undersigned, being residents of several States, having been attracted to this city for the purpose of investigating the truths of Spiritualism, as demonstrated by the alleged facts of MATERIALIZATION, as now transpiring through the mediumship of Mrs. Anna Stewart, of this city, do, after a full and careful investigation, continued several days, as far as privileges were granted us for examination (no test conditions being allowed), unhesitatingly declare to the world that we honestly believe the so-called materializations to be MERE FABRICATIONS, deserving the condemnation of all true, honest, and enlightened investigators. We regret very much to be compelled to make this statement public, but the voice of truth and justice demands it at our hands, and we cannot flinch from the duty imposed.

The glorious truths of Spiritualism, so grandly portrayed in the past, urge us to this unpleasant duty.

Signed by

DAVID S. CADWALDER, Wilmington, Del.
H. P. STOCKBRIDGE, Fort Wayne, Ind.
MRS. H. MORSE, State Lecturer of Iowa.
R. PARKINSON, Oshkosh Wis.
E. G. THOMAS, Huntington, Ind.
W. R. POTTER, Circleville, Ohio.
S. R. FOWLER, Circleville, Ohio.
NELSON RELENNBERGER, Chillicothe, Ohio.
H. FOCHLER, Pennsylvania.
ALFRED HALDERMAN, Hagerstown, Ind.
LEMUEL RUDY, Hagerstown, Ind.

NOTE.—These last two gentlemen were not present at the consultation and adoption of the protest, but subsequently signed it, having had equal opportunities for investigation.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 12.

Mrs. B. B. Newhall, $3.20; Cash, 30 cents; Lydia M. Plummer, $10; Geo. H. Withers, $1.50; F. E. Nipher, $2; W. A. Clarke, 10 cents; James Williams, $3.20; E. Bissell, $3.20; R. W. Jess, $3.20; M. L. Hawley, $3.20; H. Baethig, $3.20; S. Winkworth, $4.30; Seavey, Foster & Bowman, $29.25; M. Milkman, $3.27; S. H. Winkley, $3.20; C. F. Hardon, $3.20; P. V. Baich, $3.20; A. McKee, $5.45; J. S. Boyden, $3.30; E. S. Ketcham, $6; I. N. Soper & Co., $4.50; T. Bush, $4; H. K. Rogers, 50 cents; K. M. Scott, 7 cents; B. P. Elliott, 50 cents; Mrs. S. D. Curtis, $3.20; W. M. Farnestock, 75 cents; J. R. Brown, $3.20; W. F. Freeman, $3.20; E. J. Hamlet, $3.20; James Nye, $3; P. Sidebotham, $3; Nina Moore, $3.25; W. Hanford, $3.25; H. Molineaux, $3.20; J. Bruckner, $2.50; A. Vacher, $11.42; G. L. Clark, $0.40; G. H. Lewis, 40 cents; E. H. Adams, 60 cents; T. B. Collins, $3.20; Geo. Riker, $1.10; K. L. Houghton, $1.50; D. Hutcheon, 10 cents; C. M. Nye, 25 cents; W. Kelly, 50 cents; S. Warbase, $1.25; A. Braach, 45 cents; C. B. Deyo, $3.25; Geo. Dimmock, $4.40; Geo. Molnar, $23.90; Mrs. H. E. Perkins, $30; C. B. Holloway, 30 cents; F. Johnson, $3.20; Mrs. E. C. Spooner, 30 cents; Cash, 20 cents; W. P. Barr, $3.10; M. H. Parker, $1.50; J. H. Southwick, 50 cents; M. R. Doolittle, $3; Mrs. C. Shattou, $3.20; L. A. Duhring, $3.20; M. L. Greene, $3.20; S. M. Whistler, $1.60; C. F. Baxter, $3.20; W. C. Little, $3.20; F. Cheney, $3.20; R. G. How, $3.20; Mrs. I. A. Koch, $3.20; Chas. Voysey, $37.58; E. M. Wyckoff, 10 cents; Ira W. Castle, 10 cents.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

MY FRIEND AND I.

"Let's slug our noble selves."—Burns.
We were schoolboys; and so, sketching,
Let me pause now while I trace
Schemes of empire and dominion
In his calm and Jove-like face.

He was truly born a poet
And a maker in his way,—
Thought his own thought, not another's;
And he said it his own way.

He was very proud and haughty,
So he could not well be vain;
For his peers were men of genius,
And those heroes of old strain

Whom the modern world beholds not;
But they live on Plutarch's page,
And they charmed him with the wisdom,
Of the Stoic and the Sage.

Master of himself and fortune,
He had lofty self-esteem;
Bore his head high, like Olympus,
Carrying all the gods in dream.

Imperturbable he sat,
Like the gods who ruled the world;
Brooding his great thoughts unuttered,
Sphinx with wings about him furled.

Was he, then, without a weakness?
Nay, his heart, a silver shrine,
Fumed with incense of some woman,
Cared he not if mine or thine.

But his mind had space and freedom
Like the day or night's profound;
It contained the earth and heavens,
Turning all the stars around.

I, who know his worth and greatness,
Know that proud star will not set,
Till among the Sons of Morning
He will sing with Lander yet.

Fame indeed will hail the poet,
Not a literary thing,
When this Phoenix from his ashes
Shall arise one day and sing.

Not in vain the master made him;
Not in vain the lyre and lute;
When the fools are tired of scoffing,
He will sing, and not be mute.

But no matter for the singing;
If the music be unborn,
Yet the Memnonian Statue holds it,
Waiting for the touch of Morn.

Not upon life's surface floating
Do we catch the undertone;
In his deeper music hidden
Is some murmur of my own.

For our days ran on together;
On the trees we carved our names;
Conned our Latin, read the poets,—
Mutual studies, ends, and aims.

And his generous soul allowed me
Still the larger half and claim;
Talked about "a splendid future,"
And the temple gates of fame.

What I might have been I know not,
Had I heeded his wise words;
Took the bit of self-control,
And with foemen measured swords;

Had I summoned Resolution
As a benchman to my side;
Had I boldly grappled Danger,
And thrust Violence aside;

Dashed from Pleasure's hand the wine-cup,
And the jewelled box of chance;
Trod their sorceries under foot
In the nation's Pyrrhic dance;

Had in me with lofty aims
Soul of constancy been found;
Had I scaled the heights of Valor,
And swung Fortune fairly round;

The great object of ambition
Had I grasped with falcon eyes,
And, like eagle on the quarry,
Swooped to carry off the prize;

Had I charged my words with thunder
O'er the people's heads to roll,
Sounding Freedom's holy anthem
On the organ-stop of soul;

Had I sat like Jove to lighten,
Launched the bolts of Power along,
Smiting down to heaps of ruin
Hoary battlements of Wrong;

Had the Muses rocked my cradle,
When the strong wings were outgrown,
I had dared to take possession
Of their silver-mounted throne;

Where the blind old Homer sits,
Equal station I had won
In the proud and shining gateway
Of the Palace of the Sun.

No; my friend had worn that laurel,
Had his mighty wings unfurled;
Now Wait Whitman is our Homer,
And the Bard of the New World.

Well, what harm is there in dreaming,
In my low and altered state?
See! my youthful visions crumbled
As white ashes in the grate.

J. B.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10, 1876.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 17, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

IT IS STATED by the daily press that several clergymen of New York city are "making arrangements for the publication of a weekly newspaper to advocate the keeping of the Bible in the public schools. The paper is to be called the Conflict."

SAYS A new subscriber: "Enclosed please find one year's subscription on behalf of the writer for your able paper—'THE INDEX to Perdition,' as it has been dogmatically styled recently by the leading Catholic organ of America, the Tablet. A 'man of sorrows and acquainted with grief' till its arrival (dating back from the new year), yours truly, ———."

TWO EDITIONS of Mr. D. Y. Kilgore's strong pamphlet on the Bible in the Schools have been exhausted, and the third, with additions, will be soon ready. Price ten cents; address "Liberal League, 605 Walnut Street, Philadelphia." One hundred copies will be sent to other Liberal Leagues for five dollars. This brochure will make a capital campaign document, and it ought to be widely circulated.

A BOUND VOLUME of THE INDEX, either for 1871 or 1872, will be given as a premium to each new subscriber who remits $3.20 for a year's subscription, or to each old subscriber who remits $3.20 for a new subscriber obtained by means of his or her efforts. The volume will be sent by express at the recipient's expense; but no volume will be sent at all unless it is claimed at the time of making the remittance. This offer can only remain in force a little while, as the supply of volumes is small; but it is one which those who know the value of these volumes will hasten to improve.

ANOTHER Liberal League is now reported which was formed a year ago last September, but of which we were never before notified. The President is Mr. Theodore A. Cookingham, and the Secretary Mr. Lee G. Graham. "It has struggled hard to maintain its position amidst the surrounding conservatism," writes our informant, "and is doing its part well. La Vergne Gardner, of Towanda, Pa., did much towards establishing this organization, and its members mean to maintain the ground taken as ably and truly as possible. Our meetings are held on the fourth Sunday of each month. Our last meeting was addressed by Reuben Halstead, from Cayuga County, N. Y. He is a farmer, making no pretension of being a public speaker, but his reasonings won commendation even from the most extreme Orthodox present."

A THOUGHTFUL gentleman recently remarked, with reference to Kepler's laws and their great beauty, that he could not find laws of such beauty in the moral world, and it troubled him greatly: the poor orphan was robbed of all he had, and left miserable, while the robber escaped and had a good time. Remembering, however, that Kepler's laws are only ideal laws after all, never exactly illustrated by actual planetary motions, it seems to us that scientific ethics furnish abstract principles of equal philosophical beauty, however painfully they are marred in human practice. For instance, the essence of all ethics based on scientific conceptions may be found in these three principles: (1) all moral relations are social relations; (2) all objective duties of one person are subjective rights of another person or of all other persons taken collectively, and vice versa; and (3) all rights and duties are simple equalities, i. e., equalities, and can always be expressed by moral equations analogous precisely to mathematical equations. To one who can comprehend the limitless scope and profound significance of these principles, they possess all the magnificence and exquisite beauty of Kepler's laws.

SOCIETY THROUGH SELFHOOD.

The very remarkable letter which Mr. James contributes to THE INDEX this week is exactly what was wanted to clear up, at least in our own mind, all doubt as to his essential meaning; and the numerous readers who have expressed their interest in his former communications will find this third letter to be one which will richly reward their most patient study and meditation. It is possible that they may not always be certain of the import of single passages; Mr. James' style is bewildering by its very affluence, and sometimes, as we must in candor confess, reacts on his thought in a way to render it not a little difficult of comprehension. Nevertheless, no intelligent student of religious problems can fail to catch the general drift and tenor of his thought, or to find his letter extraordinarily rich in suggestion, and indicative of a religious experience of no common kind.

Mr. James himself believes that he dissents fundamentally from our own philosophy of religion, and will very likely remain of the same opinion still even after reading our present article; but that fact will not shake in the least our now definitely formed conclusion that the difference between us is not very great. We have not enough of the peculiar "selfhood" he detests to expect, much less to ask, that he should make a thorough and exhaustive study of our own writings on this subject; yet, if he should do so, he would be constrained to change totally his present conception of the meaning of that definition of religion which has called out his present thought-stimulating letters. He says, for instance:—

"It must be palpable enough by this time, I conceive, that our disagreement in regard to the meaning and evil of selfhood is mainly due to the fact that I am bent upon viewing selfhood as a great historic phenomenon of the mind, having only universal issues; while you contemplate it as a fact of mere biographic interest, of purely private science, a mere chronic experience of some particular memory. I regard it, in short, philosophically, or as a generic fact; you scientifically, or as a specific fact. This difference in our point of view—I regarding it as a living or spiritual experience of the mind wholly, you regarding it at most as a possession of the dead or reflective memory—must be fatal to any final good understanding betwixt us, unless we can manage to put it away."

That the first of our original Fifty Affirmations—"Religion is the effort of Man to perfect himself"—carried any such cribbed or petty significance as Mr. James here discovers in it, is an error quite sufficiently corrected by the thirty-seventh of the same Fifty Affirmations; namely, "The great ideal end of Free Religion is the perfection or complete development of Man,—the race serving the individual, the individual serving the race." Nothing could be plainer than that the "perfection" originally contemplated by our definition was a race-perfection, and not merely an individual self-perfection; and whoever should take the trouble to read with any care what we have written and re-written, even to redundancy, in explanation of this much-criticised definition, would see at a glance that Mr. James, so far as he is a critic in this case, combats an "illusion,"—which, as he well argues, cannot be annihilated because it possesses no real existence. But we are less anxious now to defend our own definition of religion than we are to understand clearly what Mr. James means by his; and we pass on.

Having defined religion as "a deathless divine instinct in man to despise, disown, and reject himself utterly," Mr. James took the ground that "deliverance from self," not perfection of self, is the sole lawful object of religious aspiration and effort. In order to ascertain precisely what he meant by this, we then inquired (we made no "charge," as he inadvertently phrases it) whether this "deliverance from self" is deliverance from all being and existence [the gospel of annihilation], or deliverance from a totally depraved and corrupted nature [the gospel of regeneration], or deliverance from the selfish misuse and misdirection of a nature essentially sweet and sound [the gospel of perfection or evolution]. These three gospels, in our opinion, exhaust absolutely all the possibilities of the case. But Mr. James thinks otherwise, rejects now all three in turn, and proceeds to elucidate what he considers to be a fourth possibility, but what we consider to be in fact the third, clothed in language which only partially disguises it.

Holding the selfhood in us to be a "sheer illusion, without a corresponding reality," Mr. James discards the idea of annihilation as altogether unnecessary; he would simply "replace the illusion of selfhood" in our minds by "the truth of a spiritual Divine creation, which means the truth of a perfect Divine society, fellowship, or equality of all men with each, and of each with all." What instantly arrests our attention in this sentence is the unperceived retention of the selfhood after its imagined removal. A "society" in which "all men" still continue to exist, necessarily as selves, is not a society without selfhood. If Mr. James supposes he can abolish selfhood, yet retain society, he manifestly uses the term selfhood in a sense so purely technical and peculiar to himself as to be absolutely meaningless to the rest of mankind, unless defined with the utmost exactitude. When he goes on to describe this "perfect Divine society" [note this word perfect by the way] as one in which there shall be "complete identity" of personal interests with the interests of the entire race, he beautifully delineates the social state at which our Fifty Affirmations directly pointed; he all the while assumes the coexistence of individual "selves," in the ordinary meaning of the word, and he inculcates the perfecting of his "society" by the establishment among these "selves," or members, of a complete identity of personal and social interests. That is precisely the "perfection of self" which he imagines he is opposing, but here explicitly advocates.

Next, rejecting the doctrine of a depraved nature in man, Mr. James "attributes all manner of righteousness to human nature," at the same time that he verbally discards the "selfhood." This, too, is a manifest retention of the idea and fact of "self," as commonly understood; for "human nature" is nothing except as existent in human beings, who again are nothing, and cannot possibly cherish any "majestic social ends," except as existent "selves." What must become of all "unitary consciousness" and all "sentiment of unity," on which Mr. James justly lays such supreme emphasis, if there is nothing but a group of non-existent phantoms or "illusions" to be thus united? Can anything be clearer than that the word selfhood does not stand in his mind for that essence of individuality in us, constituting us persons, which the word represents to all ordinary minds? Certainly we cannot permit a mere difference of terminology to hide the substantial identity of our friend's thought and our own, or postpone that "final good understanding" which, we are persuaded, is our mutual right to enjoy.

But, thirdly, Mr. James concludes that we hold to a "doctrine of moral culture" which "sets a directly false issue before the mind as the problem of human destiny." This conclusion is certainly erroneous, if it rests on no stronger evidence than is here presented. The "perfection of self" at which we aim has nothing to do with "self-righteousness"—with that pride of egotism which alienates a man from his fellows or isolates him in the moral universe. "You obviously conceive," says Mr. James, "that our veritable life or being is constituted by selfhood or personality." We hold to no conception that would cut the roots of our physical or spiritual dependence upon the Universal All (be it named God, or Nature, or what one will); we cherish no dream of absolute self-subsistence, nor did we ever hear of any one that did; we seek no perfection that does not consist in the attainment of larger power and purer purpose to bless the race to which we belong. "The more," says Mr. James, "we disown all private ends of action, and cultivate only public ends, . . . and acknowledge society as the beginning, the middle, and the end of our aspiration, THE MORE WE COME INTO OUR TRUE LIFE OR BEING." Amen, and a thousand times amen! That is the pith of all pure religion as we conceive it, the very essence of that self-perfection at which it aims; and Mr. James will strive in vain to establish a difference between his thought and ours, so long as he thus lucidly and emphatically proclaims, in evident unconsciousness of the fact, the very gospel which THE INDEX has been preaching from its initial number.

Nevertheless, the war of extermination which he has declared against the very idea of selfhood, when it is so transparently evident that he actually describes by that word nothing more vital than the spirit of selfishness, or the misuse of self, leads him to make some exaggerated declarations which, unless modified, we consider decidedly irreligious, in our own sense of that word. We are told to "give over cultivating or improving ourselves, and devote all our energies to the promotion of human society, fellowship, equality." Why, the very first condition of promoting these things is to "cultivate and improve ourselves." What is true education for, but to make the most of ourselves for the sake of others? There is, it is true, a species of culture which looks to self-aggrandizement, self-glorification, or self-gratification, as its own ultimate aim; but it is the religion only of souls so small as to rattle noisily in a nutshell. The generous thirst for personal power, opportunity, knowledge, influence, culture, for the sake of the social good which these things alone can accomplish, is the most religious of all impulses; and he who totally lacks it is no more religious than a cabbage. If Mr. James really objects to this sort of self-perfection—if he would institute a general decay of all enthusiasm for culture of all sorts, regardless of the motives which may either divinize or diabolize it,—then verily we do differ from him irreconcilably. Want of moral culture, both social and individual, is what America is half perishing from to-day—the culture which shall convince the people that cheating, and lying, and robbing, and all unscrupulous money-getting are sins against self and against society which reduce human life to the level of a free fight among the vermin that infest a mouldy cheese. Will not Mr. James concede at once the impossibility of any "perfect Divine Society" whose perfection shall not consist in the perfection of its individual members? The country needs in every citizen a prouder personal integrity, a more virile manliness, a more incorruptible faith, and honor, and conscience, as the first condition of civic virtue or happiness; and if such "selfhood" as this is to be despised or disowned in the name of religion, then the quicker religion is banished from the planet the better for mankind. It would entail absolute social putrefaction to abolish such selfhood as this; and we positively refuse to believe, in the light of his great emphasis on a "perfect Divine society" in which "public justice" is confessedly to be reconciled with "private freedom," that Mr. James has the first motions of a wish to abolish it. On the contrary, his metaphor of the chick luminously teaches that it is the essence of religion to struggle out of the selfishness of a crude individualism into the unselfishness, or "higher life," of an existence dedicated to the universal or social interests of mankind. This is to preach the gospel of human evolution or "self-perfection" in its only natural and simple sense; and, whether Mr. James is prepared to admit it or not, our readers will easily perceive that this is what he stirringly preaches, not opposes, in his present letter.

In short, it is not society against selfhood, but society through selfhood, that the world needs; and, if Mr. James seems to say otherwise, it is only because his terminology is peculiar to himself. To maintain that society could for an instant exist without the self-units or individual members that must compose it, would be to lay down the mathematical proposition that $0+0+0\dots+0=1$. On the contrary, the existence and perfection of society must depend absolutely on the existence and perfection of the individual members or "selves" of which it is composed; and the gospel of human self-perfection, rejected by Mr. James through a mere misunderstanding of it, is literally the soul, inspiration, beauty, truth, of his own philosophy.

Only in one way can this conclusion be avoided: namely, to hold that he intends to reduce "society" to the same phenomenal or illusory unreality to which he reduces "selfhood," and to leave nothing really existent but a Divine creative activity amusing itself, in the vacuities of infinite space and time, with the phantasmagoria of a magic lantern. The unanswerable argument of our criticism is that society and selfhood must be equally real or equally unreal. If the former, Mr. James teaches the very philosophy of religion he seems to attack; if the latter, he abolishes all human selfhood and society at a blow, in order to establish the existence of a Divine Selfhood of limitless proportions, mocking the victims of his power with a false imagination that their human life possesses some degree of reality, while in truth nothing exists but an Infinite Egotist playing a game of solitaire in the eternities. Such a philosophy would be the merest burlesque of religion, or worse; and it is impossible that Mr. James should entertain it. The only alternative, however, is to conclude that human society and human selfhood are equal realities, mutually dependent on each other, and each attaining its own perfection through the slowly advancing perfection of the other; and this, we are now convinced, expresses in our phraseology exactly what Mr. James really intends to express by his own. If the principle of selfhood is hateful, unlovely, and unreal in man, it can be no less so in God; nor can its intrinsic deformity be at all lessened by blowing it up to illimitable proportions. On the contrary, if there is any truth or beauty in the idea of an Infinite Divine Self, its truth and beauty are not destroyed when reflected in the human soul, like the image of the sun in a dew-drop.

THOMAS PAINE AND WILLIAM BLAKE.

This little addendum to Mr. Chadwick's late lecture on Paine will interest many:—

DEAR ARBOT:—

A friend calls my attention to a very interesting passage in Gilchrist's Life of William Blake, Pictor Ignotus, bearing upon his relations with Thomas Paine, and showing that it was to his thoughtfulness and energy that Paine owed his escape from "The Friends of Order" in 1792, when he got off to Calais only twenty minutes before the arrival of government officials to arrest him. The whole passage—pp. 93, 94, 95—is full of interest. Certainly Thomas Paine, as little of a transcendentalist as ever lived, and William Blake as much of one, were strange yoke-fellows, and that they could appreciate each other was a remarkable circumstance.

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

THE NORTHAMPTON LIBERAL LEAGUE.

Our League is at length fairly under way, and with encouraging prospects. A word with reference to its brief history and mode of operation may be of some interest.

Think of this Liberal League movement as we may, estimate as we may the ends at which it aims, it must be confessed that its origin is due to the editor of this paper. It is his idea. It sprung from his brain as Minerva from the head of Jupiter. Such was the case in regard to ours. Not unto us, not unto us, oh friend A., but unto thee be all the praise. It is the voice of the faithful and far-discerning watchman upon the walls of the modern Zion of rationalism and intellectual liberty, summoning those within its walls to vigilance and self-protection. It was our agreeable fortune, some three months since, to be favored with a visit (to borrow still further Scriptural and Christian phraseology) from the evangelist referred to of the new gospel of enlightenment and freedom, who touched us with a live coal from the altar of his enthusiasm. What a pity there are not more of such evangelists—that they cannot be substituted for the other class (Moody and Sankey, for example) who bear the name! In other words, he addressed us upon the subject of the Liberal League movement,—made clear to us its necessity and principles, and our duty as professed liberals. Our League was the result of this visit; without it there is good reason to doubt whether it would ever have had an existence.

There must always be considerable time consumed in tedious preliminaries in the formation of a contemplated organization. Preambles, constitution and by-laws, conditions of membership, committees, election of officers, are a seemingly profitless weariness of the flesh and spirit, the desert passage to the Promised Land. It was known that there were many in our community who were inclined to the taxation of church-property, and some to the removal of the Bible from the schools, among those regarded of the Orthodox fold; and at our first meeting a few of these were present. We took up the "Demands of Liberalism" for consideration, as a basis of organization. Our Orthodox friends were rather reticent. There was considerable hitching and halting over the different "Demands," but we glided over them, almost imperceptibly, until we got to number eight. It reads: "We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of 'Christian' morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty." The Rev. Mr. —, the Unitarian clergyman present, objected to the word "Christian" in the above connection. It stuck in his throat like Macbeth's "Amen." He would prefer "sectarian morality," which was conceded. It is a curious circumstance that the only objections to the "Demands" came from our Unitarian friends. Of the three constituents of which our gathering was chiefly composed, it might be said that the representatives of Orthodoxy manifested a modest and pensive silence; that the Unitarians were disposed to what they deemed discreet qualification and trimming; while the Radicals preferred the "Demands" should remain unaltered.

It was somewhat difficult to secure the officers most desirable. Those who had assured us of their sympathy, when solicited, responded like some of old time on a certain occasion: "I pray thee have me excused." What tests such appeals often are of one's independence, courage, and sincerity!

There was again a brief suspense of progress, in consequence of some demurring and controversy in regard to a name. It was thought by some who were timorous, and anxious to secure Orthodox cooperation and sympathy, that our adopted one, "Liberal," would be prejudicial. Accordingly, on a dark and inclement evening, when the attendance was less than usual, the word "Equitable" succeeded in displacing "Liberal." But as such action would, nominally at least, have cut us off from fellowship with leagues already established, it did not win the ready acquiescence of our more radical members. Moreover, as it was discovered to be irregular, the scales were turned again, and our former name was resumed. The flag which now floats at our mast-head is the "Liberal League," and henceforth we trust it may continue there. Ecce signum! By this we hope to conquer.

We have already had three public discussions, with growing interest. As we have taken considerable pains to have these meetings adequately announced, and as our local papers have given us extended reports of them, the attendance increases. The question before us has been the taxation of church-property, with a very pronounced radical on one side, and an Orthodox deacon on the other, to lead each evening in the debate. The Episcopal clergyman of the town has also been a participant. It is quite probable that the question named will run for one or two evenings more, when the Bible in the schools will be considered. These discussions will be followed by petitions in harmony with the "Demands of Liberalism," to which signatures will be solicited.

And this is in the town in which the powerful and relentless logic of the preaching of Jonathan Edwards once agonized the hearts, and swayed, bewildered, and prostrated the intellect of men, with its doctrines of the insignificance and contemptibleness of human nature, the awful majesty of Jehovah, and the terrors of the wrath to come. It is indeed true that time changes all things. D. H. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—In the current number of the Fortnightly Review there is an essay by Mr. Lionel Tollemache on "Courage and Death," sparkling all over with anecdote and illustration, and on the whole clear and well-reasoned. It was the boast of a Christian apostle that Jesus had "delivered those who, through fear of death, were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Mr. Tollemache convincingly argues that the fear of death has been enormously increased by the dogmas of Christianity, and that Christendom shows to considerable disadvantage in this respect by the side of ancient and modern Paganism. With singular candor, however, he calls attention at the close of the essay to the moral value of the fear thus engendered by Christian creeds, and points to the higher virtue of Christian peoples in proof of its past wholesome effect. He also warns us against a too sudden and crude uprooting of this fear lest the morality founded upon it should be ruined in its fall. I do not intend to give your readers a résumé of this most interesting article, which they should peruse at length for themselves. But it occurred to me that I might say something on my own account to help to remove the wide-spread delusion regarding the causes of the fear of, and indifference to, death.

Fear of death is mainly due to speciality of constitution, and is as much a natural emotion in some persons as indifference to death is in others. No doubt, it is inherited, and runs, like longevity or its opposite, in families. It is therefore a feature more marked in some tribes than in others, and may be traced back to the circumstances and surroundings of life. Wherever life has been extremely painful or its tenure precarious, indifference to death has always been prevalent. On the other hand, wherever life has been comparatively easy and enjoyable, free from constant dangers, and tolerably well-secured, there we invariably find the prevalence of the fear of death. Ease of life, gradually merging into luxury, is favorable to the exultation of nervous sensibility; a state in which the capacity for enjoyment is heightened, and by an inevitable consequence the sensibility to pain, and the dread of dissolution. The greater the enjoyment of life the closer we cling to it, and the more painful is the wrench of the last hour.

Those who have had at all a wide experience among the dying—of various beliefs or non-beliefs—will bear testimony to the fact that much more depends on individual constitution and circumstances than on any particular creed held by the dying person.

More remarkable still is the fact that in nine cases out of ten where there is a strong fear of death the patient recovers; while among the sick who do not fear death at all, or rather long to die, the sickness is as frequently fatal. I could give you pages of illustration if required. One case I must mention of a woman apparently dying of a bad typhoid fever. She was pronounced by the doctors as in a most dangerous condition, and one of them quite despaired of her recovery. But her fever was aggravated by her fearful horror of hell-fire. She had been brought up a rigid Calvinist, and believed herself to be predestined to be damned. Nothing at the time could shake her awful belief in her own doom; she thought nothing of her pains, but only screamed perpetually about her poor lost soul. I did and said what I could, you may be sure. But all in vain. She was dying and falling into the flames of hell. Fortunately for her, no persuasion would reduce her to a state of calm; and she absolutely recovered, as I still think, owing to the effort of Nature to escape the horrible doom before her. It is more than possible that, if I had then succeeded in reconciling her to her departure, she would have died right away. After her recovery she renounced her old belief with ratiude, and many times thanked God that she had lived to trust in his mercy. Still, the fear of death, in its worst aspects, is not that last terror which comes from being brought face to face with it, but is the constantly gnawing apprehension by which some are all their lifetime afflicted. It is for such cases imperative to be supported and fortified through the mind by consoling and hopeful views of the life to come. Our mad-houses are full of such persons as I describe, upon whose souls has fallen the blight of a fear of hell-fire. And it cannot be questioned that those who are naturally oppressed with a dread of death may be made better or worse by the beliefs which they may be induced to embrace.

There are three broad alternatives:—

1. The Orthodox heaven or hell (with fearful odds on the latter).
2. There is annihilation.
3. The Universalist doctrine of final good and happiness for all.

The first of these is proved to be unspeakably mischievous to the timid.

The second is unspeakably depressing to persons of warm affections and of an aspiring nature.

The third, if only true, is unspeakably encouraging and strengthening to the timid, to the affectionate, and to the aspiring; and even to those who are passionately fond of life, it promises in death itself an entrance into a nobler and happier existence.

As a moral agent, it may fail to influence base natures; but as a compensation it will unspeakably aid in the improvement of all those who had any good nature to work upon. It affords new and higher motive for self-culture. Instead of looking for crowns and harps of gold and new Jerusalems, etc., etc., the believer in progress will only look for self-improvement in all noble qualities, for increased powers, for benevolent action, and grander sympathies. The fruition of quite noble desires and aspirations is the only reward held out—the only reward which will satisfy.

The fear of hell is dropping out of our list of horrors, despite Moody and Sankey-dom; let us hope that those who are free from it will so live that its once fierce advocates will not regret that it is gone forever.

I am, sir, very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S. E., Jan. 15, 1876.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

Reference was made in a recent number of THE INDEX (Jan. 20) to charges of "irregularity" in connection with the management of the Boston and Albany Railroad, brought especially against the President, Mr. C. W. Chapin, and also against a former State Director, Mr. Moses Kimball, by one of the present State Directors, Mr. F. B. Hayes. Since then, the Legislature has ordered an investigation. In the meantime, however, the Boston and Albany Railroad has held its annual meeting, and, by request of the President, the Vice-President, Mr. D. W. Lincoln, gave to the stockholders a full explanation of the matters referred to by Mr. Hayes. From this explanation, which is very ingenious, it is apparent that the statements of Mr. Hayes are essentially correct. Mr. Chapin purchased at a low price a majority of the shares of an incomplete and non-paying road (the Ware River Railroad), and afterwards leased this road to the Boston and Albany Railroad, at a large rental, for 999 years, making a profit of several hundred thousand dollars by the transaction. The statement of Mr. Lincoln that the business was carried on with a Committee of the Ware River Railroad, and not with Mr. Chapin, is probably true, but is nevertheless an evasion of the point at issue, for Mr. Chapin owned a majority of the stock, and was (as also was his son-in-law) a member of the Board of Directors, and no Committee, of course, could lease the road without his full knowledge and approval. Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Kimball, and other officers of the Boston and Albany Railroad were also benefited pecuniarily by the same transaction, being holders of Ware River stock. The specific charge brought against Mr. Kimball—that, while acting as a State Director, he profited by a contract with the Boston and Albany Railroad—was also admitted and ingeniously defended. Now, undoubtedly, these transactions may have been strictly legal, and, in the estimation of many persons, strictly moral as well; but so long as this kind of conduct is approved by men of wealth and of prominence, no one need be surprised if other men who desire the prominence which comes with wealth are detected in defalcation, or in raising money on forged notes.

A Brooklyn clergyman, by the name of Bell, is on trial for indecent conduct toward "a lady member" of his congregation. The clergyman whose conduct is thus called in question was formerly a pugilist, and the record of his life is to be found of course chiefly in the back numbers of sporting periodicals. The apotheosis of reformed men by many good-natured and pious persons arises doubtless from an unreflecting sentimentalism, which, however pleasing or innocent in certain aspects, is very liable to become disgusting and dangerous in some of its manifestations. To reform a pugilist, or a drunkard, or a gambler, or a brothel-keeper, is, of course, a very commendable act; but to set him up afterwards as a public teacher or preacher is a very unwise and detestable act, no matter how thorough may be his reformation. The man who has paraded within the ropes of a prize ring, or who has kept a dance-house, or a rat-plot, may undoubtedly be reformed and become a decent member of society, and few would refuse to lend him a helping hand in the effort to gain a livelihood by some more respectable occupation; but whoever encourages one of these reformed men to become a clergyman, or a public teacher of any kind, should, in pugilistic parlance, be "countered on the noddle" until he gets a little common sense. It may be all very well to kill the fatted calf when the prodigal comes home; but we have yet to learn that the prodigal has any right to lecture the elder brother on the propriety of the latter's conduct, or to become the moral guide of his younger sisters.

Mr. Bowen, having failed to induce the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church to agree to refer his charges against Mr. Beecher to the decision of three impartial persons, has been granted ten days in which to prepare his proofs for the inspection of the Committee. At the last Friday evening prayer-meeting Mr. Beecher, "with immense vehemence and in thundering tones," denounced Mr. Bowen as "a slanderer and a liar." Mr. Tilton, as we already know, has long been "a slanderer and a liar"; Mr. Moulton is "a slanderer and a liar"; Mrs. Moulton is "a slanderer and a liar"; a great many other people are slanderers and liars; and now Mr. Bowen's name goes upon the same list forevermore. The church connected with the Andover Theological Seminary is said to have invited Plymouth Church to call a mutual council in order to investigate the truth of the charges brought against Mr. Beecher, but we fear that the Andover Theological Seminary is only a pernicious nest of slanderers and liars to whom Plymouth Church should pay no attention. In fact, we do not see how it is possible for any person to express a desire to know anything about the private character of Henry Ward Beecher without becoming immediately "a slanderer and a liar."

The names of six hundred literary and scientific gentlemen are said to be appended to a petition asking Congress to admit free of duty all books printed in other than the English, Latin, and Greek languages. This petition may be very good as far as it goes, and should it be granted by Congress, students of French, German, Italian and other languages would have reason to feel thankful. But why should not books in the English language also be admitted free of duty? English publications sell in our book-stores at very high prices, and thousands of would-be readers of important English works are now obliged to await the appearance of an American reprint before they can gratify their desire. We are aware of the complications by which this subject is beset in the absence of an International Copyright Law; and we welcome this petition (the precise terms of which we have not seen, and the purport of which we may therefore mistake) as likely to call attention to a subject which is at present in sad need of righteous legislation. The day will yet come, it is to be hoped, when the people of this country will regret the injustice which our laws have so long inflicted upon English publishers and authors, as well as upon those of our own country.

In the House, early last week, Mr. Henry L. Pierce introduced a resolution, which was agreed to, directing the Committee on Foreign Affairs "to ascertain what action has been taken by the Executive Department of the government in relation to the connection of the United States Minister at the Court of St. James with the directory of the so-called Emma Mine." The Committee on Foreign Affairs subsequently appointed a sub-committee to conduct the inquiry. The House also passed a bill repealing the Bankrupt Act, and both Houses approved a bill providing for the immediate payment of Alabama claims. The most important debates in the House were upon the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill, which finally passed almost unanimously, and in nearly the form in which it was reported by the Committee. The Bill abolishes a number of foreign missions and consulates, and provides (unwisely, we think) for a universal reduction of ministerial and consular salaries. The Senate listened to eulogies upon the late Mr. Ferry, of Connecticut; passed a bill extending the time for the construction and completion of the Northern Pacific Railroad; and passed also, by a vote of 41 to 15, the Centennial Appropriation Bill, so that the Centennial Commissioners may now draw upon the United States Treasury for $1,500,000. Among Congressional proceedings may be mentioned also Mr. Morrison's discharge of Dr. Hambleton, clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means, on suspicion of having named a son (since deceased) after John Wilkes Booth, the assassin of President Lincoln.

The English Parliament was opened by the Queen in person, the matters of most general interest in the Queen's speech, and in the subsequent discussions in Parliament, being the present relation of England to Turkey and the purchase by England of the Khedive's share of the Suez Canal. Roumania has refused to pay tribute to the Porte, on the ground that tribute is due only for protection from foreign invasion, which protection the Porte is unable to give. This action of Roumania touches the Sultan on a very tender spot—his love for money,—and if he should attempt to enforce the payment of tribute, Herzegovina would have the active support of an ally of some strength. The Porte has formally agreed to all the most important requirements of Count Andrassy's letter, but it is doubtful if the insurgents are now to be pacified by any promises of reform. In Spain, the Carlists appear to have suffered a defeat, and the result of the elections (which are said to have been conducted with an amount of intimidation, bribery, and false counting which would do credit to Louisiana or to certain Wards in New York City) gives the Ministry a majority altogether too large for healthy legislation. Dr. Levysen, a Prussian journalist, has been expelled from Austria, where he was acting as correspondent of several German newspapers, for the crime of writing articles which were supposed to hint at the instability of the Empire. It seems impossible as yet, outside of English-speaking peoples, for any nation to get along without a rigid censorship of the Press—even the new Republic of France furnishing no exception to this rule.

Communications.

A NOTABLE NEW BOOK.

PILGRIM-MEMORIES: or, Travel and Discussion in the Birth-Countries of Christianity with the late Henry Thomas Buckle. By John S. Stuart-Glennie, M. A., Barrister-at-Law. London: Longmans, Green & Co. 1875.

This volume of Pilgrim-Memories is the first of a series, entitled "The Modern Revolution, or our Present Historical Period in the Destructive and Reconstructive Results and Tendencies determined by an Ultimate Law of History," and is intended as the Preface or "Prooimium" of the general work. Aside from the chief aim of this book, which, in the words of the author, is "to lead the reader up to this law through the consideration of those facts which led to its discovery," it is attractive as an account of travels in Egypt, Idumæa, and Palestine, containing lively descriptions of the mountains Sinai and Lebanon, with their surrounding scenery and places of interest, and also of other portions of the country through which he passed.

But of graver interest than that of these fine descriptions are the original and profound reflections and inferences arising from the scenes visited, and the record of philosophical discussions with the lamented Mr. Buckle, bearing chiefly upon the assumed "ultimate law of history." To the friends and admirers of Mr. Buckle, the sketches given of his history, his personal characteristics, the travelling incidents of the last months of his life, and the sad particulars of his death, in the very prime of his manhood, must all be of deep interest.

The "ultimate law of history" which Mr. Stuart-Glennie professes to have discovered, and the verification of which he proposes to attempt in the succeeding volumes of "The Modern Revolution," he defines as "a certain change, and process of change in men's notions of the causes of change." That is, a change from the idea of a force outside of Nature, effecting all changes, to the idea of a force within Nature, which he calls "mutual determination," in opposition to "one-sided determination," and which implies coexistence, co-nescence. He says he derived the idea of this law from the study of the principle of the conservation of energy, which he traces back to atoms, as "mutually determining," and hence arrives at the idea of the solidarity of atoms, and upward to that of the solidarity of man, together with that of planets, of systems, of universes, of man with all Nature and all Nature with man—in which sense, he says, there was a certain truth in the old astrology,—and hence harmony and a commonwealth of all, with no outside force interfering. "Atheist, then?" he asks, and replies: "Atheist one disbelieving in a Personal God is not, if belief in God means a feeling unutterable of the mystery of existence, a feeling too deep of the spirituality of Nature, and of the universal coexistence of what we distinguish by the correlative terms of matter and mind, a feeling too profound of the cosmos to satisfy itself with the belief of a merely mechanical First Cause." "Spiritism?" he resolves into the molecular action in the individual, transmitted to the molecular action in other individuals on the principle of reciprocal action and the solidarity of the whole.

The author takes his stand entirely outside of Christianity, or "Christianism," as he prefers to name it, classifying it with Buddhism and Islamism as one of the great historic religions, by which he means the historical theory of Jesus as a supernatural being, the idea of whom, he claims, grew out of the myths and legends of Egyptian mythology, Jesus being copied from Osiris.

"The life of Jesus," he says, "as that of a God-Man who came on earth for the good of mankind, was put to death by the power of the Evil One, and rose again to be an everlasting king and judge, is an exact reproduction of the immemorial myth of Osiris. . . . Substitute but Christ for Osiris, and the general description of doctrinal Osirianism will serve equally well as a general description of dogmatic Christianity. . . . And this myth, not only in its grandly moral Osirian form, but in many other shapes, was universally prevalent throughout the birth-continents of Christianity at the time of the formation of the narratives of the life of Jesus."

Mr. Stuart-Glennie differs from Mr. Buckle as to the non-influence of moral forces on historical changes. But, in the last analysis, are not physical forces the antecedents of moral forces, and, in that sense, may not Mr. Buckle be right? As to an ethical standard, Mr. Buckle defines the summum bonum, or the greatest good, as "the highest intellectual and sensual gratification consistent with the rights of others." Mr. Stuart-Glennie considers "love" as the highest good, meaning, he says, "not merely subjective affection, but objective harmony; not the affection of which the object desired, and at length possessed, is the earthly beauty, but that of which the object of desire and possession is the heavenly beauty; that straining after, and consciousness of harmony of relation with, something out of and above oneself, and insatiable save by such objects as God and humanity. Such divine want and its divine satisfaction, I desire to be understood by the word love." He affirms that action of the intellect must precede action of the affections or emotions.

Science, he believes, must undermine all supernatural religions. He emphasizes the importance of a new ideal which "may be defined as completeness of truth in thought, and of love in conduct; the intellectual oneness of man with Nature, and consequent moral oneness of men with each other; the oneness of man with Nature in truth of thought, and of men with each other in the motives and results of conduct." "This new ideal," he continues, "will be in effect a new religion, the religion of a new age of civilization. . . . Its theory of the universe will be an expression of the conception of law in its fullest and most complete development. The sanction given by it to morality will be the progress of humanity, brought home at once to intellectual apprehension and sympathetic emotion by an ultimate law of history. And its principle of authority will be the verified laws of Nature, and of man's progressive consciousness of Nature." In this new ideal, this new religion, he thinks the forms even of our conceptions of immortality and of God may have an objective verification.

This new religion the author sees to be in antagonism to all present forms of religion, based as they all are upon supernaturalism. But between science and religion there is no antagonism. The struggles between the supernatural religions and the new religion he sees to have begun, to be at present in progress, to be surely destined to go on, and a peaceful termination of it he believes to be impossible. "The flag of the revolution," he says, "associated as it may in our minds be with anarchy and blood, is to others the flag of justice dipped and dyed in the blood of the victims of the ages of injustice. It is the flag which—recalling to them the bloody power of its priests and kings which has distinguished the social order of Christianity,—is the flag of avenging memory. . . . And both for those who have, with uncrushed souls, suffered injustice, and seen it to be, not an accident, but a necessity of the Christian social system; and for those who, if they have not suffered, can sympathize with suffering and burn against injustice from which they themselves have been exempt—it is the flag of brotherhood with the outcast."

An American edition of the Pilgrim-Memories has recently been published by the Appletons, and the second volume of the course is published in London, under the title, "In the Morningland." These works are recommended to all who would have more enlightened views of the origin and authority of Christianity, as well as to those who are interested in a philosophy of history.

A. H.

A PROPOSED TRIBUTE TO THOMAS PAINE.

OFFICE OF "THE LIBERAL,"
SAN FRANCISCO, JAN. 31, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:

The Liberal League of San Francisco has instructed me to give notice to the several leagues and freethought societies of the country, by letter and through the liberal press, that this League has unanimously passed the following resolution:—

"Resolved, That, since the pen of Thomas Paine was a most potent force in securing our national independence, it is the privilege and duty of his friends and admirers in this Centennial year to procure a worthy bronze or marble statue or bust of him, to be placed in Independence Hall or on the grounds belonging thereto; and that the Secretary of this League be requested to notify the officers of the several leagues and liberal societies throughout the country of its action, and respectfully request them to coöperate at once in this undertaking by soliciting or otherwise raising what funds they can,

for the purpose above designated, and sending such funds to the officers of the Philadelphia Liberal League, who are requested to act in the capacity of agents for the various organizations and the friends in the country, and at as early a day as possible appropriate such accumulated funds to the purchase and erection, or placing in position, of such bronze or marble statue or bust as such accumulated funds will purchase, in the most convenient and appropriate location possible, and generally supervise the undertaking on behalf of the Liberals of the country, during the celebration of the country's Centennial year."

Mr. Editor, the time is short, and it is earnestly desired that publicity of this undertaking be made through the liberal press of the country as rapidly as possible, that the friends of the author-hero may have the opportunity of properly recognizing the great services of Paine in laying the foundation of the glorious structure of religious freedom in America.

Please call immediate attention to this matter.

This society has already collected a handsome sum, which will be at once forwarded to the care of the Liberal League of Philadelphia.

Fraternally yours,

A. J. BOYER,
Sec'y Liberal League of San Francisco, Cal.
LIBERAL PAPERS PLEASE COPY.

[Contributions should be sent to the "Liberal League, 605 Walnut Street, Philadelphia." Attention is called elsewhere to the above proposition.—ED.]

"SCRUPLES."

NEW YORK, Feb. 1, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Your esteemed contributor O. B. F. writes, under the above title, of the alarm of a class of liberals who, fearing the effect of the discussion of the secularization of government and the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, would cease agitating this reform; and O. B. F. reports these doubters as suggesting the wisdom of letting these matters rest for the present, at least, until Christians and anti-Christians shall have become sufficiently reconciled to settle these matters quietly and peacefully. Meantime, two States have lately prohibited the election to office of all who disbelieve in "a Supreme Being," i. e., a personal God; the Christian Amendment party is quietly and steadily at work; and the want of an opportunity alone prevents "God's people" from enforcing the most illiberal laws.

If it is right and manly for liberals to live up to their convictions, is it not the reverse to be doubters, now that the inevitable issue is fairly before the country? Either we are right in demanding the complete secularization of the government, or we are wrong. I cannot but think that O. B. F. believes we are right; if so, his is the duty to quiet the doubters' fears, and inspire the faint-hearted with new courage, to the end that earnest liberals may not halt, now that the battle has but just begun.

Yours truly,

[Since this communication was written, Mr. Frothingham has most admirably answered the doubters' "Scruples" in his last week's article on "Reassurance." The two articles should be taken together as complementary to each other; and, so taken, they must have the precise effect which our correspondent so earnestly and justly desires.—ED.]

IS THERE NOT DANGER?

NEW YORK, JAN. 31, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—From a late communication, signed L. G. J., I quote as follows:—

"That many Catholics refuse to accept the dictation of the Pope on this question is undeniable. Admitting that this proves them inconsistent, are they any more so than thousands of Protestants who adhere to their churches, while they have long since ceased to believe in their dogmas and creeds?"

Passing over the question of the consistency of Catholics or Protestants who conform to religious authority which seemingly, if not really, they but half believe, may I ask your correspondent one question? Does he not believe that, if the Church ever acquires power, the Pope, as head of the Church, would crush each and every liberal, each and every INDEX, each and every free school, till none but loyal Catholics were left?

Yours truly,

"H."

WONG CHIN-FOO, the Chinese lecturer, went to a Roman Catholic church in Nashua, N. H., a few Sundays ago, and being attired in his rich native costume, one of the doorkeepers politely showed him into a front pew near the altar. Seeing the "distinguished foreigner" among the congregation, the officiating priest preached an elaborate sermon, in which, beginning at the creation of the world, he sketched its history up to the present time, and unfolded the entire plan of salvation as held by the Romish Church, the whole discourse, which was a very able one, being aimed apparently at the Chinese lecturer, with a view to his conversion to Christianity. Soon afterward Wong was able to give the reverend gentlemen a quid pro quo; for having to lecture in Nashua the same evening to a very crowded audience, he enlarged at some length about the religion of Confucius, held him up to the admiration of his auditors, and concluded a highly interesting lecture by an appeal to his hearers to abandon Christianity and come to Confucius.—Tribune.

Sanctuary of Superstition.

THE ONLY GUIDE.—The Bible is our only guide, source of knowledge, and standard of authority in matters of religion. Whatever is taught in the Scriptures is to be believed; whatever is there enjoined is to be obeyed. And what is there neither enjoined nor taught is not to be imposed on the faith or conscience of any man as of religious obligation.—Watchman and Reflector.

THE DEVIL NOT DEAD.—The "possession" of a medium, willing or unwilling, by a demon, is undoubtedly by an influence similar to mesmerism. When one is mesmerized, they have no longer control over their own mental or physical powers; but these are dominated by the will of the mesmerizer, who is to all intents and purposes the possessor of his subject. Demons may possess this power in a still greater degree than we ever see it manifested in man. And as the possessed person would be controlled by the demon, which would be itself hidden from sight, it would be the most natural thing in the world to speak of the controlling agency as within the man; for it seems to operate from within. We understand, therefore, that in referring to demonology, the popular language in discoursing upon its phenomena was adopted by the Saviour.

Some are of the opinion that possession by demons was only a manifestation of disease, in some form. We confess we have never been able to persuade ourselves that these narratives of "possession" did not indicate the existence of an order of spiritual beings, of superhuman power and intelligence; substantial beings, too; but, no doubt, of more refined material than man.—Advent Christian.

A BIT OF THE CREED.—Extracts from the "Constitution of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America. Second edition: published by authority of the General Assembly. 1846."

Page 21. "By the decree of God, for the manifestation of his glory, some men and angels are predestinated unto everlasting life, and others foreordained to everlasting death. These angels and men thus predestinated and foreordained are particularly and unchangeably designed, and their number is so certain and definite that it cannot be either increased or diminished."

Page 57. "Elect infants, dying in infancy, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the spirit, who worketh when and where and how he pleaseth. So also are all other elect persons, who are incapable of being outwardly called by the ministry of the Word."

"Others, not elected, although they may be called by the ministry of the Word, and may have some common operations of the Spirit, yet they never truly come to Christ, and therefore cannot be saved. Much less can men not professing the Christian religion be saved in any other way whatsoever, be they never so diligent to frame their lives according to the light of nature and the law of that religion they do profess; and to assert and maintain that they may be saved is very pernicious and to be detested."

A PRIEST'S CURSE.—Some benevolent Christians, among whom Mr. H. Keane was prominent, opened a school some twenty years ago in Kiltrellig, a benighted part of County Clare. Many of the Roman Catholics gladly availed themselves of this boon. This greatly irritated Rev. Michael Meehan P.P., of Carrigaholt, who, on a Sunday, in the chapel of Cross, County Clare, Ireland, quenched the candles, rang the bell, and pronounced the following curse:—

"I pray God to pour down all vengeance on those who sent their children to Kiltrellig school last week, particularly two. May the devil be their guide on the right hand and on the left, lying and rising, in bed and out of bed, sitting and standing, within and without. May all misfortunes attend their families and labors; and any person or persons sending their children to this school henceforth, may they be struck blind and deaf, so as never to see any of their children again, and may the children sent to the school go wild (mad). May they never leave the world until they become such examples as that the marrow may come through their shin-bones. May they be pained both standing and sitting, and may they never leave this world until they be in such a state that the dogs could not bear coming near their carcass when dead."

"I pray to God that every child that goes to this school may have his life curtailed a twelvemonth for every day he spends in it, and that they may never enjoy the year of maturity; and as for those people who send their children to school, may their crops and their goods be taken by the devil; and may all these misfortunes attend any person taking their posterity in marriage thirty years hence."

"As the minister of God, I pray the Almighty to hear this prayer. I now strictly command this congregation to kneel down and pray God to grant my prayer."

The school was deserted for a month, and then about twenty Roman Catholic children returned. When this curse was published in the Clare Journal, and copied by other papers, the priest denied that he had cursed them for past conduct, declaring he intended it to apply only to those who should send their children in future; but several respectable and independent members of Father Meehan's congregation, who were present when he pronounced the curse, verified the report as given in the papers against the Reverend Father.

The only crime of the children attending the Kiltrellig school, Kiltush, Clare, Ireland, was that they read God's word.—Advent Christian.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 " " " "	8 " "
" 26 " 51 " " " "	6 " "
" 52 " " " " " "	5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
NO. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON.

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. The best Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keesh-Chander Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physica and Politics.....	1.50
SAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.00
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Disciplines of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
OKERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Groves, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE R.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	3.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I., "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewski, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	3.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity. Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. For vol. Elective Affinities.....	5.00
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.). Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons. Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skeelings.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.50
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	4.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities. Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	4.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'C). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	5.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1846.....	8.00
Thoughts Selected from Life Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras, Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith: or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, and the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	8.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. H. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truitt Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hegged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.50

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Sciences for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, &c.....	5.50
The Expansion of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHellen (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of James. Second Edition.....	1.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	3.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	5.00
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	6.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyngs.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.40
STRAUSS (D. F.). The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taines. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Very Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Walden.....	2.00
God.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.). The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.25
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Slings and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.00
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	2.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Pauses. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I. METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I. 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II. 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

BOOK

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

7 TREMONT PLACE,
BOSTON.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading.... The story is told in a very graphic style.... Mr. Holyoake... is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

FURNITURE, BEDDING, WINDOW SHADES, and DRAPERIES. Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business. GEO. W. STEVENS, 757 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address NATH'L T. ALLEN, WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE AMERICAN EDITION OF MONSIEUR D. CONWAY'S SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00. Address THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE, Boston, Mass.

SUNNY SIDE,

A New Singing Book, prepared expressly for Sabbath Schools of Liberal Churches.

By C. W. WENDTE and H. S. PERKINS. The words throughout the book have been prepared and selected with great care. Weak sentimentalism as well as crude doctrinal statements have been rigorously excluded from this collection, and it is believed that the literary contents show a higher grade of writers than have ever before appeared in a book of this character. The music, original and selected, is bright, fresh, vigorous, and altogether of a much better class than is usually found in Sunday-school books.

Price in Boards, 35 cents, or $30 per 100. WM. A. FOND & CO., 347 Broadway, New York.

SUNNY SIDE.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied, with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets to Course, One Dollar.

- Jan. 2. O. B. FROTHINGHAM. "The Soul of Transcendentalism."
Jan. 9. M. D. CONWAY. "The Natural History of the Devil."
Jan. 16. J. W. CHADWICK. "Thomas Paine."
Jan. 23. D. A. WASSON. "Radical Formalism."
Jan. 30. T. W. HIGGINSON. "The Meeting of Extremes."
Feb. 6. B. F. UNDERWOOD. "Modern Scientific Materialism: its Meaning and Tendency."
Feb. 13. BISHOP McQUAID. "The Public School Question as viewed by the Catholic American Citizen."
Feb. 20. F. E. ABBOT. "The Public School Question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."
Feb. 27. Prof. FELIX ADLER. "The Old Testament in the Light of Modern Criticism."
Mar. 5. Mrs. E. D. CHENEY. "The Religious Life of Michael Angelo."

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

- THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade.....$3.00
THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham.....1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd......75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck......75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor. Irenaeus the author of the Fourth Gospel. The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. 12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-paid.....2.50

The author here discusses a number of the inconsistencies of traditional and authentic Church history, and proposes solutions after the manner of the most modern German Rationalists, though with original and often startling theories of his own.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER. By Charles Sotherton. Including Portrait of Shelley and View of his Tomb. 60 pp. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

TRACTS.

- No. I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton.
No. II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
No. III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. New and enlarged edition, with index and text of important citations.
No. IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published. (Soon ready.)
Of No. I., single copy, mailed, 5 cents; ten for 30 cents; one hundred for $1.50.
Of Nos. II., III., IV., single copy, mailed, 10 cents; ten for 60 cents; one hundred for $3.00.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, a volume made up chiefly of essays and addresses given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. "One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. ABBOT, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Setzer, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50. Sent to Office of THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 1876.

WHOLE No. 322.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, undilutely, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
- Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixed with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE
FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

AN ABSURD STORY is floating about that Abraham Lincoln was in his youth baptized as a Catholic. It rests on an alleged statement of Bishop Lefevre, of Detroit, now deceased; but it takes a Catholic to believe it.

A CORRESPONDENT in Hillsboro, Colorado, says: "There was a copy of THE INDEX platform sent to the Constitutional Convention, as a petition, that has caused quite a stir in the Convention—also in the House and Council. Don't know what the result will be yet."

MRS. VAN COTT, the revivalist (whom the Sun persists in calling the "Widow Van Cott"), is claimed to have caught a live "infidel" at Newburgh, New York. And he was reckoned the worst of the species, too, being a "disbeliever in God, heaven, and hell." The revivalists seem to think that faith in hell is just as necessary as faith in God.

Do not omit to read Bishop McQuaid's lecture. It is long, and will take two numbers of THE INDEX; but it is a very careful, considerate, and plausible pleading of the Catholic side of the school question. This lecture ought to be studied before reading our own lecture on the other side, which is to follow. The discussion is exciting a great deal of interest and attention.

THIS IS FROM Harper's Weekly: "Mr. Stanley's account of King Mtesa and his desire for missionaries to teach him and his people the Christian religion has been read with great interest both in England and the United States. One English gentleman has responded with an offer of £5000. The Pall Mall Gazette, however, which looks on all subjects, human and divine, with cold, worldly eyes, states the case thus: 'King Mtesa, having been converted from El Islam to Christianity by the sporting correspondent of the Daily Telegraph and the New York Herald, wants further instruction, and a gentleman rich in gold and benevolence has contributed £5000 by way of answer to the invitation. Missions are good things; missionaries introduce merchants. But in this case there is a slight complication,' etc., etc."

THE MANAGERS of the American Bible Society, a month or two ago, passed a strong resolution against opening the Centennial Exposition on Sundays: "Whereas, this society has accepted, with great pleasure, an invitation to become an exhibitor at the Centennial Fair, and is making preparation to occupy its allotted space by a becoming display of its productions and its work during its existence in the first century of the republic; Resolved, that in the judgment of this board, it would not be consistent with the Word of God, which we, as a society, exist to circulate, for us to participate in an exhibition which would, by its official action, set aside the precepts of the Divine Word and those human laws for the observance of the Christian Sabbath which have been enacted for the best interest of the State and the public welfare."

REV. JOSEPH HENNING, a Catholic priest of St. Louis, recently prophesied thus of his Church: "The persecution that is waging against the Church will also end. When, I don't know. God alone knows that. I know that events are marching fast, and if the signs of the times do not deceive me, the triumph of the Church is not far off. If I am not mistaken, the sceptre of Europe is passing fast out of the hands of the German empire into the hands of the empire of Russia, who will overrun Europe with barbarous hordes, until, like Attila, he will stand before the gates of Rome, and then will be converted; and then the great schism that has separated Russia and the East from the Church for so many years will be healed, and the East and the West will unite in a Te Deum, the echoes of which will wake from pole to pole. The time is not far off when there will come a time of peace and quiet; when Infidelity and Protestantism—Protestantism, as a religion, has long ceased to exist; it is running on its last legs, and I am sure it can't run far—will be swept from the face of the earth."

BY THE EVANS (Colorado) Journal of Jan. 20, 1876, we learn that a Committee, headed by ex-Governor Evans, from a meeting of the various churches in Denver, presented to the Constitutional Convention, accompanied with a petition, the following DECLARATION.

First—We approve of a recognition of the Supreme Ruler of the Universe in the Constitution of the State.

Second—We regard the Sabbath as a civil as well as a religious institution, which is of importance to the welfare of society.

Third—We believe that public schools should be provided by law, and kept free from sectarian influences; that funds raised for their support should not be directed to other uses; that the State should be free to adopt such text books for their use as are best adapted to literary and scientific instruction; and that the Bible should not be excluded from, nor pushed into, the public schools.

Fourth—We do not favor the endowment of churches, and believe that all property held for revenues to support churches should be taxed equally with private property. But we do not believe that property exclusively devoted to education, to benevolent and charitable institutions, public libraries, or church edifices, should be taxed.

Fifth—We have confidence in the good judgment of the Constitutional Convention of Colorado, and do not apprehend any danger of its inserting any provision in the Constitution it will frame, which shall violate the moral and religious sense of the people, but that it will acquiesce in all of the above stated propositions, unless it may be that relating to the question of exemption from taxation. But since the taxation of all property equally, whether church or corporation, excepting the burial places of the dead, and, under restrictions, church-edifices, has been recommended by high authority, and since the proposition meets with favor from a considerable number of people of Colorado, we deem it of special importance that we earnestly protest against the State Legislature being prohibited from making the exemptions suggested.

It is an avowed object of the Christian Amendment party to agitate for their measure in the manner here exemplified; and the liberals idly suffer them to proceed, just as the secessionists proceeded in casting up their batteries around Fort Sumter. The end of this passive policy can be only strife.

"The Public School Question, as Viewed by a Catholic American Citizen."

SEVENTH LECTURE BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION IN HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, FEB. 13, 1876.

BY THE RIGHT REV. B. J. McQUAID, D. D.,
ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, N. Y.

I wish to say that I am here as a Catholic American citizen, speaking only for myself and my country, and in no way responsible for Mexico, South America, Spain, or any other country in the world.

The school question is engrossing more and more the attention of all classes in the country. President Grant devotes a portion of his annual message to the subject, and calls for yet larger consideration of it by the Legislatures of the States. Politicians worry and fret over it, not knowing how the current may chance to run, and consequently which course they should take. Ministers and editors, from pulpit and press, flood the country with their learning and wisdom, well spiced with warnings and threats to all who dare differ from them; and yet the last to be heard and consulted is the one to whom the settlement of the question first and finally belongs,—the parent of the child.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION TO BE SETTLED BY PARENTS.

The father may listen to well-meant good advice; his fears may be excited by denunciations of impending peril for himself and off-spring; laws may be enacted to interfere with his natural rights; he may be mulcted through his purse, and harassed in many ways; his neighbors may turn against him; yet, in despite of all, the responsibility of the education of his child falls on him, and on no one else; he may be assisted in his work by others, if so he will; but in accordance with his will and choice, and not according to the conscience of his neighbors or of his fellow-citizens.

PARENTAL RIGHTS BEFORE STATE RIGHTS.

Parental rights precede State rights. Indeed, as the Declaration of Independence has it, governments are instituted to secure man's inalienable rights, and among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. A father's right to the pursuit of happiness extends to that of his children as well. This happiness is not restricted to material and earthly enjoyment, but reaches to everything conducive to joy, pleasure, contentment of mind and soul, in this world and the next, if the father believes in a future life.

PARENTAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES ACCORDING TO COMMON LAW.

Parental rights include parental duties and responsibilities before God and society. The common law is explicit on this point, as Blackstone and Kent assert: "A parent may, under circumstances, be indicted at common law for not supplying an infant child with necessaries."—Chitty on Blackstone.

"During the minority of a child . . . the parent is absolutely bound to provide reasonably for his maintenance and education, and he may be sued for necessities furnished and schooling given to a child under just and reasonable circumstances."—Kent's Com., vol. II., p. iv.; Lec. XXIX.

THE COMMON LAW DEFINED BY JUDGE LEWIS.

The rights of parents are strongly and clearly defined by Judge Ellis Lewis, in "Commonwealth vs. Armstrong, Lycoming County, Pa., August Session, 1842." The judge, having sent his decision to Chancellor Kent, received in reply an approval of its correctness, and of the reasoning on which it was based. In this opinion Judge Lewis says: "The authority of the father results from his duties. He is charged with the duty of maintenance and education. . . . The term 'education' is not limited to the ordinary instruction of the child in the pursuits of literature. It comprehends a proper attention to the moral and religious sentiments of the child. In the discharge of this duty it is the undoubted right of the father to designate such teachers, either in morals, religion, or literature, as he shall deem best calculated to give correct instruction to his child." In sustenance of his opinion, the judge quotes from Horry, Professor of Moral Philosophy, from Dr. Adam Clarke, from Paley, and from Dr. Wayland, who, in his Moral Philosophy, writes: "The right of the parent is to command; the duty of the child is to obey. . . . The relation is established by our Creator. . . . The duty of parents is to educate their children in such a manner as they (the parents) believe will be most for their future happiness, both temporal and eternal. . . . With his duty in this respect no one has a right to interfere. . . . While he exercises his parental duties within their prescribed limits, he is, by the law of God, exempt from interference both from individuals and from society." After citing these authorities and various passages of the Sacred Scriptures, the judge goes on to say: "It is the duty of the parent to regulate the conscience of the child by proper attention to its education; and there is no security for the offspring during the tender years of its minority, but in obedience to the authority of its parents in all things not injurious to its health or morals."

BY THE SUPREME COURT OF WISCONSIN.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin, in 1874, went so far in maintenance of parental rights that it gave to a father the right to decide for his son what branches of elementary studies embraced in the school curriculum he should not follow, against the will and decision of the teacher and the school committee. The Court based its judgment on these indefeasible parental rights embodied in the common law.

DOES THE CHILD BELONG TO THE STATE?

It is the Christian view of parental rights and duties which is here given. It is presented under the supposition that, however great in these United States the diminution of Christians in point of numbers, there may be left enough to constitute an important part of the population, with rights warranted by the natural, the divine, and the common law worthy of consideration. The doctrine coming into vogue, that the child belongs to the State, is the dressing up of an old skeleton of Spartan Paganism, with its hideousness dimly disguised by a thin cloak of Christian morality. The most despotic governments of Europe illustrate the fruits of the doctrine by making every one of their subjects an armed soldier for the butchering of fellow-creatures, in neighboring States, under the forms of legalized warfare.

THE EVANGELICAL CHRISTIAN'S AUTHORITY FOR PARENTAL DUTIES.

The evangelical Christian who believes in the revealed word of God reads in the sacred Book the teachings of his Master on the respective duties of parent and child, and regards these teachings as the law of his life:—

"Children, obey your parents in the Lord; for this is just.

"Honor thy father and thy mother; which is the first commandment with a promise.

"That it may be well with thee, and thou mayst be long-lived on earth.

"And you, fathers, provoke not your children to anger; but bring them up in the discipline and correction of the Lord."—Eph. vi., 1-4.

"Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well-pleasing to the Lord."—Col. iii., 20.

THE CATHOLIC CHRISTIAN'S AUTHORITY.

The Catholic Christian, taught to hear the Church which is commissioned to teach all divine truths with infallible certainty, learns that he cannot neglect the care and education of his children without grievous sin; that their religious instruction demands his chief thought, and that to expose them to danger in faith or morals, in schools or elsewhere, would bring on him the just anger of God, and punishment hereafter. He knows that an education which excludes God, and is confined to material thoughts and interests, is one of which for his children he cannot approve.

HOW THE CATHOLIC CONSCIENCE IS FORMED.

On the natural law, and on the law divinely revealed and presented to him by God's chosen agent—the Church,—does the Catholic form his conscience. He does not expect that his conscientious convictions in matters of religion will please others; no more is he pleased with the professed creeds of the majority of his fellow-citizens. These form their conscience on grounds satisfactory to them; he forms his on grounds still more satisfactory to him. "The divine law," says Newman, "is the rule of ethical truth, the standard of right and wrong, a sovereign, irreversible, absolute authority in the presence of men and angels." "The divine law," says Cardinal Gousset, "is the supreme rule of actions; our thoughts, desires, words, acts, all that man is, is subject to the domain of the law of God; and this law is the rule of our conduct by means of our conscience. Hence it is never lawful to go against our conscience."

"Conscience," says Newman, "is not a long-sighted selfishness, nor a desire to be consistent, with one's self; but it is a messenger from Him who, in Nature and in grace, speaks to us behind a veil, and teaches and rules us by his representatives. Conscience is the aboriginal vicar of Christ, a prophet in its informations, a monarch in its peremptoriness, a priest in its blessings and anathemas, and, even though the eternal priesthood throughout the Church could cease to be, in it the sacerdotal principle would remain, and it would have away."

The theory of freedom of conscience guaranteed by the Constitution as a right, is conceded to the Catholic by secularist and evangelical. The wording of the Constitution, and our loud boasting at home and abroad of liberty of conscience as a special privilege of democratic government, demand this concession. Theory and practice clash. The Constitution rules that all shall be free to follow the dictates of conscience, provided there is no encroachment on the freedom of others. The majority of the people rule, by the power of numbers, that a large minority shall not be free to educate their children according to their conscience.

THE CATHOLIC CONSCIENCE SHOULD BE FREE.

Having proved that the Catholic conscience is founded on the natural and the revealed law, protected in its right by the common law and the Constitution of the United States, the claim that Catholic parents should be untrammelled in the exercise of parental duties brings me to the consideration of school education as affecting this conscience.

It is conceded by Free Religionists, by the ablest of the secular press, by many representative ministers of the evangelical churches, and by large numbers of the people, that to tax Catholics, Jews, and Infidels, for schools in which the Bible is read and religious exercises are held, is a wrong, an act of injustice, a form of tyranny. So understanding the case, the cities of Troy, Rochester, Cincinnati, and Chicago have forbidden religious exercises of any description in their common schools. This is a concession that would not have been made thirty years ago. It is a partial reparation of the past. Especially is it a warning to Boards of Education in other places to cease inflicting this mode of religious persecution on citizens who object to any kind of religion, or to the peculiar kind prevailing in their schools. Mr. Beecher says: "It is not right or fair to tax Catholics or Jews for the support of schools in which the Bible is read." His congregation applauded the saying. If it is not right, it is wrong, and Catholics who are thus taxed are, to the extent of the taxes they pay, punished,—persecuted for religion's sake.

INFRINGEMENT OF CONSCIENCE IS PERSECUTION.

Judge Taft, in giving his opinion in the Superior Court of Cincinnati in the case of Minor et al. vs. Board of Education of Cincinnati, expressed his judgment as follows: "We have this unequivocal evidence of the reality of their conscientious scruples, that when they have paid the school tax, which is not a light one, they give up the privilege of sending their children, rather than that they should be educated in what they hold to be, and what without the adoption of one or both of these resolutions must be fairly held to be, Protestant schools. This is too large a circumstance to be covered up by the Latin phrase de minimis non curat lex, to which resort is sometimes had. These Catholics are constrained every year to yield to others their right to one third of the school money, a sum of money averaging not less than $200,000, every year, on conscientious grounds. That is to say, these people are punished every year for believing as they do, to the extent of $200,000; and to that extent those of us who send our children to these excellent common schools become beneficiaries of the Catholic money. We pay for our privileges so much less than they actually cost."

I quote this distinguished authority to justify the exceedingly strong accusation made a moment ago.

THE STATE HAS NO RIGHT TO EDUCATE.

The Catholic, however, is equally unwilling to transfer the responsibility of the education of his children to the State. His conscience informs him that the State is an incompetent agent to fulfil his parental duties. While the whisperings of his conscience are clear and unmistakable in their dictates, it pleases him to hear what others, non-Catholics, have to say on this important aspect of the subject.

The late Gerrit Smith, whose character as an able and fearless philanthropist I need not dwell on, in a letter of Nov. 5, 1873, to Charles Stebbins, of Cazenovia, and intended for publication, says: "The meddling of the State with the school is an impertinence little less than its meddling with the Church. A lawyer, than whom there is not an abler in the land, and who is as eminent for integrity, as for ability, writes me: 'I am against the government's being permitted to do anything which can be entrusted to individuals under the equal regulation of general laws.' But how emphatically should the school be held to be the concern and care of individuals instead of the government! It is not extravagant to say that government is no more entitled to a voice in the school than in the Church. Both are, or ought to be, religious institutions, and in the one important respect that the average scholar is of a more plastic and docile age than the average attendant on the Church, the school has greatly the advantage of the Church."

The views of Gerrit Smith and of the Catholic parent coincide in a remarkable degree.

HERBERT SPENCER ON THE SAME SUBJECT.

Another authority will, I trust, be equally acceptable to my hearers. Herbert Spencer, in the chapter on "National Education" in Social Statics thus writes: "In the same way that our definition of State duty forbids the State to administer religion or charity, so likewise does it forbid the State to administer education. Inasmuch as the taking away by government of more of a man's property than is needful for maintaining his rights is an infringement, and therefore a reversal of the government's function toward him—and inasmuch as the taking away of his property to educate his own or other people's children is not needful for the maintaining of his rights,—the taking away of his property is wrong." Mr. Spencer then goes on to prove his proposition, and refute objections brought against it by various classes of objectors, thus: "The reasoning which is held to establish the right to intellectual food will equally well establish the right to material food; nay, will do more,—will prove that children should be altogether cared for by the government. For if the benefit, importance, or necessity of education be assigned as a sufficient reason why government should educate, then may the benefit, importance, or necessity of food, clothing, shelter, and warmth be assigned as a sufficient reason why government should administer them also. So that the alleged right cannot be established without annulling all parental authority whatever." The destruction of parental authority and the uselessness of mere intellectual education as a preventive of crime, are the chief points he makes against State interference with schools.

THE "JOURNAL OF COMMERCE" ON THE SAME.

"The only remedy," says the Journal of Commerce, of New York, "we see in the future for the evils which are admitted, is to be found in the entire separation of the educational process from State authority. If this has been found wisest and best in matters of religion, why not in relation to all forms of education? Youth needs the higher sanction of religion in every department of culture, and this cannot be secured in a State school where there is no State Church."

It can scarcely be said that the interference or non-interference of the State in school education is an open question. By concession on the part of the large majority of the population, liberty to interfere is granted. This liberty in no way includes the right so to take part in the education of children that the just and inalienable rights of parents shall be sacrificed. I have dwelt on the argument of parental rights because the assumption of the State to control education, and the indifference of many parents to this assumption, encourage the supposition that all the right is in the State, and none in the parent.

COMMON SCHOOLS BEGAN ON A RELIGIOUS BASIS.

In the gradual establishment of State schools the element of religious instruction always had a place of honor. The Constitutions of your New England States, and in a very remarkable degree those of Massachusetts and Connecticut, recognize God, religion, virtue, and morality. The departure of modern methods has been from the old and sound ways of the founders of the republic, both as respects the religious element in the education of the young, and the duty of parents to bear the burden of their children's education. The Western States copied the Constitutions of the older States, and, like them, included morality and religion as essential parts of a sound education; but, falling into the prevailing error, learned to exclude God and religious instruction from their schools.

HAS EDUCATION YET DECREASED CRIME?

Now hear their piteous lamentation: "Did not the advocates of our free school system," says Mr. Hopkins, Superintendent of Schools in Indiana, "promise the people that if they would take on their shoulders the additional burden of taxation for its support, the same would be lightened by the diminution of crime? Is there any perceptible decrease of crime in Indiana? Is there any reasonable probability that there soon will be? It is becoming a grave question among those who take comprehensive views of the subject of education, whether this intellectual culture without moral is not rather an injury than a benefit. Is it not giving teeth to the lion and fangs to the serpent? That is the true system of training which adapts itself to the entire complex nature of the child. No free government can safely ignore this grave subject, for nations that lose their virtue soon lose their freedom." Here is a remarkable statement by a friendly pen in the hand of the chief official of the educational department of Indiana, whose testimony, therefore, must be admitted as of great weight. Mr. Hopkins has been reading the newspapers of the day, and, startled by the revelations of crime among the intellectual and educated classes, who use the advantages of school learning the better to defraud creditors, embezzle trust funds, rob banks, form conspiracies to cheat the government, and sell official honor for personal gain, is seeking some explanation of a condition of public and private morals that cannot continue without destroying the liberties of the republic. He has hit on the right starting-point. Let him go on with his investigations, and fear not to disclose his discoveries.

WHAT IS SECULARISM?

Our argument is now with the secularists pure and simple. They point to their work accomplished, and bid us to the feast of rejoicing. We do not answer to the call, and stand ready to give the reason that is in us.

What is meant by secularism in schools? President Grant defines it to mean the exclusion from the schools of the teaching of any religious, atheistic, or Pagan tenet. Evidently the President has never been a school-teacher, or has never tried to teach anything save the multiplication table to a bright, intelligent boy, brought up in a Christian family on the plan here laid down. Commanding armies, handling a hundred thousand armed men, is child's play in comparison. God, Christ, sin, conscience, religion, heaven, hell, would meet him at every turn, and to flank them successfully, without insinuating a Christian, a Pagan, or an Atheistic tendency of thought, would give him more trouble than he experienced in outflanking the strongest army that ever met him on his onward marches.

The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle, a staunch and zealous defender of secularism, gives its explanation as follows: "Strictly speaking, a secular school should not inculcate the belief in an overruling Providence."

The teacher who honestly means to teach according to the principles of secularism will find himself in continual embarrassment. If he but mentions the name of God, of Christ, with reverence, he leads his bright pupils to infer that such a Being exists; if he evades a question about God, he indicates doubt; if he speaks the name with a sneer on the lip, or a shrug of the shoulders, he inculcates to young, impressionable minds his contempt for such a belief. Secularists must not attempt to escape the logic of their own demands. They ask, in the language of the President, the exclusion of all religious, atheistic, and Pagan tenets from State schools, and where this doctrine lands them they must be pleased to stand. They scout the idea that merely excluding the Bible means secularism. This is the vain hope of evangelicals, and that with this concession they will be left free to make compilations from the Bible—elegant extracts—to keep up appearances. They do not comprehend the nature of the controversy. The dread of "popery" blinds them. They will not be let off without swallowing in all its bitterness this pill which they have helped prepare.

EVANGELICALS OBJECT TO THE TERM "GODLESS."

Yet some evangelical friends have been wrathful with me and others for designating the common schools, according to the new law, as godless. I do not wish them to be godless; it is not the fault of Catholics that they are becoming godless. To leave our non-Catholic fellow-citizens free to settle the question of religious instruction in the schools to their own satisfaction, Catholics all over the country have provided, or they are providing, school accommodation for Catholic children, that the religious influences in these schools may be in harmony with the religious convictions of their patrons. Hardly had we made room in our own schools for all our Catholic children in the city of Rochester, than the Board of Education of the city, with little ceremony, put the Bible and all religious instruction out of the public schools. It was this Board that made the schools under their care, in reality if not in name, godless.

LIBERAL CHRISTIANS AND SECULARISTS.

The liberal Christian, led on by Henry Ward Beecher and a large body of clergymen of various evangelical denominations, fancies that morals can be taught, like good manners, on no higher ground or motive than the one of propriety or expediency. When interest, passion, the heart's cravings, outweigh propriety and expediency, morals thus taught go by the board.

The Free Religionist is at least consistent; consistency is more than the liberal evangelical Christian can claim. The former rejects the idea of a God-Creator, revelation, and all supernatural truths. He is justified in asking that his child shall not have its mind tainted with such errors during school hours. He is resolute to drive out of the schools which he is taxed to support, and to which he sends his children, the sectarianism of evangelicalism; and he is equally determined to plant in them his pet doctrine—the sectarianism of secularism. It is the usual reading of history, that bodies of religionists never see themselves as others see them.

The religionist, Catholic and Christian, holding to divine and fixed truths, claims the right to impart a knowledge of these truths to his child in the school to which he sends it for education. The Free Religionist, having no such truths to communicate to his child, insists that his fellow-citizen shall not be allowed to use the schoolhouse for instruction in positive religion, because he sends his child to the same school. Thus, practically, he ostracizes the religion of the Christian, which is positive, and maintains his own, which is negative. All the gain is on the side of the Free Religionists, whose system of morals is so transcendental, and out of the reach of the masses, that it is valueless for practical good. Both call for the teaching of morals, and each in his own sense. The evangelical bases his notions of morality on the natural and revealed law; the Free Religionists, or secularist pure and simple, on the natural law, and as he conceives it. The latter would exclude the Sacred Scriptures and all positive religious teaching from the schools. Evangelicals are divided into two classes. One class would retain the Bible as a text-book of instruction in morals, as a sign of the Christianity of the schools, and as a mode of religious worship. They argue, with much truth, that if, owing to the neglect of parents at home, the insufficiency of the Sunday-school and church to reach the children most in need of religious teaching, it be not imparted in the week-day school, it will never be imparted. Another class of evangelicals remit the Bible and all teaching of morals on religious grounds to the family, the Sunday-school, and the Church, and join hands with the Free Religionists in prohibiting the name of God, of Christ, and of his teachings in the school. The least logical is this liberalized Christian evangelical who professes to teach morals without the authority in which he claims to believe. There is some justification for the stand taken by the former class of evangelicals and by Free Religionists; there is none for the position assumed by evangelicals, who hold principles by which they care not to abide. The liberalized Christian and the Free Religionist assert that to be possible which, in the nature of things, is not possible. The teacher does not exist who, in his schoolroom, can so divest himself of his own religious or irreligious ideas that no influence, direct or indirect, shall go out from him to his pupils. His very best efforts to escape the suspicion of sectarianism will only serve to tinge his teaching with indifference toward all religion; thus unintentionally, perhaps, responding to the wishes of the Free Religionist. Scudding from Scylla, he is wrecked on Charybdis,—or vice versa.

On what ground, we may now ask, does either protest against the peculiar religious teachings of the other in State schools? Both are shocked that their taxes should be used to propagate religious creeds in which they do not believe. Neither has a word to say about the wrong perpetrated on the Catholic, whose taxes are used without stint to carry on a system of schools from which he is kept out by their dominant evangelicalism or indifference.

A TRIANGULAR CONTEST.

Thus, as some declare, a triangular contest is inaugurated. The Albany Argus, of Nov. 30, 1875, in reviewing a sermon of the Rev. Dr. Darling, in which the Rev. Dr. insists on keeping the Bible in the common schools, and because this is a Christian country, remarks: "Who shall decide? Shall the schools be secularized? Shall they be exclusively Christian, after the Darling model? Shall room be allowed for the McQuaid pattern of schools pervaded by Christian influences? The school question, then, does not bise the community. It is a triangular contest, with the Darlings and McQuaids as allies and yet as antagonists; and with the secularists receiving strong support from Protestant pulpits, beside the partial support they receive from arguments such as are advanced by Dr. Darling." Three parties there are beyond doubt, but the contest can scarcely be called triangular. It is rather a struggle of three in one line, with the Catholic party in the middle. Each of the others has a hand in his pocket, taking his money to support schools to which he cannot in conscience send his children. If he but opens his mouth to complain, a din of angry sounds deafens him, and he gets more knocks than pence. His right to a conscience is admitted when his conscience conforms to the dictates of others. A few years ago his claim of conscientious convictions on the Bible question was derided. Now it is allowed. To-day he claims to educate his child in schools in harmony with his religious convictions. Neither contending party gives him heed. All point to the common schools, and, while quarrelling among themselves as to what they are, and what they ought to be, bid him take them as they are, and as they have made them, or go his way, build his own schoolhouse, and please himself. This is moderate language; rougher and much less civil is what he hears. Strange to tell, however, no word is said of sending after him his money paid in school taxes. The ordinary principles of commercial honor are disregarded. The justice and equity required by the constitution of Connecticut are ignored. Instead of justice the Catholic receives insults. "His money! It is the State's money, public money belonging to the State treasury, Protestant money. Be thankful that a generous people permits you to be blessed by the school advantages brought to your door."

WHO PAYS THE SCHOOL TAX?

Thus the poor Catholic, who may, perchance, have a little common-sense, hears, in the midst of loud talk about rights of man and rights of conscience, that his conscience is not his own, and the freedom offered him is somebody else's freedom; that his school taxes take on a special Protestant blessing as they drop into the common treasury, and may not come out, without the odor of evangelicalism perfuming them. In downright derision he is asked what taxes he pays? Is he not a poor laborer without a home he can call his own, a mere tenant-at-will? Are not the taxes paid by the rich landlord? Simple and guileless the son of toil may be, and untutored in political economy, the laws of demand and supply, the intricacies of direct and indirect taxation; but his memory reminds him that when last the landlord called he was told that, as taxes and assessments had been so much increased, a trifle would have to be added to the rent. The same unpleasant remark met him in the grocery, the meat-shop, the shoe-store; wherever, indeed, he went to purchase the simplest necessities of life. Anxious to learn how it was that the taxes had been augmented, he talked with his neighbors, and after many inquiries discovered that new and costly schoolhouses had been built, salaries of teachers and officials had been added to, and the sum of incidentals grown out of all proportion. A further study of the subject revealed the fact that one-fourth of all moneys raised by taxes in his town was needed for public schools. He then learnt why his rent was raised. He was not so dull that he could not comprehend, after the practical experience thus obtained, that the consumer and producer pay the taxes. The landlord, the manufacturer, the seller, draws the check in payment of the tax bill; but the consumer and producer furnish a large part of the money with which to make good the check.

FALSE STATEMENTS AND ASSUMPTIONS.

This subject of State school education is overloaded with unfounded assumptions and incorrect statements. A prominent public man, clergyman, politician, or editor, has scarcely given utterance to a plausible plea, when by the grand chorus of lesser oracles it is taken up and repeated until it sounds like an accepted axiom.

WHAT IS SECTARIANISM?

The greatest abuse of language is in the popular meaning of the word sectarian. On the frenzied brain of many it acts like the cry of "mad dog" in a crowded street. Who inquires into its signification? Light thrown on it would only weaken its power for mischief. The analysis of the word by John C. Spencer, Secretary of State of New York, and one of the ablest lawyers the State has produced, dissects it thoroughly, and exposes the erroneous sense in which it is used. After saying that "religious doctrines of vital interest will be inculcated, not as theological exercises, but incidentally in the course of literary and scientific instructions," and that such teachings are sectarian, he goes on to say: "It is believed to be an error to suppose that the absence of all religious instruction, if it were practicable, is a mode of avoiding sectarianism. On the contrary, it would be in itself sectarian, because it would be consonant to the views of a particular class, and opposed to the opinions of other classes. . . . His only purpose is to show the mistake of those who suppose they may avoid sectarianism by avoiding all religious instruction."

INCONSISTENCY OF THE EVANGELICAL.

Great confusion of ideas and grievous injustice result from this misapprehension of the sense of sectarianism. No one declaims so loudly against sectarianism as your intensely religious evangelical. Even when demanding that the Bible shall be read, and that his general form of Protestantism shall fill the schoolhouse, by some obliquity of mental vision peculiar to his class he startles the country by his frantic cries of danger to the public schools through sectarianism. Is this honest, or is it hypocritical? If the prejudices in which he was born and bred so confuse and blind his intellect that he cannot see a self-evident truth, his blunder may be charged to mistaken honesty. But what accumulated injustices spring out of his blunder!

BENIGNITY OF THE SECULARIST.

Then up rises the secularist, with benign countenance and gentle words, to reprove the evangelical for wrong done to the poor Catholic sectarian, and in the name of peace and conciliation, and as a settlement of all difficulties, to offer his gift of secularism pure and simple. It is not courteous to examine gifts too closely; but, as this one is bought partly with Catholic money, it must be borne with that, before accepting the present, the Catholic turns it round on every side, scrutinizes its shape, its color, and its substance, to make sure that in it no danger lurks concealed. To the Catholic secularism is as much sectarian as evangelicism.

AN AMERICAN'S RIGHT TO AGITATE.

A false statement, and one daily heard, is that to ask for a calm talk on the merits and demerits of the existing system of schools means no less than an attempt to favor ignorance, impede education, and break down all schools. It is an American's right to argue, find fault, discuss, agitate. Agitation is healthful; in this particular instance it quickens the building of Catholic schoolhouses. A Catholic is the last one to be taunted with want of love for education. He has only to point to his schools dotting the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. All other classes put together do not equal him in the number and efficiency of Christian free schools. Yet he is only at the beginning of his work.

NO DANGER FROM THE POPE.

Another incorrect statement is, that to allow parental rights, as demanded by the natural, the divine, and the common law, is to hand over the country to the Pope and the Catholic Church. When the bigots of the country will permit the government to deal with its citizens, the parents of the children, as equity and justice require, the liberties of the Republic will meet no danger from the Catholic Church or the Pope. It is this bugbear of "popery" which bewilders and frightens people.

EXTENT OF COMMON-SCHOOL EDUCATION.

It is not decided what is meant by a common-school education. It is anything from A B C up to a finished university course, including professional studies, except theology. President Grant restricts it to the rudimentary branches of learning. President Eliot of Harvard University, in the Atlantic Monthly of last June, makes this statement: "Suppose, for example, that the State requires of all children a certain knowledge of reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography, such as children usually acquire by the time they are twelve years of age. It is not unreasonable, though by no means necessary, that the community should bear the whole cost of giving all children that amount of elementary training, on the ground that so much is necessary for the safety of the State; but when the education of a child is carried above that compulsory limit, it is by the voluntary act of the child's parents, and the benefit accrues partly to the State, through the increase of trained intelligence among the population, but partly also to the individual, through the improvement of his powers and prospects."

Many of the secular newspapers agree with the above authorities in limiting a common school education to the simplest elementary branches. Such a restricted education answers for rural districts in which a more extended course of studies is impossible. Tie down the curriculum of studies to the rudimentary branches of reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography in villages, towns, and cities, and in ten years' time the system of common schools will be abandoned. The ambition of all centres of population is to elevate the standard of common-school education, until the town that cannot boast of its grammar school, and its high school, or day college, drops behind its sister town, in the race for advanced education at the public expense. The normal school, with its pretentious title, is another device for placing within the reach of large numbers, guiltless of any thought of following the teacher's profession, an education such as in former years could be had only in denominational academies and seminaries. To such an extent has this crowding out of academies and seminaries, generally under denominational control, and supported by church organizations and private patrons, gone on, by the substitution of union schools, high schools, normal schools, free colleges, living on the bounty of the common treasury, that many denominational institutions have ceased to live, and others are only gasping for breath.

UNLIMITED EXPANSION OF THE SYSTEM.

Let us listen to two other authorities giving their opinion of the scope of common-school studies. Henry Ward Beecher may be pitted against President Grant, and Superintendent Philbrick, of Boston, against President Eliot. "The common schools," says Mr. Beecher, "should be so comfortable, so fat, so rich, so complete, that no select school could live under their drippings." In his annual report for 1874, Mr. Philbrick writes: "Our public schools are maintained on so liberal a scale, and their influence so largely predominates, that the private schools exert no appreciable effect upon their character." Boston has its system of Latin schools, normal schools, high schools, grammar schools, to demonstrate the absurdity of President Grant's expectation that the rudimentary branches would satisfy the American people. Mr. Philbrick gives statistics to show, that, while in 1830 there were in Boston 7,430 children in the public schools, there were in private schools 4,018; but in 1873, with an addition of 200,000 to the population, there were in the public schools 35,930, and in private schools only 3,887. Neither enumeration includes the 5,000 children in Christian free schools supported by parents of the Catholic religion.

WHY THEY DIFFER.

When the aim of the argument is to catch popular applause, we boast of a system of schools that brings to every child in the land a knowledge of the rudimentary branches of learning. When we wish to conciliate and win the patronage of well-to-do citizens in cities and towns, we impress on their minds the economy of obtaining superior education, including ancient and modern languages, and all the accomplishments, under the State arrangement, rather than in private schools. The public school system, as advocated by many to be imposed on all the citizens of this Republic, is nothing else, in my judgment, than a huge conspiracy against religion, individual liberty and enterprise, and parental rights. It is a monopoly on the part of the State, usurping to itself the entire control of the teacher's business, driving out competition, herding the children together in large numbers, working all alike as so many bits of machinery. Instead of having them in smaller family and neighborhood schools, acting on the children according to individual character, by teachers more immediately under the control of parents.

Various causes work to push school taxation to an unbearable degree. Friends of common schools, taking advantage of popular sympathy, urge outlays of money for houses, apparatus, books, novelties of every kind, and increased salaries of teachers, so that tax-payers are at last asking to know what was the original contract, and where these enormous expenditures are to end; they are also looking for results, and comparing notes with other countries. Mr. Philbrick, of Boston, when in Vienna, did not discover that our lavish disbursements of a good-natured people's money had given us a high rank in school progress, as compared with European countries, except in our primary schools.

COSTLINESS OF COMMON SCHOOLS.

But business men long ago learned that no job was so expensive as a government job; and no wonder that they are now turning their attention to this monopoly of State education, as a financial interest of general and deep concern in these hard times. There are others who can give figures and statistics of school work beside State and city superintendents of public schools. The Cincinnati correspondent of the New York Daily Bulletin, a paper strictly commercial, writes under date of Jan. 17, 1876:—

"Our schools, the best of our institutions, represent, for instance, fully as much miseducation as education; and the boards having charge of them are, compared with other bodies, least careful of proper economy, because they act under a popular, and therefore the least analyzed, public feeling. If you will examine, you will find that, of all taxes, school taxes have for that reason increased fastest. Compare our school expenses with those of any German State, and you will find that ours cost more and perform least. The heaviest taxed German State for these purposes is Hesse Cassel; it taxes 34 cents per head, and it makes up 74 per cent. of all the taxes levied. Now there are levied for school purposes in Cincinnati $774,894, which is full $2.50 per head, and is about one-sixth of all the taxes, or 16 per cent. In Hesse Cassel the tax includes libraries, universities, and art schools; with us it includes only the schools up to high schools, and a good part of their expense is borne by trust funds. As to the culture, the German schools reach a larger proportion of the youth of the State, and are very thorough from the lowest to the highest grade, the teachers being much better qualified than ours. Had I taken Saxony or Baden, both more economical and efficient than Hesse Cassel, the comparison would have been still more against us. Zürich, the highest taxed city in Europe for these objects, takes but 54 cents per head, and their school taxes are one-fifth of all taxes; but there also it includes libraries, a university, polytechnic, lyceums, and common schools; and surely no city on earth has a superior culture than this city."

Strongly as this writer puts his case, he fails to do it justice; for he omits to state that more than half the children of the city in schools are in parents' schools, or denominational and private schools. In New York City, school taxes are four dollars per head for each one of its million inhabitants; and large numbers of its children are in other than State schools. Boston, which has a less number of pupils in private and religious schools, shows a marked increase in the per capita cost. In 1873, for teachers and incidental expenses, not including new school-houses, the cost per head of its two hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants was $5.52; and, including the buildings, it reached nearly $7. These figures are for tax-payers.

Let me say to you just here, that if the scheme of higher education extending from the elementary school up to a full university course, now broached, be attempted to be carried out in its fulness and universality, all the revenues of all your cities, towns, and States, and all the revenues of these United States, will not suffice to pay the cost.

Intelligent, wise, earnest parents, and friends of sound education, will watch with interest the gradual unfolding and development of the State system of schools. Their attention will be given to this crushing-out of denominational schools for the humbler classes of society, to see in it the inexorable destruction of all denominational seminaries, academies, colleges, and universities.

STATE COLLEGES TO CRUSH OUT DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGES.

This policy is foreshadowed in the proposed National University scheme. I am not drawing inferences from my imagination. The address of President White of Cornell University, delivered at Detroit, in August, 1874, lacks nothing in openness and directness of speech. Among other points, it contains these: "It is in view of such a meagre growth in over two hundred years, under the prevailing system, that I present the following as the fundamental proposition of this paper:—

"The main provision for advanced education in the United States must be made by the people at large, acting through their National and State Legislatures, to endow and maintain institutions for the higher instruction, fully equipped and free from sectarian control."

"But I argue next, that our existing public-school system leads us logically and necessarily to the endowment of advanced instruction."

To show his utter contempt for the rudimentary education called for by President Grant, Mr. White thus expresses his conviction: "The preliminary education which many of our strongest men received leaves them simply beasts of prey. It has simply sharpened their claws and tusks; but a higher education, whether in science, literature, or history, not only sharpens the faculties, but gives him new exemplars and ideals." President White and Herbert Spencer both require very advanced education before morals, under this new dispensation, avail to make a man better.

NO COLLEGES BUT STATE COLLEGES.

Mr. White's address is not a string of propositions and arguments without conclusions. Here is one:—

"Next, as to State policy, I would have it go in the same direction as heretofore, but with a liberality and steadiness showing far more foresight. I would have each of those States build up higher, upon the foundations laid by national grants, their public institutions for advanced instruction as distinguished from private sectarian institutions."

"I would have each State build up one institution under its control, rather than the twenty under the control of conferences, and dioceses, and synods, and consistories, and presbyteries, and denominational associations of various sects."

There can be no mistake about the learned President's meaning, nor is one denominational organization omitted from his comprehensive catalogue. He advocates secularism, pure and simple, in our colleges and universities, paid for by taxes levied on the laborers, mechanics, and farmers of the country. He excludes from State aid all institutions in which any religious tenet, even the existence of an overruling Providence, is taught. If, on the establishment of these secular State colleges, their authorities should permit the reading of the Bible, as a book of spiritual or religious truths of more value than the Koran, it will be the cheerful duty of the Liberal League to protest against the abuse and infraction of the law, as the League protested in Philadelphia. "The use of the Bible in the public schools is a violation of the recognized American principle that the State and Church ought to be absolutely separate."

HOW WILL THE EVANGELICALS LIKE IT?

What will the members of the New England Baptist Educational Convention, assembled in Worcester, Mass., who recommended the establishment of at least one academy under Baptist control in each of the New England States, say to this arrangement? What will their brethren assembled in Chicago, and representing the Western States, think of it? How will the Southern Baptists who met in Marion, Ala., and who declared that "the only hope is Christian education in our schools," like a policy destined to overshadow and destroy denominational high schools, academies, and colleges, as it destroyed denominational elementary schools? These three conventions were held in 1871. President Andrews, of Denison University, Ohio, has the advantage of four years' experience and observation since the holding of these conventions. He has seen the clouds gathering; he has heard the mutterings of the brewing storm; the signs in the heavens tell him that, when that storm bursts, it will be over the heads of denominational colleges. "The proposed reform," says President Andrews, "will involve religious complications. Higher education cannot be separated from religion. Atheists will not pay taxes to support theistic instruction, nor theists atheistic. But to put higher instruction into the hands of the government is not only impolitic, but wrong in principle. . . . The government should hold the same relation to higher education that it does to religion. Further, religion is essential to higher culture, and the State cannot teach religion. It is injustice to those opposed to Christianity. Christianity is the natural ally of culture. Finally, intellectual culture without religion cannot build character. The great need of the nation is moral force. The divorce of culture and religion is forced and unnatural." Does President Andrews hope to avert the storm by his weak voice? Does he dream of holding the inner line of fortifications, protecting his higher education, after abandoning to the enemy all the outposts? When elementary schools, in which the foundation of sound Christian morals is laid, were given over to secularists at their first bidding, resistance to the advancing foe became impossible.

WHAT THE METHODISTS THINK.

In 1873, the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the quadrennial address of its bishops, thus put itself on record: "We do not hesitate to avow that we regard the education of the young as one of the leading functions of the Church, and that she cannot abdicate in favor of the State without infidelity to her trust and irreparable damage to society. The reasons for occupying this ground, which inhere in the very nature of this interest, and in the relation of children to the Church, all are intensified by the antagonism of modern science, and the outcasting of the religious element from all the school systems fostered by State legislation. It is not ours to dispute with Cæsar; but, fully persuaded that the salt of religious truth alone can preserve education, we feel that the responsibilities of the Church grow with the progress of society and the demands of the age."

WHAT MAKES THE METHODISTS CRAZY.

Other authorities of high standing in the Methodist denomination might be cited in favor of religious teaching in schools. It is but fair to state that the mention of any system of schools under which common justice might be meted out to Catholic parents, suffices to drive the whole body of Methodist preachers and hearers frantic, crazy. The Baptists are not much less intolerant. Secularists may therefore count on their assistance in ousting from the schools the very name of the Christians' God. The professed principles of these religious sects avail nothing against their avowed hatred of the Catholic Church and Catholics.

WHO SUPPORT CHURCHES.

The various evangelical sects yielded up the contest for religious education in common schools almost without a struggle. It is said that the children, whose education is not advanced beyond the elementary branches of learning, do not in time become pew-holders and supporters of churches. These efficient aids to church support are found in the classes which pass through denominational schools of a higher grade. Round these all the forces of evangelicalism will rally to uphold the right of parents of the respectable class to provide religious education for their children. Certainly the zeal, the labors, the munificent generosity of the evangelical denominations, to build and endow academies and colleges, deserve unbounded praise. But when the State opens its plethoric treasury to establish secular colleges, with allowances of freedom not possible in sectarian institutions, the struggle will be short and decisive. This is not prophecy; it is history.

WHAT KILLS EVANGELICAL COLLEGES.

The once flourishing Methodist College at Lima, N. Y., dwindled to insignificance, and moved to Syracuse to escape death, shortly after the opening of Cornell University. About the same time Hobart College, under the control of the Episcopal Church, began to lose students, until now, notwithstanding large endowments, the fingers of the two hands would almost suffice to count them. The Presbyterian Seminary of Genesee closed its doors when a State normal school in the same village opened its classes. The Baptist Academy of Brockport became a State normal school to escape death. Other places have the same history. The atmosphere of these normal schools is still redolent with evangelicalism, but it is only on sufferance; at the first demand of Jew or atheist the names of the God, Creator, and Christ will be banished, praying and hymn-singing stopped.

I now leave evangelical Christians to ponder over President Grant's demand that no religious tenet shall be taught in State schools, and this new definition of non-sectarianism.

SECULARISTS ARE IN GREAT GLEE

over their progress. They look forward to speedy and complete success. Their victory in common schools carries them triumphantly along to State secular universities. Indeed, they might begin their song of triumph, if not for complete accomplishment, then for rapid advancement. Only one foe stands undismayed before them. It is the Catholic parent who permits no one to come between him and his child. The father is a Christian, prizing his faith more than his purse or the world's esteem; resolute to transmit to his offspring the precious boon of religion in its purity and brightness, undimmed by the jeers, and scoffs, and calumnies of unbelievers; he will not permit his children to breathe an atmosphere of infidelity. Others may think and say that he is wrong; he knows that he is right. He meddles not with others. He listens to much counsel from well-meaning friends. They tell him it is a glorious privilege for his boy to be the equal and companion of a rich man's son. It may happen—it often happens—that he cares no more for the rich man's son than for the rich man himself. They point to the palatial schoolhouse, grand and gorgeous in all its appointments; to the teachers, learned and accomplished. They tell him all these shall his son enjoy, without price or pay, if he will but intrust his boy's education to the State, which loves to play foster-father to its children. The poor man's poverty gnaws into the bone under the proffered bribe; his mind dwells on the temporal advantages so enticingly offered; he loves his child, and he believes in an overruling Providence, a God, Creator, Supreme Master of the universe; he believes in a world to come, and cherishes the hope that, after this life, he and his boy shall be reunited with the blessed in heaven. Under the coarse coat and rough exterior of many a day-laborer there beats a heart of honest manliness that would scorn to be the beneficiary of any man's aid. He pays for his child's education; he hates to pay for a superior education for his richer neighbor's son. There is a laudable pride in this spirit of independence and self-reliance, the very virtues upon which the Republic depends for its existence.

He can conceive of no true happiness except as his life conforms to the teachings and will of his God. His thoughts of happiness for himself are bound up with those of his child. His child's happiness for this world and the next interests and determines his actions at home, in its play, in school, and in church. He is concerned about its lessons, but still more about every influence bearing on the direction and formation of mind and character. Like Herbert Spencer, he knows that mere intellectual education will not form character; and, like President White, he holds that the preliminary education which many receive "only sharpens claws and tusks, and makes beasts of prey." To guard against such dangers, this father, whose religion is real and living, made up of doctrines to be known and believed, and of observances and practices to be faithfully followed, dares not before God and his conscience neglect to train his son in these observances, make him familiar with their use, and fill his mind and soul with love and reverence toward them. How will it be with his boy, if the school fail to come to his aid, or, what is worse, operate disastrously, by positive or negative teaching, upon his soul? What will be the future of that boy if the atmosphere he breathes at school be filled with doubt, sneers, negation? There is not in this audience one father who, if he believed in a life to come, of happiness or misery eternal, would take any unnecessary chances with regard to his child's education and school life. If you judge the rest of the world only from your stand-point of belief, the brave struggle of a Catholic poor man to obtain a Christian education for his child will continue to be an enigma, and lead to acts of injustice.

AGREEMENTS AND DISAGREEMENTS.

Catholics and secularists agree on some points, and differ on others.

They agree that education is an important factor in the making of an intelligent citizen, and is therefore very desirable. They do not agree in the character of the education necessary to make this good citizen. The Catholic points to his personal sacrifices in time, labor, and money, to secure for his children education in the sense in which he understands it. The secularist bids us look at what the State has done for him. He cannot demonstrate the earnestness and sincerity of his convictions and preaching by what he has done. He pays, it is true, his share of public taxes. So does the Catholic. The secularist insists that there shall be State schools after his plan, according to his convictions, paid for by taxation from which no one shall be exempt, while all shall be obliged to drink at his well of knowledge, such as it is. A Catholic argues that the secularist's notion of education was never strong, never attained to the power of a principle, or he would have withdrawn his children from schools in which they were taught what he might be pleased to call the superstitions of evangelicalism. As between the two, on the head of personal sacrifices in furtherance of the cause of education, the Catholic has an advantage over the secularist in demonstrating the courage of his convictions.

Both agree that instruction in morals in some form is essential for the right education of youth. They differ in their understanding of what is meant by morals, and as to the authority by which such teaching should be inculcated. The secularist rises no higher in his conception of morals than the temporal well-being of the child, and "the doing of acts conducive to general enjoyment." Rev. A. D. Mayo, Unitarian minister, calls this policy "a materialistic naturalism, and a philosophical fatalism."

SECULARISTS TEACHING MORALS.

The helplessness of the secularist as a teacher of the people is best described by Herbert Spencer in First Principles: "Few, if any, are as yet fitted wholly to dispense with such (religious) conceptions as are current. The highest abstractions take so great a mental power to realize with any vividness, and are so inoperative on conduct unless they are vividly realized, that their regulative effects must, for a long period to come, be appreciable on but a small minority. . . . Those who relinquish the faith in which they have been brought up, for this most abstract faith in which religion and science unite, may not unconsciously act up to their convictions. Left to their organic morality, enforced only by general reasonings imperfectly wrought out and difficult to keep before the mind, the defects of Nature will often come out more strongly than they would have done under their previous creed." No one is better entitled to a hearing on the side of the secularists than Herbert Spencer. How far they are able to provide a code of morals for the training of the young in substitution of that of the Christian religion, he has clearly stated. The child accepts its lessons in science and morals on authority. The secularist child has no other authority than that of the teacher, supplemented and enforced by its parents. Hence the necessity of harmony of thought between parent and teacher. But "moral goodness," to be effective even in the secularist's idea, demands vividness of conception beyond the power of attainment on the part of children, since few of their parents can rise to its realization. In other words, the teaching of morals in a secularist's school is all but impossible.

STANDARDS OF MORALS DIFFER.

The secularist's standard of morals differs in material points from that of the Catholic. The former, in admitting the law of divorce, consents to a disruption of ties that alone guarantee the sacredness and unity of the family; permits passion, pleasure, and self-will to have their way in defiance of that law of self-restraint and patience under trials and difficulties necessary to hold the family together, at least for the children's sake. The Catholic can address the secularist in the words of the eloquent Bishop of Orleans: "It is not so much my Church which they would destroy as your home, and I defend it. For all those things which are the supreme objects of your desire—reason, philosophy, society, the basis of your institutions, the subject of your books, the sanctity of your hearts, the morals of your children,—these are the things which I defend, and which you throw away in crowning those who would destroy them."

A Catholic's code of morals embraces the teachings of the Bible, interpreted by the Church. It does not end with teachings: it has ordinances, sacraments divinely instituted to give grace, supernatural power with which to resist temptation, overcome passion, escape from sin. Your denial of these truths does not lessen a Catholic's faith in them, nor weaken his conscience with regard to them.

You may remember Henry Ward Beecher's last Thanksgiving sermon, and the picture he drew of the condition of morals in the Brooklyn schools, in which were teachers who held their positions by the sacrifice of their virtue to school commissioners. You may also have heard that Thomas W. Field, Superintendent of Schools in the same city of Brooklyn, in his annual report of four or five years ago, gave a fearful account of the prevalent immorality.

This report was suppressed by the Board of Education, on the principle, I suppose, that the whole truth must not always be spoken. Is it any wonder that Catholic parents ask that they, and not politicians, shall have the choosing of their children's teachers? You have not forgotten the article in the Boston Herald of Oct. 20, 1871, giving the substance of Professor Agassiz' address before the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association. Again, I say, is it any wonder that Catholic parents, hearing these confessions, even under a stringent policy of silence and concealment, lose faith in the State system, and provide schools of their own at sacrifices worthy of martyrs? I cite these instances in no spirit of exultation, but of regret; and it therefore gives me pleasure to say that the character of the teachers of Boston stands too high to come under such imputations.

THE STATE CANNOT TEACH RELIGION.

Catholics and secularists agree that a State without religion cannot teach religion. Therefore, say the latter, let there be no religious teaching. Therefore, say the former, let there be religious teaching in the schools by those who can impart it in harmony with the parent's belief. These say, furthermore, that, when Massachusetts had religion, she was careful that religion, and morality through religion, should be taught in our schools. It is claimed that Massachusetts gained her most distinguished honors from men educated under religious influences in school, at home, and in church; but that now she is consuming her capital, without putting any of it at interest. The shadow of religious teachings still lingers around her school-houses. Shall it be that her future men of note are to be no more than shadows of those that went before them?

[CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.]

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

HEAVEN AND HELL:

A MOHAMMEDAN LEGEND.

Within the learned city, ere day was overcast,
Amid the busy multitude a stately woman passed;
And in her hand uplifted a lighted torch she bore,
And carried still a water-jar that held its dripping store.

"Now pause, thou holy woman! and, prithee, what's the sign?"

And what thy mystic meaning, and what thy word divine?"
Nor faded then the glamour, in her far-reaching eyes,
But still she turning heeded, and answered in this wise:—

"For woes and wrongs of ages unto my vision given,
I would cast my burning flambeau within the gates of heaven,

And with abundant waters would quench the flames of hell,
While men, and God, and angels, should answer, 'It is well.'"

"And then, O Light ineffable! thy glory would be shown,
And men should know and love thee, but for thyself alone;
And worship in thy presence with heart and aim sincere,
And serve thee now and ever, neither through hope nor fear."

ANNETTE CORLISS.

METHUEN, MASS., Feb. 7, 1876.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 19.

H. Hyde, $1; C. F. Paige, $3.20; R. G. Deathe, $1.60; A. Simon, $5; J. W. Sulist, $3.20; W. T. Menefee, $1.10; C. F. Gard, $3.20; C. B. Stickney, $3.20; E. Burdick, $3.20; C. M. Severance, 50 cents; P. B. Sibley, $1.20; Sadie E. Fiske, $3.20; E. C. Darling, $3.20; J. T. Dickins, $2.50; J. H. Morrison, 80 cents; G. L. Henderson, $15; Wm. Rotch, $20; J. L. Jones, 35 cents; C. A. Olmstead, 80 cents; W. A. Clarke, 30 cents; W. H. Dana, 25 cents; Geo. H. Foster, $1.82; W. W. Crawford, $2; A. W. Kelsey, $2; F. E. Nipher, $1.20; Mrs. E. Dozier, $5.50.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

THE LAWS CONCERNING NEWSPAPERS.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, considered as wishing to continue the subscription.

2. If subscribers wish their papers discontinued, publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible. Notice should always be given of the removal.

4. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office or place to which they are sent, they are held responsible until they settle bills and give notice to discontinue.

5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a paper from the office, or removing and leaving it unclaimed for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, will be held in law to be a subscriber.

7. If subscribers pay in advance, they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to continue to send it, and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

The Index.

BOSTON, FEBRUARY 24, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS BROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

THE Golden Rule thinks Mark Twain was right in advising to "murder prayer-meeting bores." What a sweet Golden Rule!

A CONNECTICUT subscriber writes: "Having been a deeply interested reader of THE INDEX almost from the first number, I feel that I cannot afford to miss for one week the instructive and profitable reading it affords me. Although times are hard and wages low, yet I can well spare six cents a week for THE INDEX, even if I have to forego some other luxuries."

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

THE "Religious Freedom Amendment," at the suggestion of an earnest friend of that measure, has been printed on half-sheets, for the use of all who are willing to interest themselves in getting it fairly before the people. Space is left below the Amendment for writing; and those who are willing to do a little unselfish work for their country at this crisis can use these half-sheets very effectively by sending them to the editors of daily papers, with a written request to publish the Amendment as a matter of common interest. Copies of this printed Amendment will be sent cheerfully to any address on application at this office.

AN ILLINOIS subscriber who has often proved his solid friendship for THE INDEX by actively working to increase its circulation exercises his "constitutional right of grumbling" by criticisms that we do not wish at all to suppress, though they were apparently not made for publication. We are sure, however, that he misconceives the real purport and tendency of the articles he alludes to: "When I first subscribed for THE INDEX, I did it with a great deal of enthusiasm. I supposed it was going to be a paper in favor of all reforms that were calculated to lighten the burdens heaped upon down-trodden humanity, whether in Church or State or public opinion. I confess, however, that this enthusiasm has somewhat cooled down. I should regret extremely, however, to see THE INDEX go down. It has dealt many manly and giant blows at superstition and theological tyranny. Although these blows have been hard and well laid on, it has been done in a spirit worthy of imitation. For this, it merits the approbation of all friends of religious freedom. But on what many of its patrons regard as the greatest question of the age, it has placed itself on the side of the aristocracy of wealth, lending whatever strength it could to the strong against the weak. Witness the editorial contributions of R. P. Halliwell in defence of that iniquitous engine of oppression and injustice, the U. S. banking system, and his opposition to the labor movement; and also your own advocacy of the right of taking interest on capital." How any one can think that savings banks, paying interest on the small deposits of the poor, and giving them thus a powerful motive to store up and honestly increase their little earnings, oppress the weak, or favor oppression at all, we cannot understand; but we are content to abide by the judgment of those who are just and well-informed.

THE PURIFICATION OF POLITICS.

The Hon. John T. Hoffman, formerly Governor of New York, recently delivered a very thoughtful lecture in New York city on "Liberty and Order—the Limits of Government." Several things which he said deserve to be pondered by all who have the best interests of popular government at heart. Among them, however, none is more worthy of note than his remarks on "the importance of a single executive power"—

"Thus, even in this, the most popular government known to history, does power steal away from the many to the few, and often turns to one political chieftain. Here where we have so holy a horror of the 'one man power,' the interests of the community are often guarded for a time (sometimes injured) by the inclinations of one man, and that man, not unfrequently, one not in official life. This is the one-man power, an essential element in every government, whether of the people, of a party organization, of a railroad company, or of any other branch of private business, reasserting itself. We have unwisely shut it out from our State constitution and our city charters; still it makes itself felt, because in the nature of things it is a necessity. We refuse the necessary, undivided, executive power to the official openly chosen by the voice of the people; it is seized by some one else, self-appointed, or selected in secret by a few. The executive branch of an effective government must always consist of a single head, and to that head must be accountable the officers entrusted with every part of the actual administration of the government. No good substitute can be found for a single executive power. Substitutes have been tried. The two kings of Sparta and the two consuls at Rome were failures. The distribution of administrative power among independent heads of departments at Albany is a failure. The distribution of power and responsibility in this city among Boards and Commissions has been a most costly failure. And a single executive has this advantage: that, independent of the restraints of law, there are certain moral restraints which act upon an individual, but are inefficient when we seek to apply them to bodies of men, or to a number of men among whom responsibility is divided. Conscience is not a thing which can safely be distributed, a little bit for the separate use of each individual member of a numerous body. A man is capable of shame; a body of men, as is well known, feels in a much less degree this natural restraint upon human conduct."

There is nothing specially new in these reflections; but they present considerations to which too little attention is commonly paid in political discussions in this country. The extent to which we are now governed by unofficial "rings," from the invisible cliques which manage caucuses and primary meetings to the Tammany, Canal, Whiskey, and other rings which contrive to enrich themselves at the expense of the communities they simultaneously defraud and disgrace, shows how hard it is to protect democratic institutions from political sharpers and acknowledged or unacknowledged "bosses." Against maladministration of the government there is no absolute protection; but the amount of it will be certainly minimized by that system which, other things being equal, shall with the most force bring the moral sentiment of the community to bear upon men entrusted with office. The civil service reform has been purposely pushed aside by interested politicians and bargain-makers, because it threatened to destroy the trade by which they lived; but the bitter cup of humiliation pressed to the lips of the nation by foreign ministers and home officials is surely enough to make every decent citizen look about him restlessly for some escape from the shameful situation. Next to securing the very best men in the country for public office, the likeliest way to restore a respectable degree of honesty in the government is to place the average men who must be their substitutes under such a system as shall keep them most constantly in public view. The best policeman is a good gas-lamp.

Governor Hoffman points out the evil of divided responsibility, and the necessity of concentrating rather than distributing the power from which responsibility is inseparable. You can distribute power, he argues, but not conscience; the more responsibility is divided among the members of Boards or Commissions, the less power has each member in determining results, and the less does he feel himself personally implicated if these results are bad. To all reproaches from the public, he can plead that he was "out-voted" or "out-influenced," and thus parry the avenging stroke of popular indignation. That "corporations have no souls," is a pithy proverbial recognition of these facts. If conscience is really to be a positive force in administering public affairs, it must be by concentrating power and responsibility in as few hands as possible for clearly specified and strictly limited purposes. Each official must know that any failure in his own department will be at once referred directly to himself, without the possibility of escaping under the plea that he had not the power to prevent it. One of the most prolific causes of political corruption is the multiplication of official positions to which only incomplete power and therefore only partial responsibility are attached. Such a system should be framed and put into operation as shall leave one man solely responsible for the proper conduct of each special department, by giving him entire control of it for the time being, and making it certain that he will be held to the strictest account for the proper administration of it.

The objection that this is to establish universally the "one man power," and violate the spirit of democratic institutions, is fallacious. Democratic institutions require the equal recognition of society and the individual, not the sacrifice of the latter to the former. The people cannot do everything in their collective capacity; they must divide the labor of providing for the collective interests; they must delegate power to individual agents in special provinces of the public concerns; and they must comply with the conditions which will make individual action efficient and honest. The way to do this is to respect the individuality of their servants, to repose a carefully defined trust in each, and to give to each enough power in executing this trust to make it possible and right to hold him individually responsible. In this way alone will it be possible to bring to bear, first the full power of the individual's own conscience in exacting the faithful discharge of his duty, and next the full power of the social conscience in exacting a satisfactory public report of his action. Any system which permits officials to evade personal responsibility for their doings is not only demoralizing to themselves and to the public, but it is also false to the democratic principle, which regards society as merely a union of individuals who are mutually responsible for the use they make of their liberty. The illegitimate "one man power" is that which clothes an individual with undefined and irresponsible authority; but the "one man power" which consists in a delegated, defined, and limited authority within a certain sphere for a certain period, and enables the individual in this sphere to execute his own personal judgment under strict responsibility, immediately to his appointing principal and mediately to the community, is perfectly legitimate, and in fact indispensable to democratic institutions. For this system places every office-holder in the full blaze of a publicity he cannot escape, and favors, not represses, the exercise of his private conscience. Provided the province assigned to each officer is not greater than he can personally supervise, it is a system which must certainly tend to reduce to a minimum the personal failures in office which now are so mischievous and mortifying. Power and responsibility must always go together; it is idle to demand the latter without conceding the former; and the practice of dividing responsibility among too many, or of attempting to exact it under impossible moral conditions, is fraught only with universal disaster.

Hence we hold that the only way to purify and elevate our civil service is, first, to hold out sufficient inducements to attract to it the ablest and honestest persons in the country; secondly, to establish a system of promotion by merit, and not by political favor or partisan subservience; thirdly, to give dignity to official positions by respecting the individuality of their incumbents, which can only be done by giving them full control and undivided responsibility in a strictly limited department; and, lastly, by holding all office-holders to the most rigorous accountability for the faithful discharge of their trusts. The contests of parties should not be for the purpose of deciding who shall hold or distribute the subordinate executive offices, for this ought to be determined by a wise and well-established system of political promotion, but for the purpose of deciding what measures shall be adopted and carried out by the government. To-day the real struggle is too much for the purpose of "dividing the spoils," and both platforms and candidates are used as mere means to this end. But just so long as public offices are regarded as personal prizes, and not simply as honorable trusts to be honorably discharged, so long will politics be a sea of moral nastiness into which no self-respecting citizen will consent to be plunged. The Centennial Year of the republic ought to be marked by at least an honest and vigorous effort to initiate a great reform in the civil service, and to render impossible for the future such national calamities as the accusations brought against Minister Schenck and Private Secretary Babcock. "Caesar's wife should be above suspicion"; and so should Columbia's servants. But mere declamations in favor of good morals are powerless to achieve reform. Intellect, as always, must be the creator of real reform by devising the best system, providing adequate means of carrying it out, and securing the necessary moral conditions without which all moralizing, however eloquent, is wasted. National virtue will never be furnished by gas companies; there must be particular measures and particular men brought forward, or national virtue will be more and more driven into Fourth of July speeches. The American people are just as honest in the main, we believe, as the English or the German people; but American morality is becoming so depreciated in the market by a few adventurers thrust into prominence by a wretched political system of office-filling that we are all forced to hang our heads for shame in the presence of a justly indignant world. To rectify all this, we need thinkers and actors, not orators; and, above all, we need the "natural morality" of sound intelligence and honest purpose which is inculcated by Free Religion.

TWO SOUTHERN SERMONS.

A few Sundays ago I went to a Presbyterian Church here in this Southern capital. In respect to social standing and culture the church ranks among the highest in the city. The congregation was sober and dignified, and not vulgarly large. There were many empty seats, and some wholly empty pews. The wide side-galleries had only some half-dozen occupants, so that the contribution-collectors did not even take the trouble to go up the stairs. The people were not over-dressed, but well-dressed, with an air of being comfortable in both temporal and spiritual estates. I saw no poor people there. The congregation corresponded very well both in numbers and character to a congregation of similar social rank in a Northern town of twelve or fifteen thousand inhabitants. The minister was not in the least sensational. In both doctrine and manner he was soundly dull. In his sermon, however, he was not without earnestness of delivery; and it was a tolerably well-written discourse. He is a man, I judge, of some theological learning, and of good natural abilities.

But how cribbed and confined he was by his antique creed! From some remarks that he had made in a preliminary notice concerning a proposed series of union revival meetings, in which he referred to the evident need of a real revival of religion as shown by the corruptions of the times, and of this community in particular, and from the passages of Scripture he read in connection with his text, I thought he was certainly going to give a political sermon bearing directly on the political and social crisis in this State, of which the newspapers were full. Others of the congregation thought so too, I conjectured, for there was special alertness manifest in listening to the Scripture passages, which seemed to have a wonderful applicability to the present state of public affairs,—showing how history is ever repeating itself. The passages were from one of the old prophets' stern rebukes of the corrupting sins of the Israelites, with promises of restoration and peace if the hateful iniquities should be put away. They were selections that I used often to read in connection with anti-slavery sermons in the days before emancipation came. But they seemed to be quite as fitting to the present political condition in South Carolina. I put myself into an attitude of eager listening, congratulating myself that, whichever side the preacher should take, I was there to hear this Southern political sermon.

The special text was announced—"Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall become as white as snow,"—and the discourse began. It began far off in the Calvinistic metaphysical scheme of atonement, with not even a reference to the actual experience of the Hebrews out of which the vivid poetical words were originally pressed. Still, I thought, he will not stay there; that is only preface. But the preface over, he announced his subject as "God's power to forgive sin, and the wonderful means—the atoning sacrifice of an Infinite Being—whereby this power is made effective." My hopes dropped. Others of the congregation began gradually, I observed, to grow listless, and some of the men, confident won that nothing disturbing was to be uttered, composed themselves at the head of their pews for their accustomed naps. I continued to look for some practical application at the end to present times and needs. But it did not come. From beginning to end, the sermon contained not an allusion, direct or indirect, to any sins, corruptions or crimes, political, social, financial, alleged to be rife in this community to-day, and making the chief topic of the newspapers and of conversation. These were the one thing pressing upon the thought of that congregation, and yet the sermon nowhere touched them. It was the old story of Adam's transgression, entailing moral and spiritual disability upon the race, until the disability was removed by the happy thought occurring to the Almighty, that he himself could make infinite atonement for the transgression by suffering death in the person of his own son. And so the golden opportunity for both preacher and people passed and was lost. This was their religion! How could it anywhere go into their daily living? To me it seemed a sacrilegious waste of the sentiments and aspirations, and even of the traditional pious feeling, that had drawn them together at that place and hour.

A Sunday later, passing a plain barn-like building just as it began to grow dark, I was attracted by the numbers of colored people entering it. Looking in, I saw that it was a church (or meeting-house, as the white people would call it) for the negroes. Immediately I turned up the steps. The lower part of the building was already full, and I followed with the throng into the gallery and found a seat, though pretty well in the rear. Services had not regularly begun—that is not from the pulpit,—but the congregation was already singing; apparently any one who chose, after one hymn was finished, starting another, in which the rest joined. And during this volunteer singing, the people continued to crowd in, many bringing chairs with them, until every sitting-place and standing-place in the building was occupied. It was a Methodist congregation, and it proved to be the last service by the pastor previous to his going to another field of labor. It was an exceptional occasion, and the congregation, of course, was exceptionally large, though I was told that generally the house is well filled.

The sermon had several points of interest. The preacher, a colored man, was educated up to the point of respectable grammatical construction, and, after he warmed in to his subject, had considerable fluency. At first his text—"Be ye steadfast," etc.,—hampered him, and he labored rather painfully. But after a time he threw away all care of keeping a connection with his text, and began to preach a farewell discourse full of his own pastoral experience and personality. He praised and thanked his friends without stint, and severely castigated the few enemies in the church who had opposed and slandered him,—though finally forgiving them. The congregation was evidently much interested in this part of the discourse. But the point that most impressed me was the portion addressed to the young men and young women, reviewing, as he said, the aims of his past preaching and efforts in their behalf. His remarks here had great good sense and earnestness. He dwelt upon their opportunities for education and self-improvement, and the importance of their rightly using them; contrasted their condition with that of their fathers and mothers a few years ago; told them they must be sober, industrious, temperate, truthful, pure; that in short, if they would get on in life, they must make themselves men and women, and that the religion which was only emotional excitement, without this basis of good character, did not amount to much.

On the whole, the sermon of this colored preacher seemed to me to strike the real needs of the congregation and the hour much more nearly than had the sermon of the white preacher the Sunday previous. To be sure, after the sermon, when the prayers began—and there was a series of them, in a peculiarly fascinating intonation, for the departing "Brother Jackson and his family,"—and when the congregation broke into their weird singing, not a little of the "emotional excitement" was manifest, and the doctrine of the "atoning grace of Christ" was quite as evidently the basis of the religion here as it had been in the Presbyterian service. But somehow or other, this scheme of atonement, with its cross and blood and dying God, appeared to be more at home among these half-educated, demonstrative, emotional, and childish children of the tropics than in the enlightened and dignified Presbyterian congregation. To the former it was evidently more real. You can easily imagine them to conceive of the crucifixion as a present event close by, and of Christ as actually taking them in pardon by the hand; hence they were all athrill with emotion. But to those Presbyterians it was an act so far away in time and space that it had no power to disturb their serenity or trouble their slumbers. Such a theology in any cultivated section of humanity to-day is an anachronism.

W. J. P.

FREE-THOUGHT NOTES.

No. XII.

BY A VETERAN ENGLISH FREETHINKER.

Physicians have always had a larger share of my affection than priests—not that I undervalue priests in their place. Mere consolation, when there is nothing else you can give a man, is worth his having, when it is consonant with his convictions, and comes from an honest mouth; but the wise physician who saves you from needing consolation is a far more valuable friend. I owe my life to the generous skill of a London physician, Dr. Hugh Campbell, and my eyesight to Dr. Brudenell Carter, an eminent oculist, who with a sure hand examined the chambers of light, and opened the windows once more. For a time I envied the man in the Scriptures, who saw "men as trees, walking," for that was more than I could do. As yet I am not able to read, though I can write a little, but cannot revise it afterwards. I can walk about the streets in the daytime, but wish I was in Paris, where the cabs do not kill you without warning. Three have run at me lately in London, without notice, and one has overturned itself with me in it. It was in Pall Mall. We all smashed over under the window where Cobden died. Not being able to look after my portmanteau, I had had it put in with me, and, seeing the crash must come, providentially (I think that is the right term) it was placed on the side on which the windows would first be broken. Resting myself against it, when I saw the crash must come, I escaped being cut by the glass, and was extricated with a confused impression that my next letter to THE INDEX would be a little disjointed.

You will be glad to hear that we are not devoid in England of great benefactors, like those in your own country, who give without sectarian conditions. In Birmingham (which, being the town of my nativity, I take pride in) magnificent gifts have been made by Sir Josiah Mason. This gentleman, formerly a mechanic of very humble origin, a circumstance which with manly pride he oft recalls, spent a few years ago a million and a quarter of dollars in building and endowing a great Orphanage, free to destitute children, without regard to sex or country, color or creed. He has a chapel in it, to which persons whose religion has no supernatural terrors in it are free to preach to the little ones. Sir Josiah, on giving me the pleasure one day of beholding the many devices which his kind ingenuity had perfected for the comfort of the children, told me his experience of those who applied for leave to preach in the chapel. "I told them," said Sir Josiah, "that I observed that all of them spoke of the souls of the children, but none of their bodies; and I told them that those who conducted any services there must remember that my children had bodies as well as souls, and they must direct their attention mainly to giving them information thereupon."

A solicitor of the town, Mr. Johnson, of unusual capacity for seeing into the future of a trust, has been the legal adviser of the founder of the great Orphanage mentioned, and the trust deed is drawn in a way which admits of the foundation keeping pace with the progress of the age. So far as my knowledge extends, this has never been done in any country so wisely and so securely as in this instance.

Latterly this great benefactor who has given the Orphanage has given nearly a million dollars more for the erection of a great Science College. The London Times, in an account it gave of the gift of this property to the town, said:—

"The management of this college is vested at present in six Trustees—Mr. W. C. Aitken, Mr. J. Thackeray Bunce, Dr. Gibbs Blake, Dr. Heslop, Mr. G. J. Johnson, and Mr. George Shaw, together with the founder, Sir Josiah Mason. After the death of the founder, the corporation of Birmingham is to elect five other Trustees, vacancies in the enlarged body being filled up as they occur, by the Trustees and the Town Council respectively. It is provided that the Trustees shall always be laymen and Protestants, and that no theological test or qualification shall be imposed upon or required from any professor or teacher in the college."

Mr. Johnson named here is the solicitor whom I have mentioned. Mr. Thackeray Bunce is a journalist of assured power, and dispassionate liberality of view. Mr. George Shaw is a man of great scientific acquirements, and of determined philosophical views, so that the interests of the great endowment are in safe keeping.

I see that the quotation which you were kind enough to make from the Nation of the friendly and serviceable notice which it makes of my History of Coöperation, speaks of me as "best known as an avowed atheist"; as though it were bad enough to be an atheist, but much worse to make the avowal of it. The worst of this sort of writing is that it gives people the impression that you run about the world, obtruding upon it the information that you differ from the majority as to the conclusiveness of human knowledge with regard to the origin of the universe. I never do anything of the kind, and I never did. I always consider that I have as much right to my views as any one else has to his, and, when it is requisite for any purpose of argument, I explain my views. The Nation is obliging enough to be "agreeably-disappointed" at not finding in my book the random talk which it expected from my antecedents. The fact is, my antecedents have been all of the other kind. In the many movements in which I have been engaged, I have been trusted precisely because I was not random; and, whenever objections are made to me, it is by ardent colleagues who think push is progress, and are for advancing without any commissariat behind them. My preference is for fighting like a soldier, who plans his assaults in proportion to his resources, and not like a savage who advances with nothing but his whoop and his tomahawk.

The journal entitled Daily Life, which some time ago I told you I was proposing to edit, was frustrated by my illness and blindness. For reasons which I think I explained, I had changed the proposed title of my paper from Secularist to that of Daily Life. Since then I was solicited by a friend, Mr. G. W. Foote, a young advocate both of secular and republican principles, who has won good opinions for himself where he has spoken, to join in editing a journal under the name of the Secularist, a title which I have always preferred. The issue has begun with the new year, and will be regularly sent to you. If the Nation should happen to look into it, it will, I hope, be of opinion that we propose to recommend ourselves by strong usefulness rather than by "random talk."

The Secularist will endeavor to make clear the nature and application of Secular principles, and, to prevent Secular education being frustrated by the theological misconception that that which is Secular must be Atheistic, it will show the advantage of the application of Secular principles to the affairs of this life independently of the question of a future existence, and will discuss public questions on those Secular principles which are seldom clearly stated or kept distinct in controversy. It will promote the increase, and better define the character and operations of Secular Societies, that there may be a distinct and intelligent Secular force in every town, influential in improving the conditions of daily life, and aiding—without compromising—the solution of local public questions. It will point out the wide range and vast importance of those material influences which mar or make our individual life. It will show that every question of home or foreign politics may be judged, and its value substantially determined, by its influence upon the Secular life of the people, and will afford space for the discussion of forms of political government and questions in theology, without rendering its supporters responsible for individual opinions. It will include in its pages the discussion of questions affecting the general welfare of the people, and will endeavor to review, as they appear, the chief works of interest to its readers, and indicate useful contributions to current periodical literature. Lastly, it will give reports of the progress of Secularism, wherever it appears to be doing work distinctively useful.

My name and that of Mr. Foote appear as editors. Of course we are practically co-contributors preserving only such unity of exposition as general agreement, mutual courtesy, and gentlemanly deference to the views of each other may promote. Among the writers are certainly some men of genius and learning, in the classic sense of those terms; but I need say nothing on this head, for, so far as it is true, the reader will discover it for himself.

We have devised an "Independent Department," where any writer may express, within the ordinary limits of good taste, and the absence of dishonoring imputations to others, any opinions of importance and public interest. Articles on Republicanism, or Absolutism, or Athelism, or mere theological criticism of Christianity, belong in this Department, as otherwise Secularism would never have any distinctiveness in the eyes of the reader, and every subscriber to the paper would be held responsible for whatever views might be advanced in the paper. As the object of the associated writers of the paper is the widest possible expression of individual view, it is very likely that many things will appear, for which neither editor would wish to be held individually answerable; but if, on the whole, our paper proves to be one of any power and usefulness, the reader will be tolerant of many divergences, if they are the conditions of sensible individuality,—of foolish individuality there is no lack.

Yours always,
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.
22 ESSEX STREET, Temple Bar, London.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

General Schenck has resigned; and the Boston Journal states that he would probably have resigned sooner if the President could have found a suitable person to fill his place. We do not think his place can ever be filled. By unanimous testimony of all persons competent to express an opinion, he is the best poker-player in the United States. In this particular, therefore, England can never hope to look upon his like again. In the second place, his success as a "pigeon" has never been equalled by any foreign minister of any nation on the face of the earth. To seek for another man combining these two remarkable characteristics would be a hopeless task. In view, moreover, of President Grant's remarkable ideas concerning suitability for public office of any kind, we respectfully suggest that no attempt be made to fill his place until after the next presidential election.

Since the reception in Boston of the news of the arrest of the forger Winslow, it is reported that certain notes previously said to be forged have been paid by the men whose names appear as endorers,—in other words, some men of commercial reputation took advantage of Winslow's supposed escape, and the absence, therefore, of the only witness against them, to repudiate their own obligations, and dishonorably throw upon others the burden of a loss which rightfully belonged to them. This action is certainly nearly akin to forgery, and is even more contemptible. It testifies plainly to the existence of a mean and cowardly disposition which is restrained from grave crime solely by fear of subsequent discovery and punishment. The rottenness of commercial honor, displayed by these facts, is more than we had been willing to believe in; and we can only hope that the corruption is not yet deeply seated, but may in time be sloughed off and recovered from.

The South Carolina House of Representatives has adopted articles of impeachment against "Judge" Moses by a vote of 91 to 0; and in the Senate a bill has been introduced designed to legislate both Moses and Whipper out of the offices to which they were so recently chosen. Evidently a wholesome change of sentiment has taken place among the members of the South Carolina Legislature. That this change is due in great measure to the opposition of Governor Chamberlain cannot be doubted, and we are thus furnished with a practical illustration of the value of courageous opposition on the part of one man to the ignorance and recklessness of a number of men. Any temptation to rejoice over the action of the Legislature, however, must be resisted somewhat, when we remember that it was the same Legislature which only a few weeks ago elected these men to office, and that nothing is now known with reference to their characters which was not fully known at that time. It is evident that the majority of the colored men of the South will blindly follow the leadership of a few men for a long time to come; and the question of practical importance is not likely to be, What is their particular view of any subject at any one time? but, What is the character of the men in whom they are known to confide?

As we write, the Advisory Council of Plymouth Church is still in session, and as none of the committees have reported, the result of the action of the Council cannot be predicted with precision, save that it will be of no importance. We make this last statement without hesitation, since the Moderator of the Council, Dr. Leonard Bacon, stated at the opening session that "the main question"—that is, the question of Mr. Beecher's guilt or innocence—was not before the Council, and this is the only question, of course, in which the public at large is interested. Mr. Beecher has taken a very active part in the proceedings, and has made many speeches; in one of these he summoned any man who knew anything whatever against his character to come forward and let the truth be known; then he summoned any archangel in heaven possessed of any fact against him to speak out; and finally, he summoned God himself to tell the truth about him. As God and the archangels are not in the habit of attending "Advisory Councils," and as none of his human accusers were present at the time, his summons met with no response, although it evidently made considerable impression upon the members of the Council, and was received with "great applause." It is strange indeed that, when everybody is willing to have the whole truth known, it has already taken one Great Investigation, one Great Trial, two Great Councils, and volumes of testimony and discussion to settle a simple question of fact, some of the main witnesses to which have not been invited or not been allowed to give their evidence. There was a time when the people of this country were supposed to have a little practical common-sense. Amid all this verbiage of "advisory councils," "mutual councils," "tripartite agreements," and "Congregational usages," and throughout all appeals to God and the archangels, it should not be forgotten that the question at issue is,

Did Henry Ward Beecher commit adultery with Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton?

The result of General Babcock's trial for complicity in the whiskey frauds will be known before this is read. Whatever the verdict of the jury, the evidence has shown conclusively that for several years, from 1870 down almost to the present time, General Babcock carried on a confidential and suspicious correspondence, both by letter and telegram, with the leaders of the St. Louis Whiskey-Ring. General Grant has testified at considerable length in favor of his Secretary, and expresses the firmest belief in his innocence and faithfulness; all of which is good as far as it goes, but would be of greater value if General Grant's opinion with regard to the essentials of personal character had not long since lost all weight in the estimation of the best people of our country.

Three weeks ago, in ridiculing mildly certain curiosities of legislation in Massachusetts, we referred to the law which regulates the length at which lobsters may be boiled. For this reference we have been gently taken to task by "a lover of the lobster when boiled," who states that the law referred to was passed upon petition of the Massachusetts Anglers' Association because of the rapid diminution in the size of lobsters exposed for sale, this diminution being caused by "the immense demand for lobsters for canning purposes." The early extinction of the lobster was threatened, unless indiscriminate catching could be prevented. We assure our correspondent that we also are "a lover of the lobster when boiled," and that we should be very sorry to have this delicacy disappear, or deteriorate in quality. Nevertheless we hold that there are very many subjects (of which this is one) which are entirely outside of the province of legislation. We do not know of any reasonable theory of legislation with which the law in question can be shown to be in harmony. The attempt to define any such theory would show at once the absurd extremes to which it would inevitably lead. Moreover, when legislation steps outside of its true province, its results are not only mischievous, but, however successful temporarily, in the long run they are always abortive. The very best method of ensuring the continued existence of good lobsters, for instance, is, we believe, to leave them without the protection of legislation. If lobsters deteriorate in quality (a very probable result, at first), people would cease to eat lobsters, and fishermen, consequently, would cease to catch them. After a time, as they again become plenty and good, they would again be caught and eaten; and after a few alternations of scarcity and plenty, lobsters would undoubtedly be propagated in enclosures, or in some other more or less artificial manner, as a matter of business; and thereafter the supply, as of any other producible commodity, would be determined only by the demand. This last result has already taken place in the case of oysters, and also in the more improbable case of the delicious white fish of the Western lakes, the extinction of which at one time seemed inevitable. In these two instances every possible form of legislation was tried and failed, and at last the object sought by legislation was attained by other means. These results, however, only serve to confirm (not to create) our belief that the perpetuation of the race of large-sized lobsters is not a function of the Massachusetts Legislature.

The Senate has passed a bill regulating the transportation of cattle railroads; and has passed also the Pension Bill, although in a different form from that in which it came from the House. The only other bill passed by the Senate during the week was one affecting the disposition of public lands in several of the Southern States; but the precise nature of the bill cannot be determined from newspaper reports. The House passed the Fortification Bill, the amount appropriated being very small compared with previous appropriations for the same purpose. The House passed also a bill relating to the execution of Custom House bonds; as the law now stands, every member of an importing firm is obliged to sign these bonds, an obligation which frequently produces great inconvenience; the new bill allows one member to represent the firm, the responsibility of his act being shared by all. In addition to the above, the House passed the Colorado Bill, and a bill for extending the time for filing claims for additional bounties. It passed also a resolution declaring the 22d of February—Washington's birthday—a national holiday. Among matters introduced, but not yet disposed of, may be mentioned Mr. Anthony's resolution, in the Senate, that speeches delivered in Congress hereafter be printed in the Congressional Record as delivered, and that no speeches not actually delivered be allowed a place in the Record. This resolution is directed against two vicious practices, and we trust may be passed and enforced by both Houses. Mr. Kerr has been obliged to leave the Speaker's chair, temporarily, on account of ill health, and Mr. Cox has been chosen to fill his place.

The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council—the highest ecclesiastical tribunal, we believe, in England—has decided that a man need not believe in the personality of Satan. No clergyman of the Church of England, therefore, can now refuse the communion to one who does not believe in the devil. When we recall the fact that this same Privy Council recently decided that a Methodist minister might write his own name with the prefix "Rev." on his daughter's tombstone, we begin to feel concerned about the spiritual condition of the Church of England. If it is not necessary to believe in the personality of Satan, then not in the reality of Satan's dominions; if not in the reality of Satan's dominions, then not in the personality of a deliverer from those dominions; if not—but we forbear. There is logic, and logic, but theology may be neither.

The present aspect of the "Eastern Question" is anything but encouraging. Although the Porte has taken active measures to carry out the reforms proposed in Count Andrassy's note, the insurgents have no confidence in Turkish reform, and demand the acknowledgment of their independence; and Roumania, which has refused the payment of tribute, is said to be supported in her refusal by Russia. On the other hand, Austria is said to have received permission from the Porte to occupy the insurgent territory with her armies—the expense of occupation to be paid by the Porte,—and England has agreed to send a vessel of war in support of the Sultan. If these reports are correct, a very little matter would suffice to bring on a general European war.

Communications.

MR. ARNOTT'S DISMISSAL.

CASTINE, Me., Feb. 4, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The article entitled "Religious Proscription in Maine," published in your issue of Jan. 13, has just been brought to my notice. It is not a thoroughly fair statement of the case.

When Mr. Arnett, the assistant teacher of the Eastern Normal School, stated to the principal his intention of taking ground, in his lecture before the Lyceum, against the rule requiring attendance at church, he was requested by the latter not to do so, but, if he considered the rule objectionable, to present his views to the trustees. After the lecture had been delivered, the principal privately expressed his regret to him.

The matter would have ended there, but the assistant then called a special meeting of the Lyceum at an unusual hour, repeated his attacks upon the rule, defied it, and called upon the students to defy it.

Is the removal of a teacher who thus counsels defiance of a rule, "high-handed intolerance" and "petty persecution"? What other course could be taken, unless the trustees were prepared to repeal the rule at once? And would not the average spirit of manhood, even if prepared to do so on a proper representation, hesitate about being thus "summarily" driven into a repeal which had not been even asked for?

Is not the course of a teacher who undertakes to raise a revolt in an institution with which he had voluntarily connected himself—whose rules he knew, or ought to have known, before he joined it—something more than "injudicious"? Is it not dishonorable and contrary to the "requirements of natural morality"?

(I of course impute no intentional wrong-doing.) Had the conscientious scruples of any student been violated there would have been more excuse; but no such charge has been made. In the case of Catholic students who had scruples against attending Protestant churches the rule has been suspended.

Had the assistant first petitioned the trustees for a repeal of the rule—if, failing there, he had resigned his place, and then given full utterance to his sentiments,—he might not have appeared as a victim of persecution, but he would have taken a manlier course, and more deserving of sympathy.

Discussion as to the "grossly sectarian conduct" of the school would be largely of local interest, and would occupy too much of your space. I consider that it has been grossly exaggerated, and that great injustice has been done to those having charge of it. Be that as it may, it has nothing to do with the demerits of the obnoxious rule; they would be the same, and there would be equal reason for defying it were there no whisper of partiality in its management as between Christian sects. It must be remembered, though many forget it, that any religious exercises, at which students of a public institution are required to be present, such as have been conducted in our public schools for years without objection, and under the supervision of some of the strongest objectors to this rule—even the repeating of the Lord's Prayer once a week,—are just as decided violations of the Constitution of Maine and the principles of religious freedom, and ought to be as much defied as the obnoxious rule itself. For it is not the length or the frequency of the religious service, but the compulsory attendance and possible violation of some one's conscientious scruples by governmental authority which constitute the essence of the wrong. To rebel and defy a rule, without even once petitioning those servants of the people who have the power to repeal it, is as subversive of the very first principles of republican government as this rule itself can possibly be.

As one who has no fear of freethought in any direction, and who is ready to advocate any changes in long-established rules or customs that regard for civil or religious liberty may even possibly require, ready to do away with what is unconstitutional as this may be, or violative of religious freedom as it doubtless is, I cannot, as a lover of justice, suffer your article to pass without protesting against the undue sympathy it manifests on one side, and the indiscriminating condemnation on the other. We must be just, even to the Orthodox, and not without good reason accuse them of bigotry, proscription, or intolerance. They do not all live up to the doctrine of total depravity, and the Unitarian, or even the Free Religionist, may sometimes unconsciously color facts a little to make a strong point against them. If it is said, as has been reiterated here in this case, that reformers are always rash, impracticable, fanatical, etc., it may be replied that reformers, equally with other men, need reform, and must not shrink from the application of the same severity to themselves which they use towards others. To the originator of this controversy Whittier's words upon John Brown may be well applied:—

"Perish with him the folly that seeks, through evil, good! Long live the generous purpose!"

G. H. W.

[We publish the above communication without either indorsing or denying its statements of fact, most of which we now hear for the first time. All our own statements of fact were made on the authority of Mr. Arnett himself, whom we now invite to give his own narrative in THE INDEX, in reply to the foregoing. Until all the essential facts are established, comment is useless.—ED.]

THE STATISTICS OF CATHOLICISM.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

If it is worth while to endeavor to settle the question of the number of Catholics in the United States, will you allow me to express the belief that you make the aggregate number rather large, while, if we reckon only the effectives, so to speak, i. e., either the adults or the voters, the Catholic power, as far as numbers are concerned, seems still less great.

I lately wrote to a Catholic bishop whom I knew personally, and whose character in every respect I esteem most highly, begging him to give me the Catholic estimate of the number of his faith in the United States. His reply is as follows:—

"Our general estimate of Catholics in the United States is five millions; perhaps rather more than less. We count all those as Catholics who have been baptized as such, and who have not explicitly renounced the faith. Members of secret societies are counted as conspirators against general good, and cannot be members of the Church Catholic."

Meeting yesterday accidentally a very intelligent gentleman, a Catholic, I asked him the same question as regards numbers, without mentioning the fact that I had already received an estimate from Bishop —, and he gave the very same number as the latter had given.

I have before me a letter from Gen. F. A. Walker, the Superintendent of the Census of 1870, in reply to the same question. He says he cannot aid me in my inquiry; but in the letter makes the remark that "the Catholic authorities have always put forward highly exaggerated statements of their strength."

But let us suppose that the number of Catholics in the aggregate is 5,000,000, and let us calculate the number of voters. In the whole population, 38,900,000, there are about 9,400,000 males over twenty-one years of age, and therefore entitled to be voters. Using this proportion as a basis of calculation, and of the 5,000,000 Catholics, somewhat less than 1,210,000 are voters. But the greater part of the Catholics are Irish, and the proportion of adults is much less than in the aggregate population. Moreover, there is a certain proportion who are not naturalized. It is therefore doubtful if there are more than 1,000,000 Catholics in the country entitled to vote.

For the benefit of those who picture to themselves an appeal to the bayonet, it may be stated that there are not over 2,000,000, certainly not over 2,500,000, Catholic males above the age of fifteen, against 9,880,000, or more, non-Catholics; the whole number, according to the census, being 11,880,000. Probably the disproportion is much greater than this, inasmuch as the proportion of children among the Irish is much greater than among those of other descent.

This calculation is according to the last census report, 1870; but, inasmuch as it is acknowledged that the increase of the Irish is proportionately less than that of the descendants of other nations, it is fair to presume that the disproportion alluded to is greater still.

Gen. Walker, in Scribner's Magazine, sometime in 1874, showed that, although the number of children born is larger among the families of Catholics than among the Protestants, the effective increase of the Germans is greater than that of the Irish, who lose their children very heavily in early years.

It is hardly necessary to remind you that I am quite as earnest as you are in the efforts to resist the evident designs of the Catholics in this country, and I believe that, notwithstanding their numerical weakness, their real effective force is immensely great as compared with that of the Protestants.

MEDICUS.

[The authority we quoted was Professor Alexander J. Schem, whose Statistics of the World (third revised edition, 1875) is regarded as a standard publication on statistical matters. In the absence of exact census returns, there is of course room for disagreement; but as to the inaccuracy of Rev. W. T. Clarke's figures, whose estimate of the number of Catholics as only 2,000,000 we were criticising, the Bishop above alluded to is a witness quite sufficient to confirm the justice of our criticism. Father Müller, in his Public School Education, pages 293 and 390, reckons the Catholics as 13,000,000; the New York Irish World reckons them as 10,000,000; the Catholic World reckons them as 8,000,000 or 9,000,000. We cannot decide the matter, of course; but we are inclined to consider the Catholic World's estimate, which is indorsed by Father Stack in Harper's Weekly, as probably not far from the truth. If any one, however, can throw farther light on the subject, we shall be very glad to receive it.—ED.]

Sanctuary of Superstition.

COY.—"God's way is to put you off as long as possible, until you let him know that you must have help, that you are determined to gain a blessing."—Rev. A. B. Earle, in Boston, 1890.

BELLS AND RODS.—A French clerical journal maintains that the tolling of the church-bell is of much greater efficacy than the use of lightning-rods in warding off the effects of a thunder-storm, and advises the faithful to resort to the former means in preference to the latter.

POWERLESS.—Lord I am willing to renounce all other hopes, refuges, and righteousness, and to rely upon thee only. Duties cannot justify me, tears cannot wash me, reformation cannot save me; nothing but thy righteousness can answer for me.—"How to go to Christ": American Tract Society.

A NEW USE FOR THE CONTRADICTIONS.—May it not be that Infinite Wisdom suffered the discrepancies and kindred difficulties to appear in the Bible, with a view to exercise the faith and patience of believers, and to stimulate them to thorough study of the Holy Oracles, as well as for that other most solemn, judicial purpose of furnishing a stumbling-block to those who are disposed to cavil at the truth, to those who "stumble at the word, being disobedient, whereunto also they were appointed"? We can look at the matter in no other light.—Rev. J. W. Haley, of Andover.

AN EVANGELICAL CHILD-TORTURER.—I wish to tell you a touching fact about a little boy here in West Philadelphia. Last Saturday, at the children's meeting in the Berean Church, were gathered a crowd of children and youth. While they were singing with all their hearts from the Song Evangel, a gentleman approached and said that a certain boy was wanted, as his mother was dying. I at once stopped the singing and said, "Some one of you has a mother who is dying this very hour," and, looking all around, I pointed at one and another and said, "Is it your mother? If she were dying now, and going home to heaven, could you hasten to her bedside and say, 'Dear mother, I have found Jesus precious to my soul during the past week. I believe that God, for his sake, has forgiven me all my sins, and I feel sure that I shall meet you in that bright world above, where there is no parting and no tears'?" It seemed as if I could hear hundreds of children saying, "I wonder if it is my mother that is dying?"

I then said, "Will Lewis Watts please step this way?" He did so, and as he stood upon the platform before a churchful of children, I asked, "Are you a Christian, Lewis?" His quick reply was, "No, but I wish to be one." I then said to him, "Will you not bow your head now, while all the children pray for you, and pray yourself that God, for Christ's sake, will receive you as his own dear child? You can then go home and tell your dear, dying mother that you feel sure that you will meet her in heaven." Tears at once filled his eyes, and he exclaimed, "I haven't time to become a Christian now." Thus he hastened out of the building, sobbing as if his heart would break, and nearly every one in the audience followed him with tearful eyes. It was one of the most touching sights I ever witnessed. The mother died that very hour. I wonder if her dear son will meet her in heaven.—E. P. Hammond, the Revivalist: quoted in the N. Y. Sun, Jan. —, 1876.

THE SWEARER'S PRAYER.—What! a swearer pray! Yes, swearer, whether thou thinkest so or not, each of thine oaths is a prayer—an appeal to the Holy and Almighty God, whose name thou dardest so impudently to take upon thy lips.

And what is it, thou swearer, that thou dost call for, when the awful imprecations "damn" and "damnation" roll so frequently from thy tongue? Tremble, swearer, while I tell thee! Thy prayer containeth two parts: thou prayest, first, that thou mayest be deprived of eternal happiness; secondly, that thou mayest be plunged into eternal misery!

When, therefore, thou callest for damnation, dost thou not, in effect, say as follows? "O God! Thou hast power to punish me in hell for ever; therefore let not one of my sins be forgiven! Let every oath that I have sworn, every lie that I have told, every Sabbath that I have broken, and all the sins that I have committed, either in thought, word, or deed, rise up in judgment against me, and eternally condemn me! Let me never partake of the salvation! May my soul and body be deprived of all happiness, both in this world and that which is to come! Let me never see thy face with comfort; never enjoy thy favor and friendship; and let me never enter into the kingdom of heaven!"

This is the first part of thy prayer. Let us hear the second:—

"O God! let me not only be shut out of heaven, but also shut up in hell! May all the members of my body be tortured with inconceivable agony, and all the powers of my soul be tormented with horror and despair, inexpressible and eternal! Let my dwelling be in the blackness of darkness, and my companions accursed men and accursed devils! Pour down thy hottest anger; execute all thy wrath and curse upon me. Arm and send forth all thy terrors against me; and let thy fierce, thy fiery, thy fearful indignation rest upon me! Be mine eternal enemy; and punish and torment me in hell, forever, and ever, and ever!"—Dublin Tract: "The Swearer's Prayer."

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 Insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8	"	"
" 26 " 51 "	6	"	"
" 52 "	5	"	"

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent. On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:-

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.

To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,

No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:-

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1872, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the Idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,
A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	5.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work: A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BARTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France. Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	80
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
CORBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old of Ethical and Social Subjects. A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibniz and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
COWWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibniz and Carpenter, with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aim and Requirements: A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Maxon, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DURING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. ("George Eliot's" translation.).....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	8.00
"ALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopse the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.80
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Hagebot.....	1.50

III. Food. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah F. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analyses and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.C.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Elements of Geology.....	5.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.5
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.) Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.50
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union. Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans. Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.80
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truitt Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expanses of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Rococe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	51.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of John. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.35
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.00
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorised translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip.....	1.25
Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Esmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.
4. Four Georges, Humorists, &c.
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	1.00
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	1.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	2.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Biting and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	1.50
Vols III. IV. and VI., each.....	.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banisterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Poems. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I.
METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.
PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.
LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAINS OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.
THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is Homile.

Fifth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.
Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.
§ 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

§ 2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

§ 3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.
§ 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

§ 2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

§ 3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gift edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address S. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 10 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 30 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THE FALLACIES OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading. . . . The story is told in a very graphic style. . . . Mr. Holyoake . . . is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, Mo. Box 247. Send for Circular.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES, and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

751 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,
1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

SUNNY SIDE,

A New Singing Book, prepared expressly for Sabbath Schools of Liberal Churches.

By C. W. WENDT and H. S. PERKINS.

The words throughout the book have been prepared and selected with great care. Weak sentimentalism as well as crude doctrinal statements have been rigorously excluded from this collection, and it is believed that the literary contents show a higher grade of writers than have ever before appeared in a book of this character. The music, original and selected, is bright, fresh, vigorous, and altogether of a much better class than is usually found in Sunday-school books.

Price in Boards, 35 cents, or $30 per 100.

WM. A. FOND & CO., 341 Broadway, New York.

SUNNY SIDE.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX, Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets to Course, One Dollar.

Jan. 2. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The Soul of Transcendentalism."

Jan. 9. M. D. CONWAY.

"The Natural History of the Devil."

Jan. 16. J. W. CHADWICK.

"Thomas Paine."

Jan. 23. D. A. WASSON.

"Radical Formalism."

Jan. 30. T. W. HIGGINSON.

"The Meeting of Extremes."

Feb. 6. B. F. UNDERWOOD.

"Modern Scientific Materialism: Its Meaning and Tendency."

Feb. 13. BISHOP McQUAID.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Catholic American Citizen."

Feb. 20. F. E. ABBOT.

"The Public School Question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."

Feb. 27. PROF. FELIX ADLER.

"The Old Testament in the Light of Modern Criticism."

Mar. 5. Mrs. E. D. CHENEY.

"The Religious Life of Michael Angelo."

THE GODS, AND OTHER LECTURES.

By Col. ROBERT C. INGERSOLL, OF ILLINOIS.

This book contains five Lectures, entitled severally: "The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thomas Paine," "Individuality," and "Heretics and Heresies." It is handsomely bound, and will be sent from this office on receipt of Two DOLLARS.

Address THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.20

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor. Irenaeus the author of the Fourth Gospel. The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. 12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-paid.....2.00

The author here discusses a number of the inconsistencies of traditional and authentic Church history, and proposes solutions after the manner of the most modern German Rationalists, though with original and often startling theories of his own.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER. By Charles Sotheman. Including Portrait of Shelley and View of his Tomb. 60 pp. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

TRACTS.

No. I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton.

No. II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

No. III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. New and enlarged edition, with index and text of important citations.

No. IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published. (Soon ready.)

Of No. I., single copy, mailed, 5 cents; ten for 30 cents; one hundred for $1.50.

Of Nos. II., III., IV., single copy, mailed, 10 cents; ten for 60 cents; one hundred for $3.00.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, a volume made up chiefly of essays and addresses given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. "One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom,

Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe,

C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss,

Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50.

Sent to Office of THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 2, 1876.

WHOLE No. 323.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.

ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.

Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.

ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.

ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.

ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.

ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.

ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

For List of Liberal Leagues, see next page.

"If we are to have another contest in the near future of our national existence, I predict that the dividing line will not be Mason and Dixon's, but between patriotism and intelligence on the one side, and superstition, ambition, and ignorance on the other. Now, the centennial year of our national existence, I believe, is a good time to begin the work of strengthening the foundations of the structure commenced by our patriotic forefathers one hundred years ago at Lexington. Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the security of free thought, free speech, a free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men, irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar appropriated for their support shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian schools. Resolve that neither State or Nation, nor both combined, shall support institutions of learning other than those sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education, unmixt with sectarian, pagan, or atheistical dogmas. Leave the matter of religion to the family altar, the Church, and the private school supported entirely by private contributions. Keep the Church and the State forever separate."—PRESIDENT GRANT, at Des Moines, Sept. 29, 1875.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

MR. BANCROFT, the historian, is now in his seventy-sixth year.

THE PRESBYTERIAN clergy of Chicago have voted that "the Bible is not sectarian, and does not engender Church-and-State connections."

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION at Union Hill, New Jersey, after a prolonged agitation of the subject, has ordered by a vote of five to four that the Bible shall be continued to be read in the public schools.

ALLUDING to the story of a Methodist's restoration to health, in Detroit, in direct answer to prayer, a lady correspondent remarks with no little acuteness: "It seems strange that, with such credulity, the professing Christian can ever reconcile himself to disease and death."

GOVERNOR BEDLE, of New Jersey, has recommended to the Legislature of that State, now in session at Trenton, that "the schools should never be shut against the Bible," and approved the law now in force, legalizing the reading of the Bible and the repetition of the Lord's Prayer.

SELDOM is the inconsistency of ordinary Protestant thinking brought out more strikingly than in an otherwise excellent article of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate on the school question. On the one hand it claims that ours is a "Christian government," and on the other hand admits that we have a "secular Constitution."

NEW YORK CITY, according to the report of the Commissioners of Assessments, has $63,410,000 of private property, which would be regularly assessed at a valuation of $38,046,000, wholly exempted from taxation. The actual value of the churches is $38,140,500, and their value, if assessed, would be $22,884,300. Church-exemption is an expensive luxury, as well as great injustice.

EX-GOVERNOR DIX states that the corporation of Trinity Church, in New York, "pays taxes on every foot of ground used for secular purposes"; that over $100,000 were paid last September for its property so used; and that "nothing is exempt except the church-edifices, the cemeteries, four school-houses in which free schools are kept, and an infirmary in which the sick receive gratuitous treatment."

TWO CATHOLIC boys have been expelled from a district school in Enfield, Connecticut, because they refused, in compliance with their father's injunction, to read the New Testament on order of the teacher and the school committee. The latter accuse the boys of general insubordination; but that fact does not justify their own action in the least. Catholics are wronged by such a requisition.

MR. ROBERT RETZEL, of Washington, D. C., gave great satisfaction by an address on the 20th of February, before the Philadelphia Liberal League. The League have been obliged to vacate the hall they have been occupying, "ostensibly as our large audiences endangered the safety of the building, but it is quite likely that prejudice and ignorance had to do with this action of the Trustees. Yesterday [Feb. 20] we met in a larger hall and had a larger audience."

AN ARTICLE which we copy this week from the Boston Daily Advertiser considers it doubtful whether the Catholics really object to the public school system as a whole, and "fancies that Bishop McQuaid would be contented with a public school system, if the Catholics might receive a just proportion of the funds to expend for the education of their children in their own way." We think that no thoughtful reader of the Bishop's lecture will arrive at the same conclusion, since he declares that "the State has no right to educate," and that the State should not "interfere with Church or school." A division of the school funds would be to him only an approximation to a right solution of the school question—a first step to the transfer of all education to the care of the Church. This is what the Papal Nuncio demanded in Spain; and it will be demanded here just as soon as the Catholic Church feels itself strong enough to make the demand.

PROFESSOR WICKERSHAM, the Superintendent of Public Instruction in the State of Pennsylvania, said in a late report: "First, then, we mean in the administration of our school affairs to treat all sects, and all parties of our citizens, with the strictest impartiality. The conscientious scruples of all must remain inviolate. No books must be used in our schools, and no exercises take place in them, to which any reasonable man can conscientiously object. Catholic and Protestant, Rationalist and Jew, all must be treated exactly alike. The majority principle must be waived here, and the rights of the child of the most obscure and friendless citizen of the Commonwealth must be respected. The least semblance of proselytism must be avoided, and each must, in this matter, do to others as he would like, in similar circumstances, others to do to him. As I understand it, this is the great doctrine that underlies our whole system of free schools, and its friends will not shirk any consequences that may flow from its strict application both in letter and spirit." This is most admirably said: may the country profit by it!

A NUMBER of Protestant clergymen met in a Methodist church at Albany, on February 14, to discuss church taxation. They voted to present the following petition, which, however, was opposed by Rev. Mr. Young, Unitarian minister at Troy, who made a strong plea for "equal and just taxation" from a secular point of view:—

"To the Honorable Committee of Ways and Means of the Assembly of the State of New York:

"GENTLEMEN,—Having learned that a proposition is pending before you to prepare and report a bill to repeal the act exempting church property from taxation, we, the pastors of the various Christian churches in the cities of Albany, Troy, and vicinity, would express it as our unanimous opinion that the adoption by your honorable body of any measure looking to the indiscriminate taxation of church property would be a great and unjust hardship imposed upon the Christian people of this State. And while we would leave it to your wisdom to say whether all secular or productive property belonging to churches may or may not properly be required to bear its share of the support of the State, yet we would respectfully but most earnestly protest against the imposition of a tax upon houses occupied by congregations as places of worship, and solemnly dedicated to the service of God."

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, N.E.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BEVELL, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Carrie S. Burnham, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSTOWN, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

"The Public School Question, as Viewed by a Catholic American Citizen."

SEVENTH LECTURE BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION IN HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, FEB. 13, 1876.

BY THE RIGHT REV. B. J. McQUAID, D. D.,
 ROMAN CATHOLIC BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, N. Y.

(CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.)

MORALS WITHOUT RELIGION.

The secularist maintains that all the knowledge of morals a child need possess may be obtained in a State school without religion. This is true of that species of morals which falls to recognize God, and which has no foundation in supernatural motives. The Catholic does not admit that morality based on pure selfishness is of much worth, or that it will avail a child in the moment of temptation. In this clashing of opinions and beliefs, which shall give way, if there is to be room but for one? Shall it be the Catholic? He appeals to the Constitution of Massachusetts, and to the religious element still abiding in its population. The new condition of educational aims is vastly different from that of fifty years ago. He claims that his higher standard of morality, the nobler motive on which it is inculcated, its adaptability and acceptableness to children (waiving for the moment its divine origin and character), entitle him to have the education of his children permeated and completed by a strong infusion of religious instruction in schools. He contends for the rights and best interests of his own children. He does not dispute the wishes of others, nor seek to impose on them the adoption of his system. He loudly asserts, that in every important point, except costliness of buildings and expensiveness of teachers, Catholic schools are superior to State schools. They are more thorough in secular studies; there is less cramming, and less multiplicity of useless branches of learning; the duties and responsibilities of citizens are brought home to parents, where they belong, fostering a spirit of self-reliance, without dependence on public charity; and all in an atmosphere of religion and morality such as the patrons of the school desire, and are willing to pay for. I am not speaking of the beginnings of a Catholic school in some poor neighborhood. As well might you liken a country school, with its fifteen or twenty scholars, under a school-mistress at three or four dollars a week, to one of your Boston High Schools.

CATHOLICS ASK NO FAVORS.

While the Catholic asks no favor, no privilege, no special prerogative, no right that he does not concede to others, the secularist, on the contrary, in the name of liberality, falls into astonishing illiberality. All must yield to him. He has broken down the evangelical; he will subdue the Catholic. He will concede no rights to others, save the one of bending to his will, if that can be called a right which is the result of sheer force, through the power of a prejudiced and unrelenting majority. The Catholic wants to know why his right to have schools for his children, in which the tone of religious thought shall be Catholic, is not as valid as the right of evangelicals and secularists to have schools for their children in which the tone of thought shall be evangelical or indifferent to any religion. It must not be lost sight of, in this argument, that our rights go where our money goes. A Catholic's money goes into the schools, and his rights go with it. An inalienable right is infringed upon, is curtailed, is cut off altogether, when he appears at a school-house door, leading his son by the hand, only to find at its threshold the emblem or sign of a hostile creed, or, what is worse in his belief, the chilling atmosphere within of doubt, negation, or an ignoring the God-Creator, Sovereign Lord and Master, and final Judge of man's thoughts, words, and acts, for whom it has been the father's duty to instill into his child's mind and heart the most tender love and reverence.

HOW SOME ARE SAVED.

No one need tell me that I exaggerate and picture from fancy, nor yet again that there are illustrious instances of boys and girls that have passed through the common schools without inhaling the poisonous atmosphere of which I speak. I do not deny the fact. These easily counted exceptions but prove the rule. The prayers, the watchful care, and unceasing devotion of capable and pious parents, must count for much in the saving of these few. Again, there are schools, in which the majority of the children and many of the teachers being Catholics, a diluted Catholic atmosphere floats about the school, rendering less, in some degree, the danger of losing Catholic faith and morals. If we ourselves cannot see this danger, ministers and editors, in sermons, addresses, and editorials kindly point it out, and bespeak our attention. Their zeal and ardor are aroused to new endeavor in the charitable hope of hurting "popery." The thought lends courage to their hearers. "It will de-Romanize the children," says one. "The Bible and the common schools will grind out the Catholicity of the children," says another. Similar expressions might be multiplied without end. Forewarned is for the wise to be forearmed. It was only when the Bible in the schools had ceased to be the question in dispute that the Bible was put on the cold side of the door.

WHAT RAISES THE STORM.

There is small hope that justice, or even patient and unbiassed hearing of our grievances, will be accorded, when, as soon as a voice is raised in behalf of God-given rights, forty thousand pulpits ring with bitter invectives, gross misrepresentations, and appeals to the lowest passions of those who gather around them; when politicians (not statesmen) catch up the cry, and trading away all principle, if they ever had any, ride into office in the fury and madness of the hour. Secret societies, that have so often proved political sepulchres for unprincipled demagogues, lend their help.

The darkest and fiercest hour of the storm is that which precedes its breaking. We take courage, then, from the extreme and unbridled fury of the hour, and from the violent language used in defiance of good taste, reason, brotherly kindness, and all regard for just rights.

LEADERS CHANGE.

The people will yet become disgusted with the unreasonable and changeableness of their leaders. A few years ago they were told to stand by "the Bible in the schools," to "strike down any one who dared raise a hand against it"; that "to die for it would be a glorious martyrdom." Secret societies were formed for its protection. Now editors and ministers frankly confess it was all a mistake; that our liberties do not depend on keeping the Bible in the schools; that to do so is illogical, wrong, unjust to Catholics, Jews, and Infidels. There has been no more powerful advocate of the Bible in the schools than Dr. J. G. Holland, who, in this month's Scribner, admits that "the compulsory reading of the Bible was to the Catholic, to the Jew, to the Atheist, a grievance, a hardship, an oppression." "For ourselves," he says, "we must confess to a change of convictions on this matter. . . . If we do away with the grievance of the Catholic, we do away with his claim; and we mark out for Catholic and Protestant alike the path of peace to walk in side by side." The doctor does not seem to understand the nature of our claim. It is not to deprive Protestants of their Bible in their schools; it is to educate Catholic children in Catholic schools with our own money, under State supervision if you please. We do not want Protestant money, nor any State money that was not taken from our purses. We want not one dollar for pope, bishop, or priest; not one cent for our Church. We do not desire the doing away of common schools; we are establishing schools all over the country on a thoroughly democratic basis. We are striving for a stretching of a hide-bound system. We wish it to be more directly under parental control, more economically managed, restricted to its proper function of elementary education, and violating no conscientious duty of parents. It is just as likely that a few years hence the people will be told that education belongs to parents, and that if the State interferes it must be in accordance with the wish of parents. When communism becomes rife and bold, property owners may be willing to discuss principles only to learn that they are reaping as they sowed. Some heads take in truth slowly, others only by trepanning.

FAIR PLAY EXPECTED FROM FREE RELIGIONISTS.

We are justified in expecting fairer treatment at the hands of Free Religionists. If we may trust Herbert Spencer as a worthy exponent of this class, toleration in its widest sense is a fundamental dogma of their creed: "Our toleration should be the widest possible; or, rather, we should aim at something beyond toleration, as commonly understood. In dealing with alien beliefs our endeavor must be, not simply to refrain from injustice of word or deed, but also to do justice by an open recognition of positive worth. We must qualify our disagreement with as much as may be of sympathy."—First Principles.

From scientists and Free Religionists, then, we may expect the same rights they claim for themselves. As they would not consent to our forcing their children into schools under Catholic influences, direct or indirect, so they will not ask that our children shall be forced into schools under objectionable influences. As they do not permit us to decide upon the truth or untruth of their religious opinions, so they will not seek to decide for us upon our doctrines. Here comes in the apparently insurmountable obstacle to an amicable settlement of this vexed question. Each one of the disputants, except the Catholic, wants to make all others bend to his plan, or way, or system, seemingly satisfied that he alone is right. The Catholic, on the contrary, says, Let each one have his own plan; and with an even start, and on equal ground, let it be seen which party, the evangelical, the scientist, or Free Religionist, or the Catholic, can make the greatest sacrifices, accomplish the most work in the most satisfactory manner, for the thorough religious and secular education of all the children they can bring under their control.

NO RELIGION IN A BANK.

Free Religionists, and the large class of Christian religionists represented by Henry Ward Beecher, answer, Religion has no place in the State school; and, with it kept out, the school is as free to one class of religionists as to another, and equally so to Jews and Infidels. To illustrate this theory, they say that as there need be no religion in a bank, a shop, or a business office, so there need be no religion in a school. This is as strong a justification as they can bring.

The comparison falls for want of resemblance between the things compared. A man goes into the bank, the shop, the office. A boy goes to the school. The bank, the shop, the office, has for its object the transaction of its own special material business. The school deals with the boy's mind and heart; is a place set apart for the forming, disciplining, educating the young, by trained and skilled manipulators of the intellect and emotions. The young look up to these teachers with sentiments of respect, and often of reverence; nor are they capable of analyzing and judging the influences brought to bear on them. They are in the school six hours a day, for five days in the week, ten months in the year. They are justified in voting all schooling, in excess of these long hours, a bore. They who go into a bank, or any other place of business, are men grown, fully competent to judge of insidious or open attempts to prejudice their minds on points of religion or morals. These business offices are not monopolies like the State school, and their proprietors know the danger of meddling with their customers' religious opinions. The example of a man asking for a Bible in a hat-shop has not yet occurred; and, when it does occur, it will be met by calling in a policeman to arrest an escaped lunatic. But a child asking a teacher to tell it something about God, Christ, the redemption, sin, or the life to come, would ask a proper question, entitled to an answer from a competent teacher. Much as our opponents may be pleased to protest against religion in the State schools, it is there, and in some shape it will be there till the end of time. I am not speaking of evangelical schools, but of schools purely secular, in which there is no Bible, no text-book of religion, no prayer, no hymn; and yet, in this expurgated and shrivelled-up school, the teaching will be for or against religion, as the teacher happens to be. His children do not come to him to buy bills of exchange, or boots, or hats, but to acquire knowledge, to learn, to take in, through open eyes and ears, information concerning the things they see, and the truths and facts of which they hear. President Anderson, of Rochester University, is an authority in educational methods and means, of great weight wherever known. He exhibits this power of the teacher in a few striking passages, thus:—

PRESIDENT ANDERSON ON INCIDENTAL INSTRUCTION.

"With the element of Christian faith in head and heart, it is impossible for an earnest teacher to avoid giving out constantly religious and moral impulses and thoughts. He must of necessity set forth his notions about God, the soul, conscience, sin, the future life, and divine revelation. If he promises not to do so he will fail to keep his word, or his teachings in science, or literature, or history, will be miserably shallow and inadequate. . . . Incidental instruction in morality and religion, then, ought to be the main reliance of the Christian teacher. The ends of a Christian school, while working by its own laws and limitations, ought not to be essentially different from a Christian Church. The principles we have thus indicated are universal in their application. If the Christian teacher must make the elements of his religious faith color all his teaching, the same must be true of the unchristian teacher. . . . There is no good thinking that is not honest thinking. . . . If parents wish their children educated in Christian principles, they must seek out honest Christian men to be their teachers."

Here in a few words is the plainly-spoken judgment of an experienced teacher. It is true, President Anderson is contending in behalf of higher education in colleges and seminaries. But I do not hesitate to say, with no small experience as an educator, that in elementary schools, where young minds are dealt with, the incidental teaching in morals and religion is of vastly greater extent and effect. They who assert so boldly that children of inquisitive and unfolding minds can frequent schools for secular learning, without being influenced by the dominant religious tone of the school and the teachers, speak without warrant.

THE MULTIPLICATION TABLE.

As meaningless an illustration is that in which the multiplication table plays a part. There is no religion, they say, in the multiplication table. I never heard any one say there was, while it is not unknown that there may be religion, or antipathy to religion, in him who teaches the table, as well as in the place in which it is taught. A sneer at "popery" requires no allusion to figures or ciphering, unless when the years of the Apocalypse, or the coming of Antichrist, are under discussion.

A COMMON LANGUAGE.

But, after all, the vexed question of religion aside, see the gain to the Republic by giving a common language to all its children, through the common schools. Then why, if that is a gain, provide a teacher of German wherever a few German children are found, or, where there are many, give them a school with German as its language, as in Erie, Penn.? There is room for anything and everything except religion.

DOES THIS SYSTEM ABOLISH CASTE?

Anyhow, it cannot be denied, we are told, that the common schools bring all classes of children to the same level, make them meet on equal ground, and sit side by side on the same benches. This speech belongs to the demagogue and the electioneering stump. The level spoken of may be found in rural districts and small towns; it is quite unknown in large cities in practice, while no one denies the beauty of the theory.

It is well-known that in cities the rich, as a rule, live in neighborhoods where no poor man can have his home. When there is danger of contact, the rich man sends his daintily-nurtured and well-clad child to a private school. There are public schools in New York and Brooklyn, whose pupils come solely from the comfortable classes. What an advantage to the pride of so many admirers of common schools, that thirty thousand children of laborers and mechanics in New York, and twenty thousand in Brooklyn, are educated in Christian free schools! It makes access to the public schools so much the more pleasant. Why is it that so many thousand children receive their elementary education not in the public schools, but in the schools of the Children's Aid Society, under evangelical influences? Is it not beyond doubt that if in New York City the compulsory law were to be enforced, and all the children now running the streets, and all the children now in the Aid Society's schools, and all the children now in the Catholic free schools, were to be marched into their district public schools, an almost equal number of well-dressed children would be marched out? If in any school the influence of money and good society predominates, the poor will quit it for shame's sake; if patched pants and calico dresses rule, the rich will go out for pride's sake. You will find truer democracy in the Christian free schools of New York than in the common schools.

SCHOOL HOURS AND SCHOOL-MASTERS.

The week-day school, we are told, is not the place for teaching religion; there are hours enough for these lessons at home and on Sunday. This advice comes with a bad grace from Boston, since the Medical College of Middlesex has laid down these two rules among others: "The duration of daily attendance, including the time given to recess and physical exercises, should not exceed four and a half hours for the primary schools." "There should be required no study out of school for children of the primary schools."

A more serious consideration is that of compelling parents to be school-masters to their children. It is cruel to put this task on backs already overburdened. Father and mother toil like slaves from morning to night. Do their mentors think of the early rising, the hasty breakfast, the long hours of wearying and exhausting labor, of the fatigued frame that at the coming on of night seeks needed rest? We are not speaking in favor of clerks, merchants, and professional men. They can speak for themselves and their requirements; their friends are numerous, intelligent, and active. Legislation always takes their circumstances and wants into account.

It is among the laboring and mechanic classes that a numerous progeny is found. The mother sees to her household and the wants of her many children. Her education in book-learning may be defective; and, if she undertook to compete with the trained school-mistress, her deficiencies might become known to her young ones. Time, strength, capacity,—all are wanting. Yet she is reminded, if she reads the newspapers, that one minister and another devote their time to the set and formal religious instruction of their children, out of school, in the evenings, on the Saturdays, and with special care on the Sundays; and she is plausibly advised to do the same. These learned, eloquent, leisured clergymen put themselves on a par with the hard-working mason and the humble washerwoman. It is, I say, an unworthy mockery of these respectable bread-winners, day-workers, or betrays profound ignorance of their conditions and daily occupations. These poor people pay their taxes to have others in whom they have confidence, whose religious convictions harmonize with their own, relieve them of a duty they feel incompetent to perform. The Sunday-school and the Church remain. Good children go to Sunday-school; those whose homes are least Christian in spirit and teachings keep clear of it. Besides, who would be satisfied to have his child put off with one lesson a week in any of the rudimentary branches belonging to the common school? Yet the lesson of lessons, the law and will of God as manifested to his creatures, by which character is formed and moral principles are well established, may be satisfactorily learned in the short hour of a Sunday-school.

Parents need the Church and the best services of the clergyman on Sunday more than their children, that they may not forget the lessons of their youth.

THE SPECIAL ADVANTAGES OF CATHOLIC SCHOOLS.

It seems more than unreasonable to ask Catholic parents to forego advantages attainable in and through Catholic schools,—advantages far superior to any offered by State schools.

First, Catholic schools instruct in all the useful branches of a sound English education.

Secondly, They are more economical, costing no more than one-fourth or one-third the expense of supporting State schools; and commanding at the lowest possible price, merely food and clothing, one of the most expensive necessities of the age and country,—skilled and trained intellectual labor.

Thirdly, Their teachers are devoted to their work of teaching as a life-work; study every day, and waste no time in idle visits and foolish amusements.

Fourthly, The teachers are in sympathy with the religious faith of the patrons of their schools.

Fifthly, Parental schools alone will stand the test of logic; they are consonant to sound democratic republican doctrines; they make possible the inculcation of morality by the authority of a divine Lawgiver; they respect the natural rights of parents, and meddle with and infringe on no one else's rights.

They are a necessity demanded by the circumstances of the times, and the demoralized condition of the country, as well as for the future welfare of the Republic. It is our common country, belonging not to one man more than to another. He is the best citizen, no matter where he was born, who loves it most and labors in his sphere of life, according to his ability, with purest motives, for the honor and prosperity of the Union. He would be a renegade and base betrayer of his country, who, believing that morality on a religious foundation was essential to the safety and continuance of the government, should consent to withhold from children all possible means of growth in sound moral principles and conduct.

RIGHTS OF MINORITIES IN OTHER COUNTRIES.

The experience of every civilized nation of Europe is against the suicidal career that we are entering on. No difficulty is found in countries whose inhabitants are of different religious beliefs, in arranging a system of schools for all. Though some of these countries are spoken of as despotic in character, their despotism never goes so far as to interfere with the religious convictions of Catholic, Jew, or evangelical. At least Catholic Canada, our immediate neighbor, Catholic Belgium, Catholic France, Catholic Bavaria, and Catholic Austria respect the parental rights of the minority, with a sense of justice we would do well to study. The wisdom and good sense of the world are not concentrated in the American people.

THE QUESTION MUST BE SETTLED.

This question, thanks to various causes, is now fairly before the country for discussion and settlement. To shelve it by constitutional amendments will be no lasting settlement. Constitutional enactments in contravention of parental rights not transferred to the State are worth the parchment on which they are written, and no more. This is not an original idea. I have picked it up in Boston. This lesson was taught to the nation by the settlement of slavery.

POLITICAL PARTIES.

The agitation, I must confess, is embarrassing to both political parties; much more so, however, to political aspirants who fear pitfalls, and are anxious lest they bury all their hopes in graves of their own digging. One party is rushing along on its path of injustice, because popular clamor impels that way; the other, half-willing, half-unwilling, does not dare say a word in opposition, for it, no more than the other party, has statesmen for leaders, while politicians abound. We are accused of an alliance with one of these parties. The party that forms an alliance, open or covert, with any religious body in these United States, proclaims its own folly, and signs its own death-warrant. The leaders of the Catholic body are neither fools to trust any political party, nor knaves to seek privileges and favors over the religious denominations of the country by such unworthy and dishonorable means. No prominent politician believes the absurd imputation. It is a sop thrown to Cerberus, to bigotry. We seek equal rights for all, favors for none. Until correct principles obtain recognition, this question, affecting the interests of millions of citizens, will remain a cause of controversy and disturbance. Thirty years of patient submission have brought us scarcely a kindly word; and the condition of helotism into which we have been falling is regarded by many as fitting and proper, and by others as right and just. There is a sound maxim in the American mind, that any class suffering from disabilities and a violation of rights should resort to established methods for a rectification of these wrongs, and that a class that does not care enough to seek a remedy for its sufferings may be left to nurse its grumblings in private, without thought or attention from their fellow-countrymen.

While, therefore, we do not feel disposed to waste gratitude on the Democratic party for favors never received, and owe no more to the Republican party, we have only contempt for the hangers-on of both parties, who would have us hold in abeyance the assertion of our rights, lest this office-seeker or another should be embarrassed. Catholics are learning to break away from both parties, watch events, and treasure in their memories the brave words and deeds of politicians who, taking advantage of a momentary outbreak of bigotry and religious hate, write a record which a few years hence they would give their right hand to blot out.

CHARGES AGAINST THE SYSTEM.

We charge upon the system of State schools, as now carried in these United States, the perpetration of manifold injustices and the upholding of false principles.

First, It is an infringement of parental rights and duties, inasmuch as it compels poor people who educate their own children for conscience' sake, to help educate their richer neighbors' children.

Secondly, It cruelly oppresses poorer citizens by giving to their richer neighbors' sons not simply an elementary education, but an education sufficient to earn their living by means of a learned profession. To put both on an equal footing, poor children should be taught a trade at the expense of the State.

Thirdly, The State does not know what its system should be. In some States the education is restricted to rudimentary studies; in others it extends to a university course. Some States allow a qualified amount of evangelical teaching; others, professing to exclude all religion, permit any except the Catholic. These are the inconsistencies and hypocrisy of the system.

Fourthly, It is narrow, contracted, limited in its scope, afraid of rivalry, and incapable of the very function for which it was established. Its right to educate is denied by its admission that it cannot educate in the true sense of the word.

Fifthly, It stultifies itself; for, beginning on a religious basis, and acquiring its chief renown by the fruits of its first work, it would end by banning and barring all religious beliefs, even "the existence of an overruling Providence."

Sixthly, It establishes a monopoly of a business best left to individual enterprise and the immediate control of parents.

Seventhly, The principles on which it is justified will justify with greater force the claim of the communist to labor and bread.

ADMIT THE WRONG, AND CHANGE THE SYSTEM.

After so much fault-finding with the existing system of common schools, it is not out of the way to ask what system is proposed in exchange. My object is not to propose plans and systems, but to argue that the present one is radically wrong, and needs amendment. Until the American people admit the failure of the system as it now is, no change need be looked for. Once admitted, they will be quick to bring about a change. They will either throw education directly and compulsorily on parents, paying only for those unable to pay for themselves, or they will so broaden the system that all can come under it without the sacrifice of conscientious rights. This plunging into secularism is only the cowardice of the politician who fears to face the consequences of sound logic, common-sense, equal rights, parental prerogatives, and a secretly nourished hatred and conspiracy against the Catholic Church. To put off justice in deference to the expediency of the hour, is the way of the politician; the statesman announces his principles, and stands or falls by them. Truth is old; it is ever new; it endures forever.

FULL DISCUSSION AND FAIR ARGUMENT.

I appear before you at your request. On one point at least we agree. It is your good pleasure to listen to arguments in favor of principles and doctrines with which you do not agree because in your judgment they are not sound. You do not, on that account, question my honesty of purpose, my sincerity of conviction, or my love of country. Perhaps the speaker of this afternoon and his hearers are as wide apart on this question as any two individuals in the country. Yet we have come together,—I, to address you in plainness of speech, not wanting, I trust, in courtesy; you, to listen patiently and attentively.

BOSTON SHOULD SETTLE THE QUESTION.

When designing men are plotting mischief and breeding hate and rancor, it is well for Boston to furnish this useful lesson to other parts of the country.

To you, men of Boston, to the intelligence and honesty of Massachusetts, and especially of Boston, I, in my character of Catholic American citizen, appeal in behalf of the rights of parents for dispassionate consideration of this subject; confident that, if not heeded to-day, the day is not distant when it will be considered. I have said it before, I say it again, that the settlement of this great question, affecting the future welfare and stability of the republic, must come from Boston and Massachusetts. It is more creditable, in the meantime, for us to suffer, to be punished and persecuted, than for American citizens to be the persecutors. The rights you would maintain at any cost for yourselves, I beseech you not to deny to the humblest citizens in the land, however helpless they may seem. For large numbers, who have few to speak for them, I plead before you. Your interests and theirs, as fellow-citizens, are bound together as one. Our country is with unparalleled quickness becoming one of populous cities. These centres of population, notwithstanding extraordinary efforts to counteract the danger, are nurturing street Arabs, wild youths, bands of trained depredators on others' property, hosts of corrupt, demoralized inhabitants. Peaceable and order-loving citizens are bound for their own sake to look at the danger, call to their assistance every available agency, and engage the services of all who can work in this vast and difficult field. In vain will they develop vigor and power of body in the young, and brighten and quicken the intellect, if the cunning of the one, and the passions and appetites that spring from the other, be not held in subjection by the elevation and strengthening of the heart.

HELPERS IN THE WORK.

We offer to do a work for our own poor, which you yourselves confess you cannot accomplish. We possess, in our religious orders of brothers and sisters, armies of skilled teachers voluntarily consecrated to the work of laboring among poor children, and instructing them in secular learning, while grounding them in virtue and morality. They are ready to spend their lives in this work of highest love and self-sacrifice; they can reach the hearts of these children of poverty; they can calm turbulent passions, and teach self-restraint, love of order, and respect for the rights of others.

The large cities need the services of these workers and teachers. It is unwise, it is worse, to cast them off, in view of the non-success of common schools to reach thousands of poor children; it is unwise to assert principles, that, logically carried out, lead to communism; it is dangerous unto madness to hinder the influences of religion from reaching to the lanes and by-ways of our crowded cities; it is sowing discord, and engendering heart-burnings, to trample on the just rights of any class in a republic.

Parental rights, involving parental duties imposed by the natural and the revealed law, sanctioned and upheld by the common law and the Constitution, cannot be persistently disregarded without danger and detriment to the nation.

FUNDAMENTAL PRINCIPLES.

In a few words let me resume and give some conclusions logically deducible from the facts, statements, and arguments submitted to you in this paper.

In a republic whose citizens are of different religious beliefs, who are voters needing intelligence, who are parents breeding races of freemen, the following principles are primary and vital:—

1. The non-interference of the State in religious matters, in church, or in school.
2. Compulsory knowledge, through parents' schools, under parents' control, and at their cost.
3. Free trade in education, or no monopoly of the teacher's profession.

THE SCHOOL QUESTION.

The Free Religious Association has afforded the public a fair opportunity to listen to able statements of the positions of two parties to the controversy in relation to the use of the Bible in the common schools. Bishop McQuaid, of Rochester, one of the most distinguished of Roman Catholic prelates in this country, and by his former utterances especially well-known in connection with the discussion of this question, last Sunday week presented the view of the Roman Catholics; or, at all events, of the priesthood of that Church. Francis E. Abbot, editor of THE INDEX, last Sunday presented the arguments of those who hold that the common schools should be secularized; that is, that instruction in religion should not be attempted in them at all. There is yet another party whose case has not been presented. We mean, of course, those who maintain that the reading of the Protestant version of the Bible ought to be enforced as a part of the programme of common school exercises. The argument of this last class, however, less needs statement in this community, where it is generally understood, and probably, at the present time, is consented to by more persons than either of the other arguments. But those who have heard or read this debate, as well as those who have watched the development of the great debate for years past, will hardly fail to notice that, so far as principles are involved, the Roman Catholics and those who insist upon the reading of the Protestant version of the Scriptures are essentially agreed, and as between them it is simply a struggle as to which kind of religious instruction the schools shall impart; that is to say, which form of religion the State shall favor and support. Therefore it may be considered that Bishop McQuaid in some degree represented all those who maintain that the common schools should be used as a means for the religious education of youth.

But there is one important difference between Bishop McQuaid and the Protestant defenders of the policy of religious instruction. The Protestants desire that their Bible should be read in all the schools, whether Catholics attend or remain away, while the former asks only that the Catholic children may have Catholic instruction. How this may be accomplished Bishop McQuaid does not clearly set forth, but other Catholics have often indicated by a request for a division of the school fund. We are not unmindful that the bishop expressed his dissatisfaction with the whole scheme and tendency of the common school system as at present developed, on the ground of its expensiveness and its ambition to do too much. Some have therefore jumped to the conclusion that he opposed the common school system altogether. Possibly that may be the fact, but we fancy he would be content with a public school system if the Catholics might receive a just proportion of the funds to expend for the education of their children in their own way. How Protestants expended their proportion would not much trouble him then. If they were wasteful, so much the worse for them. They are not all Catholics, by any means, who are questioning whether it is quite the thing for the State to support high-school and collegiate education by public taxation. President Eliot has lately expressed himself strongly to the effect that it is beyond the legitimate province of the State to impose taxes to support the higher education, and last week the rector of Grace Church in Newton contributed a thoughtful paper of similar import to one of the journals of that city. But both these gentlemen are earnest friends of common schools within what they consider to be the appropriate sphere of such schools. On the other hand, whatever Bishop McQuaid's opinions may be, there is a numerous party in the Catholic Church which would sincerely regret the abandonment of common schools, although they do not pretend not to desire some modifications of the present system which would make it more satisfactory to those of their own faith.

The question at issue is not whether common schools shall be maintained. If the Catholics wanted to be rid of them they know well enough the American people will never seriously consider the question. The only question about which it is possible to have a reasonable and practical controversy is whether the schools, such as they are or may be, whether including the higher or only the fundamental education, shall be schools for secular and religious instruction, or for secular instruction alone. If they are to combine secular and religious instruction, we do not see any fair and honorable escape from the conclusion that a way must be sought and provided by which all children may receive that kind of religious instruction desired for them by their parents. We should deny strenuously the right of any municipality, the majority of which by chance may be Catholics, to enforce the reading of the Douay version of the Bible by the children of Protestant parents attending schools supported by public taxes. We respect the protest of the Jews against having their children taught in the public schools that Jesus was the Christ. We sympathize with the sincere Roman Catholics who think it a hardship to be compelled to pay taxes for the support of schools in which a Scripture that they esteem heretical is exalted as the most sacred revelation of the truth. There is but one way to avoid a struggle between religions for control of the school system wherever there is a chance of advantage, and that is to take the broad ground that the State shall avoid giving distinction and preference to any sect of religious believers, by omitting religious ceremonies and exercises from the daily routine of the schools.

The fear is, on the part of some, that such a policy would result in a general neglect of religion and a propagation of infidelity. These persons, we think, do not much regard the lessons of history. It used to be thought that unless the State sustained the Church the Church would die. But it has been found in our experience that vital religion has lost no force or power by leaving the responsibility for supporting its agencies entirely to voluntary effort. In view of this fact why should there be any doubt that if the entire responsibility for the religious education of children be intrusted to the Church and the family it will be quite as well attended to as now? We know that the Catholic Church will still make objection to the schools, or attempt to do so, but in the nature of things opposition will grow more and more impotent. The State, at all events, will not be amenable to the accusation of partiality to one religious sect to the disadvantage and prejudice of others. It will stand in the same relation to each and all. The pretence, if persisted in, that the State is hostile to religion, while it places no obstacle in the way of parental and priestly authority outside the schools, will not long appear to the intelligent to be anything more than a pretence. The public schools will accomplish their proper work, and the citizen who deprives his children of the instruction they afford will need to provide a good substitute, if he would escape their reproaches.—Boston Daily Advertiser, Feb. 22.

WHO ARE THE HEATHEN?

WONG CHIN FOO AT CONCERT HALL.

Owing to the rain-storm but a small audience greeted the heathen orator, Wong Chin Foo, who lectured in Concert Hall last evening, upon "The great Religions of China and Japan," and contrasted Confucianism and Buddhism with Christianity. His English is fluent and forcible, and without any foreign accent. He wore the costume of a "red-button" mandarin, as China bestows that little upon all her learned men, the degree of proficiency being indicated by the number and color of the buttons. On the platform sat his college-mate, Moung San-win. His listeners were so pleased with his graceful and easy manner that after the lecture they crowded around the rostrum to shake hands with him, an operation adverse to Chinese customs, but to which he sociably submitted. The following are extracts from the discourse:—

Ladies and Gentlemen:—I rejoice very much, this evening, to feel so free to express to you sentiments which, if presented in other lands, would, I fear, excite a great deal of prejudice for themselves; but we are in one of the greatest countries of the world, and where men can freely and fully express their ideas. Let us reason together upon one of the most important subjects of the time. There are more than five hundred millions of people who have never heard of the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now, according to your Scriptures, what is to be done with all these? Is it possible for a great and merciful God to care for one portion of the human family and neglect the other? I could see nothing reasonable or just in God's sending three-fourths of the human race to hell, for no other reason than the difference between their honest convictions and those of the rest of men. God has given to the various nations a way to salvation fitting their respective peculiar needs. A prevalent idea in this—I am at a loss to know how it originated—is, that the Burmese and Chinese have no proper idea of a Supreme Being. Why, before Germany or France or England knew the art of civil living—when their people were clad like the wild Indians of the West,—then China and Hindostan were as highly civilized as they are to-day. They knew the art of printing, and thousands of years ago some of the most useful instruments of modern times were invented by them. Is it possible that such people could bow down to wood and stone, and not know the difference between the Creator and

His creatures? I admit we have images. I lately saw an intelligent gentleman kneel before a cross; I did not disturb him, knowing that he was communing with his God. When he arose I asked: "Why do you kneel to a cross of wood instead of to God?" He told me that that cross represented the sufferings of the Lord Jesus Christ, and recalled to him the whole Bible; he did not reverence the wood as wood, but as a sacred memorial. In our temples we have images to remind us of God's greatness, and the more readily to inspire fear and humility in our hearts. We, like you, have the Ten Commandments of God; but we have not your first commandment, because the Chinese, unlike the Jews to whom yours was given on Sinai, never fell into idolatry. And yet the Jews were in direct communication with God. Here are ours: First, thou shalt not kill the smallest creature; second, thou shalt not steal; third, thou shalt not infringe the laws of chastity; fourth, thou shalt not lie; fifth, thou shalt not calumniate; sixth, thou shalt not revenge injuries; seventh, thou shalt not excite quarrels; eighth, honor thy father and mother; ninth, preserve faith in the Holy Writings; tenth, believe in immortality. The Golden Rule of Confucius is the same as the great Christian commandment, except, like everything else in China, which is on the opposite side of the earth you know, it reads backward, thus: "Whatsoever you would that men should not do to you, do you not to them." The Christian religion would not take in China; neither would Confucianism in this country, especially our rule: "Grieve not because thou art not promoted to high offices." You live in order to do well; we live in order to live well, loving our fellow-man, practicing morality, never thinking of death till the hour comes, and when it does come, if our lives have been good, we are prepared. People believe the Chinese government to be the most tyrannical in the world; that the Emperor has sole control over the lives of his subjects. It is not so. The Emperor cannot break our laws, and they protect the natural rights of all men. If, after a rule of three years, the head of a city does not improve his people in morality and intelligence, he cannot be promoted; and if a school-teacher, during the same period, make a similar failure with his pupils, he loses his position. In China we never knew slavery until of late years, when Spain, Portugal, and Italy carried off our coolies and little children to sell them in the West Indies and elsewhere. Trace back the history of China for four thousand years, and slavery will not be found on its pages. There all men are equal, as they are here; but we distinguish between the ignorant and the intelligent. Learning is so highly regarded in China that a man with a blue button on his cap can travel all over the country without a penny in his pocket; and when he passes all must stand aside and respect him as one from whom they have something moral and intellectual to learn; for no seminary in China dare issue a diploma to a man of known immorality. The moral is considered far above the intellectual. In making this distinction we obey Confucius, who says we should associate with none who are not equally intelligent with ourselves, lest we become degraded to their rank. The great doctor also says: "Let the public schools be carefully maintained; and let children be early instructed in morals." As the parents give birth to our bodies, so, we believe, our school-teachers give birth to our souls. Many say that we have no religion, but only moral principle. In our opinion, moral principle is religion. To show the similarity of the Buddhist with the Christian religion I will read an extract: "The oracle commanded Vishnu to become a man, and he born in the city of Matra, or Buddha. Vishnu replied: 'I will become incarnate in the house of Sadie, and will issue forth to mortal birth from the womb of Devaci (a virgin). It is time I should display my power and relieve the oppressed earth from its load.' When Devaci became pregnant her countenance was radiant with celestial light. Brahma and Seva, with a host of spirits, came to her and sang: 'In thy delivery, our favored of all women, all Nature has cause to exult. How ardently we longed to look and behold that face, for the sake of which we have come to exult; how ardently we longed to look and behold that face, for the sake of which we have coursed round the three worlds.' " "Put not upon thy neighbor's head a hat that hurts thine own," says Buddha, who stands as Christ does, an intercessor between the Almighty Father and man. Can we not infer, therefore, that man by following such principles as these may inherit the kingdom of heaven? What is a Christian? If I understand, it is to be like Christ. Christ was a good man; a man without sin; therefore, to be good, you must imitate Him. The Buddhist law, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy strength and all thy mind, with thy whole heart and thy whole soul, and thy neighbor as thyself," is also the Christian law. The speaker censured the Presbyterian article of faith which excludes from hope of salvation all who are not Christians. Let those who censure us study our religion and morals, find their faults, and show them to us. If reason prove them right and us wrong, we will concede; but, in this age of reason, never otherwise. Confucius won over his hundreds of millions, not by the sword, but by reason. His followers number four hundred million of the four hundred and fifty million people in China, one-half of the thirty-six million in Japan, nearly all the fifty-three million in Corea, and one-third of the forty-five million in Tartary. You cannot help admiring that great man, because he reasons. Through him those four great territories have been preserved thousands of years in happiness. Ladies and gentlemen, I thank you.

The speaker quoted copiously from Confucius and Brahminical writers, showing highly interesting analogies between Christianity and heathenism. He caused great laughter in relating how customs in China are directly opposed to those of America, even as the one country is the antipode of the other. His suavity and eloquence made such an impression, that it was with difficulty that he disengaged himself from the friendly throng that besieged him when the lecture was over.—Philadelphia Times, Dec. 8, 1875.

DEAK AND KOSSUTH.

The death last week of the great patriot-statesman of Hungary, Francis Deak, naturally suggests comparisons between his career and that of his fellow-leader in the revolution of 1848, Louis Kossuth. After the short-lived Magyar Republic had been crushed by Russian invasion, both continued to labor for the liberation of their country from the tyranny of Austrian rule, but by different methods. Kossuth remained in exile, holding fast to his faith in the possibility of the establishment of a democratic form of government in Hungary, and from asylums on foreign soil continued to agitate for a new revolution. Deak returned, gathered around him, in the form of a compact and determined political organization, the intelligence and patriotism of the Magyar population, and while preserving the form of allegiance to the Hapsburg government, managed to make Hungary a constant thorn in its side. Thus weakened, Austria fought with France in 1859 and lost Lombardy, fought with Prussia in 1866 and was again defeated and crowded out of the German Bund. Deak, who had patiently bided his time, keeping alive the ardent desire of his countrymen for independence while repressing the dangerous zeal of his followers, now saw that the hour for action had come, and in the midst of the prostration and despair which followed the battle of Sadowa, he and his associates extorted from the Emperor a constitution for Hungary which gave her the full right of self-government, and as large a measure of liberty as had been demanded by the patriots of the revolution. Francis Joseph was brought to Pesth, crowned King of Hungary, and made to swear, sword in hand, upon the historic Coronation Hill, a mound of earth brought from a hundred battle-fields, that he would maintain and defend the Constitution and ancient right of a people that had long regarded him as their ruthless oppressor.

The victory of Deak was complete. An equal partnership was formed with Austria for the control of the foreign relations, the army and the navy of the new dual government. The name of the empire was changed to Austria-Hungary, and to the old imperial flag was joined the tricolor of 1848. A separate government, with a responsible ministry, was formed at Pesth, a national guard organized, the Hungarian Diet regained full legislative powers, and the Magyar language was restored in the schools and the courts of law. After the accomplishment of this bloodless revolution, Deak remained up to his death the leader of the Moderate Liberal party in the Diet, which went by his name, opposing alike the Radicals who desired a complete separation from Austria, and the Reactionists who intrigued with the Court party at Vienna to restore the old despotic order. Kossuth declined to return and take a seat in the Parliament of his liberated country, because the government was not republican in form, and the independence gained by his compatriots was not nominal as well as actual. For this he cannot be blamed, and ought not to be underrated. He was a theorist, and he held to his ideals. Deak did not believe in the feasibility of a republic surrounded by hostile monarchies, and resting upon the uncontrolled will of a population of mixed races, some of whom are to-day so little advanced in civilization that their peasantry wear garments of sheepskins with the wool on. Kossuth still lives—a lonely exile in Italy, grandly heroic in his devotion to his early principles, but almost forgotten in Hungary. Deak in his old age was idolized as the liberator of his country, and now that he is dead his memory will be revered as that of Washington is in our own land.

Many interesting anecdotes are told of the dead statesman, illustrating the Spartan-like simplicity of his life. Titles and decorations were offered him in abundance, but he refused them all. Lucrative posts were pressed upon him in vain. He would hold no office but that of representative of the people. A landed estate brought him in a small income. It is said that his expenses were only $1,000 a year. He lived in a little apartment up two flights of stairs. Many were the attempts made by his friends, in collusion with his landlord, to persuade him to change his quarters to the floor below, but all were unsuccessful. The municipality gave his name to the street in which he lodged. That would no doubt have induced him to move had he not known that wherever he went the name would follow him. When summoned to meet the Emperor in the palace at Buda, to confer upon the new form of government, he went in a one-horse cab, wearing his every-day clothes. Probably he did not possess such an article as a dress-coat. The courtiers were scandalized that he should invade the sacred presence of majesty in such apparel, but he represented the organized will of the Hungarian nation, and the Emperor would have received him gladly if he had worn no coat at all. He used to ride to the House of Representatives in an omnibus that passed his door. A carriage was presented him, but he refused to accept it. Then some of his aristocratic admirers who were unwilling that their great leader should in his feeble health be crowded in a public conveyance bought one of the omnibuses of the line, and at the hour when he left his lodgings the vehicle regularly approached his door as if it had just come along, and had not yet picked up any passengers. As soon as he got in it drove directly to the Parliament house. After a while Deak discovered the cheat, and never entered the pretended omnibus afterward. He accepted but one legacy, and that was the three penniless children of his dead friend the poet Petöfy, the author of the Szozat—the Magyar Marseillaise,—whose patriotic verses had made him much beloved by the people. As soon as it was known that Deak had undertaken the care of the orphans, a subscription was set on foot, and a fund amounting to over $200,000 was raised for them in a few days. Thus they became rich, but their benefactor died as he had lived, poor as far as material possessions constitute wealth, but in a true sense the richest man in all Hungary. His wealth was the love of a whole nation, won by his unselfish devotion to the cause of freedom. Every patriotic Hungarian mourns his loss as that of a father and a benefactor.—N. Y. Tribune, Feb. 2.

WORTH CONSIDERING.

A Chicago ministers' meeting has recently debated the question, "Are the churches making men conscientious in moral conduct?" The inquiry is certainly pertinent to the times in which we live. The people of our country are just now much occupied with the obligations of personal religion. They flock to the churches and hear edifying discourses. Evangelists abound, who fill opera-houses, skating-rinks, and whatever structures can be had capable of containing large multitudes. Song is not wanting to work its spells and move to tears. The religious impulse is not limited to the small minority who keep to the quiet by-paths of life, nor to women nor children; it reaches the busiest workers of our cities, who set up prayer-meetings within ear-shot of the market and the exchange. They have drilled devotion till it has assumed the exactness of business method; they sing and pray by the minute, and in addressing the Almighty make sure of being "up to time."

If there are in the outworking of the prevalent religious feeling here and there slight eccentricities, there can be no question of its entire sincerity. No art, no artifice, could produce the results which spontaneously appear, East and West, North and South. But it cannot be denied that there appear at the same time exhibitions of American life which are in sharp contrast with these manifestations of pious emotion. Reverend forgers and lay defaulters, speculators who by a transition as slight as the lapse of a letter become peculators, betrayers of trusts, bribers and takers of bribes are so many, that a large part of the ample space of the Tribune is needed to detail their exposure and the mischief they have wrought. Which of these appearances is superficial it might for a moment puzzle an observer to determine. It may be said that the dishonesty is but a surface disease, not incompatible with a healthy condition of the social body; it may be nothing more, and yet it is alarmingly prevalent. There are not lacking desponding critics who maintain that the show of religious zeal now so common is deceptive, and that American society is corrupt through and through. This harsh judgment is, however, contradicted by the ordinary facts of our daily life. A well-ordered community of rogues is an impossibility, and the fact that American society holds well together is evidence that honesty—the cement that binds part to part—has not disappeared.

Be all this as it may, the question of the Chicago ministers is, in one sense, deserving of consideration. Do the churches give sufficient attention to making men conscientious in moral conduct, especially business conduct? That the churches must hold up before the people a lofty ideal of morality is inevitable; the standards to which they in common appeal require no less. But it is the office of the churches to warn men of the dangers to which they are most exposed, to trace prevalent evils to their sources in human nature, and to point out the importance of resisting the beginnings of wrong. At least this seems to the lay mind to be the office of the Church, and the lay mind is extremely puzzled to determine why it is that, at the present time, religion and dishonesty jostle so often against each other.

There is one solution of the problem which may be the correct one. Wide-spread vices will, in a healthy community, evoke an antagonistic force bent on their suppression. An era of paper money, it is well known, is usually an era of extravagance and fraud. The wave of religious feeling now sweeping over the country may be the reaction which, judging from former experience of the world, we are entitled to expect. Can, however, this force bring the nation back to a better observance of the obligations of commercial integrity, without frequent and exact teaching from those whose office it is to give lessons in morals? The suspicious bred of so much fraud have taken all the life out of business. Can the "revival" be made a revival of old-fashioned business integrity? Can it be brought to reach that chief of sinners, the United States government, and so lead it to pay down in solid cash in place of depreciated paper? It is not impossible; and once done would be worth as much to the country as a session of Congress.—N. Y. Tribune.

WILLIAM McCUTCHEON, some fifty-one years old, undertook to banter with a starving beggar who asked for alms at Britton's saloon, 126 Greenwich Avenue, New York, on Saturday night, Dec. 11, offering him some bread, and then refusing to give it to him. Finally he put the bread in his own mouth and turned away from the sufferer, bidding him go away. A moment afterward the attention of those in the place was attracted by a peculiar noise being made by McCutcheon, and rushing toward him they found him choking. In a few seconds he was dead. The bread which he had denied the mendicant choked him to death.—Exchange.

Poetry.

THE VICTORY OF THE ATOMS;

OR, THE BRITISH ASSOCIATION OF 1874.

Now glory to the Molecules, from which all creatures came!
And glory to the Scientist who spreads abroad their fame!
Oh, hear him tell the wondrous tale that old Lucretius told!
How danced, and jumped, and rolled, and thumped around the Atoms bold,
Now hither, thither, up and down, through all the realms of space,
Till every little Molecule was joggled into place.
Hurrah! Hurrah! A single speech hath beat the sermons all,—

Before the Atomic theory all other systems fall,
There was a time in history—or many years before—
When men made Gods of dead ones, or even something lower.

Then some of them grew wiser and laid the Gods aside,
But first the great Democritus the little Atoms spied,
Before the swarm of Goths and Huns o'er Greece and Rome was hurled,

Which covered up for centuries the wisdom of the world.
And then wise Epicurus, who didn't care a fig
For life or death, or anything, for little Gods or big,
In his quiet garden sat, and watched them as they tumbled o'er,

Till their "subsequent proceedings interested him no more."

Next, the whirling Atoms struck the rude Tarpeian rock,
Evolving, as they fell, the great Lucretius from the shock;
And, after falling silently through all the realms of time,
Harmoniously arranged themselves in his resounding rhyme.

But then, alas! for centuries the Molecules were hid
By Popes, and Monks, and Fathers, all beneath the Bible-lid,

Who strove, with all the pupils of the stupid Stagirate,
By logic and theology to keep them out of sight;
Till Copernicus appeared and Giordano Bruno, Gassendi and the bishop good (not quite so bright you know);

While Bacon, Newton, Hobbes, and Boyle for Darwin cleared the way,

To show how all creative power deep hid in Matter lay;
And slowly worked, age after age, to make or change a feather,

Or teach the bees Economy and Euclid—both together;
How Wit and Wisdom, Love and Hate, and all that stirs the soul,

Are only sparks that fall from Atoms, clashing as they roll,
To spread the glorious Gospel, which tells how it is rife
With the potency and promise of every form of life.
Let every age its dream contrive of all that lies beyond—
Fit labor for each mightiest mind to frame some fancy fond,

While men shall come and men shall go, as clouds of Atoms made

In Heaven's azure distance into viewless Atoms fade.
Then glory to the Molecules, from which all creatures came,

And to the great philosopher who celebrates their fame!
Hurrah! Hurrah! The victory is with the Atoms small,
Before their undivided throne all combinations fall!

—Boston Advertiser, Jan. 27.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 26.

Mary S. Osborn, $3.20; W. K. Rogers, $3.25; C. Vail,
$1.60; A. Angell, $3.20; W. A. Leonard, $3.85; E. P. Wright,
$3.20; B. B. Hill, $3; J. T. Brady, $3.20; H. S. Thomas,
$1.50; C. M. Cuyler, $4; E. B. Foote, $6.65; Henry Whitmore, $3.15; J. H. Allen, $3.20; H. S. Griggs, $3.20; A. J. S.
Wells, $3.20; A. H. Roffe & Co., $2.20; Cash, $1; E. H.
Aldrich, $13.20; Jonathan Sawyer, $10; E. A. Hodadon, 20 cents; Mathias Tiel, 20 cents; James Nye, 20 cents; R. R.
Atchison, 10 cents; R. Lyon, Jr., 50 cents; Mrs. A. T.
Hagan, 25 cents; Mrs. J. C. Godfrey, 10 cents; Thos.
Tasker, 25 cents; Thos. Hughes, 10 cents; J. W. Sulist, 75 cents; J. Asemann, $5.10; Geo. Hoadley, $20; Robert Ormiston, $10; W. P. Chambers, $10; G. H. Foster, $1.75; John
Savary, 50 cents; Geo. Hes, 35 cents; W. V. Street, 25 cents;
A. G. Waitse, 50 cents; H. I. Boulderson, $4.15; Hunter &
Co., $2.20; W. J. Birchard, $10; C. M. Gardner, $3.20; T. G.
Oreagh, $3.20; J. Van Blaricum, 50; S. E. Dorr, $3.20; Delano Patrick, $3; Joseph Knight, $10; J. D. Featherstonough, $3.25; W. J. Larned, $3.20; S. C. Mason, $3.20; G. T. Woodman, $1; Cash, $4; R. F. Schermerhorn, 10 cents; S. D.
Wakelield, 10 cents; R. C. Bassett, 10 cents; H. C. Lockwood, $3; H. Molleaux, $1.25; W. A. Jenkins, $3.25; O.
Jettinger, $3; D. B. Morton, $3.25; A. J. Griffin, $3.40; C.
A. J. Lindsley, $3.20; T. P. Gere, $3.25; A. Smith, $3.20;
Mrs. H. L. Ambler, $1.50; Mrs. Beckett, 34 cents; S. T.
Headley, 50 cents; J. J. Hoopes, 10 cents; G. B. Richmond,
10 cents; T. B. Skinner, 25 cents; N. P. Brame, 10 cents;
T. M. Lamb, $11.20.

THE LAWS CONCERNING NEWSPAPERS.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, considered as wishing to continue the subscription.
2. If subscribers wish their papers discontinued, publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible. Notice should always be given of the removal.
4. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office or place to which they are sent, they are held responsible until they settle bills and give notice to discontinue.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a paper from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, will be held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers pay in advance, they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to continue to send it, and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 2, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

WE ARE requested to state that Sherwood Bonner, author of the satirical poem on "The Radical Club," is writing a series of letters from Europe in the Boston Sunday Times. She is now travelling with Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton.

CANNOT you form a club of five new subscribers to THE INDEX, among your own friends and acquaintance? To clubs of five new subscribers the paper will be sent for a year at $2.50 each; to clubs of ten new subscribers, at $2.00 each. An extra copy will be sent free to the getter-up of the club. This reduction cannot be made to any whose names are now on our mail-list, as it is made in the hope that such new subscribers will renew at regular rates. Now is the time to help THE INDEX, if you really value its ideas and aims.

"I WOULD LIKE," writes a correspondent in Canada, "a couple of copies of THE INDEX for Feb. 17th, containing C. K. Whipple's 'Errors of Orthodoxy.' Such plain and pointed writings take well with the common people. The only thing against the increased circulation of THE INDEX among common readers is its high-toned literary character. The masses do not assimilate it easily, and with them lies a large portion of the moving power in Orthodoxy." It is amusing to see that THE INDEX is not in favor with the "unlettered"—Christians!

A BOUND VOLUME OF THE INDEX, either for 1871 or 1872, will be given as a premium to each new subscriber who remits $3.20 for a year's subscription, or to each old subscriber who remits $3.20 for a new subscriber obtained by means of his or her efforts. The volume will be sent by express at the recipient's expense; but no volume will be sent at all unless it is claimed at the time of making the remittance. This offer can only remain in force a little while, as the supply of volumes is small; but it is one which those who know the value of these volumes will hasten to improve.

THE "Religious Freedom Amendment," at the suggestion of an earnest friend of that measure, has been printed on half-sheets, for the use of all who are willing to interest themselves in getting it fairly before the people. Space is left below the Amendment for writing; and those who are willing to do a little unselfish work for their country at this crisis can use these half-sheets very effectively by sending them to the editors of daily papers, with a written request to publish the Amendment as a matter of common interest. Copies of this printed Amendment will be sent cheerfully to any address on application at this office.

THE Maryborough and Dunolly Advertiser (Australia), in its issue of December 13, 1875, quotes and comments on one of our last autumn's paragraphs: "The Boston INDEX thus summarizes the report of General Pope on the shameful conduct of the Indian Bureau in defrauding the original owners of the soil of their stipulated supplies: 'Contractors and rings have plundered the Indians beyond endurance. Border roughs play Ahab to Naboth, and steal his vineyard. The people of the whole West, with apparently few exceptions, are in favor of extermination, and rejoice to see starvation goaded into a warfare that can end in nothing else; while the government has connived at this cumulative wickedness till every honest citizen is made to feel himself an involuntary murderer. At last the army officers have united in protest, and forced an exposure which lies and tricks cannot any longer suppress. Is it too much to expect that justice will be done at this late day? What 'justice' have the strong races ever shown to the weak ones? Is not the question constantly ringing in the ears of every 'civilized' and powerful nation on the globe, 'Where is Abel thy brother?'"

SOME THOUGHTS ABOUT HONESTY.

"Honesty is the best policy," says the proverb. Perhaps so, and perhaps not. Is it quite safe to assume that dishonesty is always discovered and punished? That no dishonest act ever escapes detection or brings permanent profit to the perpetrator? That no "successful" man, as the world reckons success, has ever been guilty of dishonesty in any form or in any degree? We fear that these and similar questions are too easily answered. The spectacle of triumphant rascality is too common to leave faith in the old proverb altogether unshaken. No doubt there is a great deal of truth in it; no doubt that it is safer in the long run and on the average, even so far as concerns worldly expediency alone, to earn a reputation for honest dealing by uniformly strict regard to all that honest dealing requires. But there are very many whose observation of men and experience of affairs have led them to disbelieve the soundness of the proverb, as a general principle; and some of them go so far as to laugh at the notion that morality has anything to do with commercial or political success, provided one is shrewd enough to keep clear of statutory crimes. They say that what is sanctioned by general usage is moral enough for all practical purposes; yet it is not difficult to instance many customs and habits thus sanctioned which are utterly indefensible, if tested by any high code of morals. When it is declared that "honesty is the best policy," one should understand that the honesty usually meant is merely avoidance of dishonesty so glaring and reckless as to involve danger of incarceration in the State prison. The moment one conceives a high ideal of honesty, superior to the current practices of the business world, the proverb ceases to be true and becomes an obvious absurdity. Even when taken in the former low sense, it is extremely doubtful whether the proverb holds good in much more than a majority of cases; the exceptions are so numerous as to lead not a few persons to mistake them for the rule itself.

There is in the world a great deal more honesty, and also a great deal more dishonesty, both of the merely legal and of the ideal sorts, than comes to the surface of common life. We all grow so indignant over the details of exposures, scandals, investigations, scoundrelisms and crimes in the columns of our daily papers that we are tempted to believe our own generation the worst that ever lived, and to sigh for the pristine simplicity and purity of colonial days; forgetting all the while how the modern press rakes the world for items which got no publicity in older times. For one, we disbelieve utterly in the imagined moral superiority of the past. Robbers, thieves, and swindlers probably form a far smaller percentage of the population to-day than they did a hundred years ago; but they attract more notice because their infamous exploits are now blazoned everywhere in the public prints. Moreover, it is only the prevalent essential soundness of the public morality, at least as tried by the standards which the public practically adopt, that preserves society at all. Undiscovered or only half-discovered rascalities doubtless abound; nevertheless, undiscovered victories of high principle, seldom published even when discovered, undoubtedly abound much more. How could the world hold together, if we did not trust each other? And how could we trust each other, if in our own experience we did not encounter so much more honesty than dishonesty? And how could we encounter so much more honesty than dishonesty, if people did not so largely govern themselves by a nobler rule than—"honesty is the best policy"? Policy is simply a line of action determined upon to compass certain advantageous ends; and if everybody stopped to calculate the probable advantages or disadvantages of paying his debts or fulfilling a trust, the uncertainties of the case would often lead to fraud where now the debt is paid and the trust fulfilled. With all the rogueries daily practised, some detected and probably more undetected, we must not lose sight of the fact, which is a most cheering one, that in a vast majority of instances honest principles govern human action. If it were not so, society would fall into universal suspicion, paralysis, and disintegration. No—public opinion is overwhelmingly in favor of a certain degree of integrity and social morality, and it is sustained by those who generally live up to the standard thus established.

While all this, however, seems to be true, the need of a higher standard of honesty is painfully clear to all whose moral vision is not blurred. Even the average conscience is thrilled by such superb integrity as that of the Baring Brothers, who, having recommended the bonds of the Eastern Railroad as a good investment, and having found themselves mistaken in the matter, have voluntarily undertaken to pay some half-million of dollars as interest to those who bought these bonds on their recommendation. One such act as this, so contrary to the usages of business circles, is a better moral educator of the people than all the sermons preached in all the churches for a twelvemonth. Its very singularity shows the inadequacy of the received standard of honesty, and tends to raise it in a way that nobody can resist. When all business is done in that high-minded and self-respectful manner, it will become a school of the noblest virtues. Let us all be glad that such deeds are possible in these days of Winslows, and Tweeds, and Joyces.

THE REVIVAL.

They are doing it now in New York. The hippodrome is arranged for the new performances, and is filled nightly by people who enter for "the prize of the high calling." The Evangelists are in spirits. It looks as if they anticipated a more perfect triumph in the great city than they had achieved in the smaller ones. In their vision Babylon is fallen, and the New Jerusalem is visibly coming down out of the clouds.

There is no apparent reason for their hope. The enthusiasm has not reached a high point, nor does it seem likely to. Their task is heavy; not so heavy perhaps as in Brooklyn and Philadelphia, which are eminently "religious" cities; but still difficult, inasmuch as "religious" people are pretty much the same everywhere. In New York they are, if possible, more inaccessible than in other cities, because New York is more worldly than other cities, and "religious people" lead the worldliness.

Two classes offer to the Evangelists subjects for their regenerating work: the professed Christians, and the professed ruffians; the "elect," and the outcast.

The professed Christians, by which I mean not church-members in the strict acceptance of the phrase, but avowed believers in the "plan of salvation," are the majority in our community. They compose the great "middle class," if such an expression may be allowed. They are the active men of business, merchants, financiers, politicians, employers of labor, managers of affairs, controllers of practical interests. They lead the fashion, too, and sustain the institutions that are supposed to keep society together; respectable and conservative people, complacent and felicitous. Religion has encrusted upon them, and formed a hard integument like that of certain pachyderms. They are familiar with all the "experiences," are presumed to be well acquainted with the doctrines, and to have listened to the appeals. The path by prayer to the Throne of Grace is well trodden; the Bible is dog-eared by reading; "their heads are bald from the sermons that have hit them and glanced off." Seasoned like timber that no heat will open, they await the Holy Spirit in entire satisfaction. To reach these well-protected crustacea is of prime moment. It is not intelligence that stands in the way, for they do not know much; they neither read nor think; they are prepared by long docility to believe anything unreasonable, and will oppose no intellectual obstacle to the "shafts of the Almighty." They are simply callous from overmuch conversion. The spiritual soil is lifeless from frequent burnings with holy fire. It is interesting to watch the effect of the Evangelists' efforts to plant living seed in these arid, thin fields. They have begun in earnest. The "subjects" crowd the platform and fill all the seats. The Evangelists give them pungent lessons; pungent for them, rapid and trashy enough to the others. Will they succeed in breaking the rock of self-complacency, and causing a stream of fresh feeling, manward and Godward, to flow out? That is the question.

If they do, the other part of their task may be "antedraped" and taken in hand; namely, the conversion of the actual sinners whom no quickening influences reach, the licentious, the drunken, the dissolute, the dangerous classes that put society on the defensive.

At present, the only form of religion that reaches them is Romanism, the worst form possible for such as they are, for it prevents the growth of the humanity by which alone they can hope to be saved. They need a conscience. Romanism gives them a priest. They want a feeling of social responsibility. Romanism gives them book and rite. They need the sense of personal reliance and courage. Romanism makes them slaves to authority. Romanism may be a proper religion for the cultivated and elegant who can afford to be symbolical and sentimental, and can please their taste with the luxury of a priest. But for the poor, and darkened, and vicious, different treatment is necessary, a treatment vital, and searching, and swift, such as none can administer as well as "Evangelists" can, if they be genuine Evangelists, wielding the "Sword of the Spirit."

There seems no probability that this work will be attempted, or, if attempted, that it will prosper. The Gospel errs on the side of sentiment. It is too sweet,—even saccharine. The old revivalists burned sulphur freely, and found it valuable as a disinfectant. Mr. Moody substitutes the fragrant words. Can revival-work be carried on in an atmosphere heavy with the perfume from censers? The "good old devil" is a valuable auxiliary on such occasions. He may be too much neglected. The gospel of damnation may have lost its efficacy. But is it safe for those that work to "bring souls to Christ" to presume that it has?

O. B. F.

WOMEN IN THE COURTS.

For more than a year Mrs. Lavinia Goodell, of Janesville, Wis., has been admitted to practise law in the Twelfth Judicial Circuit. A few days ago she appealed to the Supreme Court to practise in said Court; but the honorable judges denied her application. They decide that the rules of construction applying words of the masculine gender to females is only permissive to aid in construing the statutes according to legislative intent, and neither in nor out of the statute can any such intent to admit women to the bar be found. They say that, if this rule of construction were to apply to other statutes to which it is equally applicable, it would break down all distinctions of sex in the State government, and also admit women to nearly all public offices—legislative, executive and judicial.

How it is that the statutes admit a woman to practise in the Circuit Courts, but not in the Supreme Court, is not clear to your correspondent. If the intent of a statute is to decide its application, and there is no such intent in the statute, it would seem that the Court was constrained to deny the prayer of appellant.

As the Supreme Court of the United States lately decided that a woman could not claim the privilege of suffrage, under the Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment on the ground that she was a "citizen," because it was not the intent of the statute to include her, so our Court has decided that she cannot practise law before the Supreme Court of the State because a woman is not a "man" in the intent of the statutes. We may regret the limitations of the statutes, but the remedy is not in over-leaping or crawling through them, but in so amending them that the legal rights of woman to an enlarged sphere of activity shall be clearly specified and recognized.

But the judges show their animus when they add to their judgment this gratuitous advice: "The Court is not sorry that no statute can be found admitting women to the bar of the State courts, for it does not think it the proper place for the exercise of her peculiar qualities, or for the preservation of her purity." Indeed, learned gentlemen, who has asked for your opinion on the proper sphere of woman? As private individuals, you may entertain what opinion you please as to the "proper place" of woman by Nature; but, as a Court, you are called upon to decide only what her proper place is by law. Your business is to decide what is law, not what the law ought to be. You are judges, not advocates.

We submit that neither our supreme judges, our clergymen, nor our physiologists who write so wisely about "sexual cerebation" and the "genesis of woman," have any authority to decide what sphere her "peculiar faculties" shall be limited to. Leave the question of fitness to woman's choice and competition. Experience should teach us better than to decide a priori what is the "proper place" of woman. In the Middle Ages politics was regarded as beyond the "sphere" of everybody except the clergy and the army. The original charter of Delaware put the government into the hands of a royal commission, on the ground that "politics lie beyond the profession of merchants." Ignorance was the great accomplishment of women in France two centuries ago; and how long ago was it that the stage, or the pulpit, or a clerkship in public offices was considered no "proper place" for woman in this country?

We are inclined to think that sex is a greater factor in the problem of woman's occupation than most of the female suffragists have admitted; but we still think that the question of woman's sphere of activity should be left entirely to her own free choice and fair competition. As Stuart Mill says: "One thing we may be certain of—that what is contrary to woman's nature to do she never will be made to do by simply giving her nature free play. . . . What women by Nature cannot do, it is quite superfluous to forbid their doing." If Mrs. Goodell's nature leads her to argue points of law before judges and juries, let her follow her bent of mind. If she succeeds, she has found her calling; if she fails, she simply deserves the sympathy which failure in honest effort always merits.

But, they say, it would be a dangerous place "for the preservation of her purity" to allow woman to practise in the Supreme Court. That depends upon the character of the supreme judges, we suppose, and of the higher class of attorneys. If they are a set of rakes, Mrs. Goodell might be a good deal safer in the bosom of her family. The New York Nation has apprehended danger from such business connections; so does the Roman Church, and forbids her priests to look upon a woman with thoughts of matrimony, and imprisons "purity" in monasteries and nunneries, while the Turk keeps his wife locked in a harem, and only allows the attendant physician to feel her pulse in an arm thrust through the curtain. What amount of intimacy between the sexes is conducive to the highest virtue and strongest character is always debatable; but one cannot see why women are more dangerous as lawyers than as clients, as preachers, teachers, clerks, or servant-girls. If women are in danger in the courts, it is a disgraceful confession,—an insult which every lawyer of honor should resent. But what sort of justice is that which excludes woman from the courts on the ground of her "purity," and admits man to his superior rights because he is a "man," and a being unfit to associate with pure-minded woman? The less virtue, the more rights!

W. H. S.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The Senate has amended previous bills which authorized the refunding of a portion of the national debt in 4½ per cent. bonds,—extending the time to thirty years, and increasing the amount to $500,000,000. The present bill, which is said to have been framed with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and at the request of several European bankers, passed almost unanimously. The Senate also adopted the report of the Conference Committee on the District of Columbia Debt Bill, which puts an end (if the House concur) to the further issue of District bonds by "Boss" Shepherd's Board of Audit. The Senate passed also a bill providing for the sale of timber-lands in the States of California and Oregon, and in the Territories; and agreed with the House resolution making the 22d of February a legal holiday. The House passed a bill intended to prevent the useless slaughter of buffalo in the Territories, and a bill to reorganize the Judiciary; but the provisions of the latter bill are not considered of sufficient importance to be reported in the newspapers. The standard of importance, by the way, of certain Washington correspondents is incomprehensible by the average reader. Mr. Kerr has recovered his health sufficiently to resume the Speakership, Mr. Cox's temporary occupancy of that position, it is said, not having increased his chances of permanently occupying it hereafter. The Democratic Caucus Committee on Finance has not been able to present a bill for the approval of the Democratic Congressman, notwithstanding concessions on the part of the hard-money men, the soft-money men demanding the unconditional repeal of the Resumption Act.

The Republican State Convention of Indiana was held on the 22d. The platform adopted was a long, rambling, and altogether discreditable piece of work. It contains twenty-one resolutions, some of which declare that "the United States is a nation"; that "equal justice should be done to all"; that no State "should interfere in the execution of national laws," and similar incontrovertible propositions. It declares in favor of soft-money, and in favor of common schools; tells how the "patronage of the government" should be disposed; desires amicable relations between the people of the North and South; talks in a meaningless way about taxation, revenue, and economy; praises Grant's administration; and recommends Morton for the Presidency. In view of present national exigencies, it is difficult to imagine a body of men, pretending to the possession of common-sense, adopting a more puerile set of resolutions. Even Morton must be troubled a little by the action of the Convention, as it will now be necessary for him to jump over again to the "soft" side of the fence;—the Convention apparently forgot that his last speeches were upon the "hard" side of the fence, or at least that he faced in that direction while delivering them. Mr. G. S. Orth, an inflationist, was nominated for Governor.

The Democratic State Convention of Connecticut met on the 23d. The platform adopted contained but ten resolutions, and three or four of these contained praises of the Democratic party, congressmen, and State officers. The remainder of the platform advocated Civil-Service reform, a tariff for revenue only, the preservation of public lands for actual settlers, economy in public administration, and the early resumption of specie payments,—proposing, for this last purpose, two practical methods for the consideration of Congress. The platform was outspoken upon the essential questions of the day, contained no verbiage or political cant, and, aside from some expressions of party bias, was worthy the acceptance of honest and thoughtful men of any party. The Convention renominated the present Governor, Mr. C. R. Ingersoll.

The proceedings of the above conventions are worthy of some consideration when we remember that in Congress Mr. Blaine declares that the Republican party is in favor of hard-money, and Mr. Kelley declares that it is not in favor of hard-money; and at the same time we know that the Democratic Caucus of Congressmen seems hopelessly divided between "hard" and "soft." It would seem as though the members of neither political party could be brought into agreement with respect to the fundamental questions of national policy—civil service, currency, and the tariff,—and that both parties therefore must soon dissolve and new parties be formed. But old parties do not easily dissolve, and it may be, therefore, that the old organizations will be preserved until after the next presidential election. If this be the case, it is safe to predict that the result of that election will be determined by the votes of a large body of men who have ceased to regard the interests of either party, as a party, and who in voting hereafter will pay little regard to the name of the party, or even to the platform adopted by the party, but who will be influenced almost entirely by the character and known opinions of the man who is nominated. And it is safe to predict, also, that if either party should nominate a shifting politician—like Morton among the Republicans, or Hendricks among the Democrats,—it would have itself only to blame for its defeat.

It now appears that, notwithstanding positive statements to the contrary, General Schenck has not resigned, has no intention of resigning, and, moreover, that General Grant does not know of any reason why he should resign. To the Congressional Committee now investigating the relations of Schenck to the Emma Mine affair, Secretary Fish has sent word that, in his opinion, General Schenck had no intention of doing anything wrong; and Schenck himself has telegraphed to General Garfield, asking if he is to be sacrificed by a Confederate Congress,—a very shrewd question, under the circumstances, and one which shows that, in the present little game between him and the offended dignity of the American people, he has not forgotten the statement contained in his little book on "Draw-Poker," that one of the main elements of success is "plenty of cheek."

At a serenade given to General Babcock after his acquittal by the St. Louis jury, Colonel Hatch, according to newspaper report, made a speech in which he congratulated General Babcock on the result of the trial, and stated that "the verdict was another evidence of the closing of the gap between the North and South, and the restoration of peace and fraternal feelings." If Colonel Hatch meant by this peculiar statement that the jury had acquitted General Babcock not so much because they believed him to be innocent as because they knew him to be the private Secretary of President Grant, he then expressed the view of the matter which will be taken by not a few people. There may not have been sufficient evidence introduced to prove General Babcock guilty of conspiring to defraud the revenue, but on the other hand he was not shown to be innocent. His promised explanation of the mysterious telegrams was not given, but the introduction of the telegrams as evidence against him was opposed with all the skill of his lawyers. In Scotland the verdict would have been Not proven, instead of Not guilty. General Babcock has escaped imprisonment, but with a badly-damaged reputation. The people of the country are to be congratulated that our President's Secretary has not been sent to jail; but even the little consolation to be derived from this reflection is impaired by the report that "Boss" Shepherd sat in the telegraph office at Washington waiting for the verdict, and was the first man to carry tidings of the acquittal to the President. Some people yet have faith in the old saw, "A man is known by the company he keeps."

The Advisory Council of Plymouth Church adjourned after the adoption of a report which in substance confirms the action of Plymouth Church in the dropping of members, and in other matters of church discipline. It however recommends that church "to empower a commission of five"—to be created by a committee of three, out of twenty persons whose names are given—"to receive and examine all charges against the pastor which they (the commission) may regard as not already sufficiently tried." The "main question," as it was termed by Dr. Bacon, is still left open, therefore, for future examination.

The Beecher scandal has made prominent a fact of considerable importance; namely, that Christian men and women may, without reproach, be guilty of conduct which certainly violates many accepted principles of honor and decency. Mr. Bowen went to the house of Mr. Halliday, last week, in order to place before the Examining Committee the proofs of his charges against Mr. Beecher, but found assembled with the Examining Committee a company of forty or fifty persons, including Mr. Beecher and several members of the Advisory Council. After reading a document, the contents of which have not been made public, he attempted to leave the room when a Plymouth Church deacon locked the door in order to prevent his departure. This locking of the door, as has since been explained, was done as a "burlesque," or out of pure facetiousness; but Mr. Bowen, not appreciating the mirthfulness of the occasion, started for another door, through which he successfully escaped, several articles of furniture being overturned in his progress. At the subsequent Friday evening prayer-meeting of Plymouth Church, the members seem to have had a "high old time," laughing at Bowen's adventure, and sneering at his charges against their pastor. We do not pretend to know what Mr. Beecher will do with Bowen,—we know only what the self-respect of an innocent man would require; namely, if Bowen is a malignant wretch, he should be forced by judicial proceedings to retract his charges, or to pay the penalty for having made them. If he is let alone, or only excommunicated from the church, decent people may as well hereafter drop all present interest in Mr. Beecher and Plymouth Church, and leave them to wallow in the nastiness from which they refuse to cleanse themselves.

According to the latest reports from France, the Legislature will have a Republican majority in both Houses, and the larger part of this Republican majority, we are assured, is made up of Conservatives of various shades of opinion, the extreme radicals being in a decided minority. The news from Spain is contradictory, of course, but the Carlists appear to be losing ground quite rapidly, and a termination of the war may soon be looked for. The Archbishop of Toledo and other prelates have petitioned the Cortes to prohibit all but Catholic worship in Spain. In the matter of religious toleration, it does not seem possible for Spain to learn wisdom by past experience. The contagion of our recent forgeries seems to have spread as far as Italy, where a noble Marquis is reported to have forged the name of Victor Emanuel to a note for a large amount. English Parliamentary proceedings have not as yet been of general interest, and no news of importance has been received from Turkey during the past week.

Communications.

RARE AND CURIOUS LITERARY PRODUCTIONS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 4, 1876.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

There has recently fallen under my eye a couple of rare and curious literary productions, an account of which may interest some of your readers. One is a French work published in 1860, under the title Manuscrit Pictographique Américain, par l'Abbé Em. Domenech, Membre de la Société géographique de Paris, et de la Société ethnographique, etc., etc.

It purports to be a fac-simile of a hieroglyphic manuscript of the North American Indians of New France in the seventeenth century. It consists of 228 pages of picture-writing, and 119 pages of text. In his preliminary notes, the author states that he found this manuscript in "La Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal," of Paris, where it had been for nearly a century, enclosed in a box, and bearing in the catalogue the title Livre des Sauvages. It was done in black and red crayons, upon thick paper manufactured in Canada. He supposes that the Marquis de Paulmy, who formerly owned this library, received it as a present from some traveller, as he had received many Chinese and other Oriental manuscripts from missionaries. Further than this he had no knowledge of the antecedents of this Livre des Sauvages. He says it was pointed out to him by the superintendent of the library as a most curious work, and perhaps the only one of the kind in existence.

The Abbé, who was an apostolic missionary, and who had travelled much among the Indians of America, seized upon this treasure as promising to throw much light upon the religious ideas of the Red skins, and seems to have applied himself with the utmost enthusiasm to the work of deciphering the precious manuscript. The possession of great ingenuity and imagination must certainly be accorded to him, as exhibited in his interpretations of these strange characters. Through the French Minister of State, M. Domenech set before the Emperor, Napoleon III., the important fruit of his labors, who, appreciating the very valuable results of his services to literature and to ethnography, took upon himself the responsibility of defraying the expenses of publication at the cost of the State. An edition was printed, and sent forth to produce its sensation upon the world.

But, alas, what a downfall awaited the pride and the expectations of the religious and learned Abbé in his hopes of becoming not only a benefactor of his race, but also of being regarded as a second Champollion! And what a mortification to the government which had fostered his labors, and under whose auspices the remarkable work had been published! Here and there, among the hieroglyphics, were scrawled, in rude letters, forms which had the semblance of words, but to which the Abbé seems to have given little importance. Unfortunately for the expected fame, the work fell into the hands of a learned German, who soon discovered traces of German words and names in the scrawly letters, and who, by other means, verified the fact that the whole thing must have been the work of some German boy, who, for his own amusement, had devoted himself to the production of this series of grotesque figures.

M. Domenech attempted some defence; but, not succeeding, the whole of the edition of the works unsold was suppressed, and that part which had been sold was as far as possible bought up. But here and there some stray copies remained, and now and then one gets into the hands of a bookseller, and, being regarded as a great curiosity, and being also of extreme rarity, it commands, unbound, the high price of thirty or forty dollars.

The other work referred to, also unbound, is about four inches square and half an inch thick, and for similar reasons as the above sells as high as three dollars a copy. It has the title, The New Guide of the Conversation in Portuguese and English, by Pedro Carolino. As is implied, it is designed as a Phrase-Book in teaching English. The general style of the English phrases may be guessed from that of the extracts from the preface which are here given:—

"A choice of familiar dialogues, clean of gallicisms, and despoiled phrases, it was missing yet to studious portuguese and brazilian youth. . . . We sought all we may do, to correct that want. . . . The first part includes a greatest vocabulary proper names; and the second part three Dialogues adapted to the usual precisions of life. For that reason we did put, with a scrupulous exactness, a great variety own expressions to english and portuguese idioms; without to attach us selves (us make some others) almost at a literal translation; translation what only will be for to accustom the portuguese pupils, or—foreign, to speak very bad any of the mentioned idioms. We were increasing this second edition with a phraseology in the first part, and some anecdotes, idiomisms, proverbs, and to second a coin's index. . . . We expect then, who the little book (for the care what we wrote him, and for her typographical correction) that may be worth the acceptance of the studious persons, and especially of the youth, at which we dedicate him particularly."

This little book has been given by a certain physician to convalescent patients, to help on his cure by the stimulus given to their risibles.

A copy of each of these rare works is at present to be found at the Foreign Bookstore of Mr. F. W. Christern, 77 University Place, in this city.

Quite different as to authenticity and importance, is Lord Kingsborough's fac-simile collection of Mexican Antiquities, to be seen in the Astor Library. Not being able to obtain originals of these valuable manuscripts, Lord Kingsborough resolved to get copies of all he could gain access to. This work he gave in charge to M. Augustin Agillo, who, for five years, travelled through Europe, devoting himself to the task of making reproductions of such Mexican hieroglyphical, or painted records and rituals, as were known to exist in libraries and private collections. It was published in London in 1831, and the cost to Lord Kingsborough is said to have been about $400,000.

The work is in nine thick folio volumes, several of which are occupied by text endeavoring to prove that the ancient Mexicans were the descendants of Jews. There is a good deal of nicety in the more abridged hieroglyphics; and, while the drawing is altogether defective, the colors used in the paintings, and supposed to have been obtained from the simple juices of plants, are very clear and beautiful. In some instances, the interpretation of the figures is quite apparent, while in others it seems altogether arbitrary.

It was my good fortune to listen to explanations of these picture-writings by Dr. Valentini, a German gentleman who has spent thirteen years in Mexico, who is familiar with this mode of writing, as well as with the relics of antiquity to be found there, and who is about to publish a work upon that country.

A. H.

REVIVALISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

We have revivalism to-day in Pennsylvania in the form of an epidemic—a disease that is preying upon the vitals of reason and common-sense. Were it really producing a radical regeneration of the wicked, as it is pretended, I, for one, could applaud the movement; but that it is, on the contrary, doing infinitely more harm than good, by dethroning reason and making popular a sort of emasculated, sentimental religion, is plainly evident to the unprejudiced observer. The converts in this State, under the ministrations of Moody and Sankey and Hammond, are numbered by thousands, and, as Newville boasts (regretfully I say it) of having produced a part of this "stupendous whole," I have become thoroughly acquainted with the mode of operation.

Rev. Mr. Hammond conducted the initiatory services. His methods of procedure are to bring his powers to bear upon the weak side of human nature. While his actions are like those of a drunken man—a similarity that is increased by a brain affection that causes him to be continually grasping his head in a semi-ludicrous manner,—yet by dramatic manipulation of his active Christian hearers he manages to spread abroad an emotional sensation, under the pressure of which the weak and vacillating portion of his congregation are brought to submit to his dictations. His favorites are little children, whom, of course, he can influence to his desired ends with little difficulty. His leading illustration is the comparison of Jesus to a magnet, and the people to nails of various sizes, from the tack to a railroad spike. The tack typifies little children, and he shows how readily they cling to the magnet. A simple touch, too, attaches the shingle nail, which he likens to a youth. The larger nails are less and less affected, until the big spike—a tough old sinner of the most intractable kind—will not stir under the influence. His management of the little ones, having them weeping and professing beliefs beyond their understanding, should have been denounced instead of applauded. He requests his converts to sign a "covenant" to the effect that they hope they have found Jesus to be their precious Saviour, and that they will love and serve him all their lives; and some of the little ones who affixed their signatures, when asked if they were Christians, admitted with unsuspected honesty that they did not know.

Mr. Hammond has gone elsewhere to pursue his vocation, but the revival has been continued, and five hundred conversions are claimed. Among them are church-members of long standing, who, under the pressure, have stated that their past religion was a profession merely, and not a reality, and, as some of these solemnly officiated in the administration of the sacrament heretofore, their confessions will detract from rather than add to public confidence.

To the observant, the success of these meetings is no surprise. The labor and money depression, the popularity, the moral pressure, the emotional influences, and numerous social and other features, all brought to bear upon the thoughtless, can have but one result. The new profession is taken on so easily, too. You merely stand up at one stage of the meeting, signifying a desire for prayers, and at another stage of the next meeting, signifying that you have become the "new creature," and the thing is accomplished. As the necessary result of such a mode we have a large number who have much religion in their mouths, but who know nothing of its stern realities. Even the more confident of the old Christians do not expect more than one-tenth of the so-called conversions to be permanent, so that, in order to make "shining lights" of fifty persons who were not really immoral before, four hundred and fifty hypocrites are made. Is it not degrading? Notwithstanding various claims have been made in regard to the conversion of infidels, I am positively aware that not one person who has carefully studied the religious problem in all its bearings, and taken a stand outside the Christian name, has been converted.

While these revivals may aid the cause of free-thought by causing intelligent persons to consider the religious subject thoughtfully, and while they can never array intellect against liberalism, yet it will give to orthodoxy and bigotry numbers, money, and influence, against which the struggle for mental freedom must be long and bitter. For this reason, included in a desire for the elevation of humanity, we must deplore these revivals, notwithstanding we deem them interesting as forming probably the last phase in the conflict between Christianity and civilization.

H.

NEWVILLE, Pa., January, 1876.

THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION ON SUNDAYS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 13, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:—

Dear Sir,—Among the "Glimpses" in last issue of your paper, you repeat a suggestion for those favorable to having the Centennial Exhibition opened Sundays to write the Director General, Mr. A. T. Goshorn, about the matter.

Some time since I was impelled to do so, feeling it right to protest against the Exhibition being governed by Evangelical rules, even though my protest might not be noticed. During the early part of January I addressed a few lines to Mr. John Welsh, Chairman Centennial Commission, having been informed that he was the proper person to address, and briefly and respectfully made my protest. I do not repeat here the words I wrote him, as they were substantially repeated afterward in writing to Mr. Goshorn.

The same day Mr. Welsh received my letter, he replied, informing me that Mr. Goshorn was the one in authority to whom such questions should be submitted. A short note which I then sent to Mr. Welsh was replied to by him, giving me Mr. Goshorn's address, and other general information about the progress of the Exhibition.

On January 20 I sent the following:—

"A. T. GOSHORN, Esq., Director General U. S. Centennial Commission, 903 Walnut Street, Philadelphia:

"Dear Sir,—I presume all citizens are supposed to be interested in the success of your exhibition, and are at liberty to criticise your plans, if they criticise in a proper manner.

"Deeming it my duty to take issue with you on one point, I addressed a few words to John Welsh, Esq., being informed he was the gentleman to whom I should write. I learn from him of my mistake, and also your address. And now allow me to very earnestly and respectfully protest against the reported decision of your honorable body in regard to closing the Centennial Exhibition on Sundays.

"There are many like myself, clerks, who may find it nearly or quite impossible to attend the exhibition if it is closed on Sundays. Yet were this the only reason, I for one would waive it. The mistake in the matter, as it is presented to my mind, is in presuming that this is a 'Christian' nation, and that it is correct on your part to oblige those not believers in the 'Christian' religion to defer to those who are, and observe one day as holy instead of all days. And the fact is that the Exhibition, if opened Sundays, would not compel any Christians to unwillingly attend, while its being closed Sundays would compel all not Christians to conform to Christian customs. Yet pardon me if I seem to invite any discussion. I am but a simple citizen, yet would claim equal right with others to criticise and equal interest in the true success of the national Centennial. Wishing your Commission and the Exhibition success, and with respect for you as Director General and personally, I am,

Yours truly, "A."

Again, on February 12, I wrote as follows:—

"A. T. GOSHORN, Esq., Director General, etc.:

"Dear Sir,—May I add a word to my protest against the policy of closing the Centennial Exhibition on Sundays, which protest I expressed to you in letter dated January 20, and to which I have as yet received no reply?

"The fact was therein stated that this is not a 'Christian' country, and the conclusion was drawn from that fact, that the Centennial Exhibition should not be conducted to conform to 'Christian' customs in this country where the citizens are of various beliefs."

"And, now that the Congress of the United States will no doubt donate the sum of $1,500,000 to aid in completing your national work, would it not be proper to consider a moment whether one portion of the people should control the policy of your Exhibition, while the money to be voted for your Commission will be by taxes paid by all, whether Christians, Jews, Infidels, Freethinkers, or those of other beliefs?"

"I am yours very respectfully,"

"A."

As yet I have had no reply to either of above letters; but as I enclosed in each a stamped envelope addressed to myself, I presume I shall have a reply. If I am so favored will inform you.

Meantime I would urge on all who believe in the justice of our Centennial being national, not "Christian," the propriety of expressing to the Director General their views about the matter, briefly and respectfully. Whether our earnest efforts in this direction avail much, the future will decide. We should do our duty when it is clear to us, even if our efforts are not sure to meet with success.

I was very glad to read the article "Reassurance," by O. B. F., in INDEX, February 10.

With firm assurance of the final success of our good cause, believe me,

Yours truly,

"A."

THE RADICAL CLUB AND THE CENTENNIAL.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 6, 1876.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

The enclosed document, written by Mr. A. B. Bradford, was adopted by our club. A copy was sent to the Christian Statesman to publish. The original is sent to you at the request of the author.

Respectfully,

E. M. DAVIS,
President Radical Club.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "CHRISTIAN STATESMAN":—

In your paper of the 22d of January, you publish in part the communication which, in the name of the Philadelphia Radical Club, I sent recently to the New York Tribune, touching the question, whether the International Exhibition, next summer, should be opened to the public on all days alike. In this city, and throughout the country, "one man esteemeth one day above another; another man esteemeth every day alike." I agree with the Apostle Paul, whose words I quote, that every man should "be fully persuaded in his own mind." As you have the reputation among the Radicals of being a fair and candid opponent, I hope you will give place in your columns to what I now write.

When my Tribune article was an argument, bearing in all its parts on the question whether it was right to close the doors of the Exhibition on the first day of the week, was it altogether courteous in you not to lay it as a whole before your readers? Your paper is read chiefly by those who agree with you in opinion. Do not the interests of truth require that, on so important a subject as the one now under discussion, you should let your readers see what can be said on both sides of the question?

While you admit, and seem to feel the force of, the fact that in the treaty with Tripoli the government of the United States did declare to the world through its constituted authorities that it "was in no sense founded on the Christian religion"; and while you admit that the treaty is a part of the supreme law of the land, you nevertheless wish, seemingly, to avoid the legitimate conclusion resulting from these premises, by saying that the statement in the treaty is not true. But, my dear sir, if, as you allege, the government of the United States is "a moral person," capable of speaking the truth, is it respectful in you to say, either that it was so ignorant that it did not understand its own history, purpose, or function; or that it falsified, when it declared that it was in no sense founded on the Christian religion? I fear you have placed yourself within the sweep of the Apostle Peter's censure, when he says of some of his reckless contemporaries, "Presumptuous are they, self-willed; they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities."

As I give you credit for a desire to have the question at issue fairly and fully discussed, I hope you will lay the whole of my Tribune article before your readers, since in all its parts it bears upon the question now becoming so interesting to the public.

Respectfully yours,

E. M. DAVIS,
President of the Radical Club.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 2, 1876.

REFLECTIONS ON FREETHOUGHT.

It is a serious thing to commune with oneself. Call that being which thinks and feels what you please, the mere function of organized matter or the immortal spirit of man, you cannot pause in the fleeting course of life and enter the secret chambers of thought without being awed by the deep, solemn mysteries that surround you. How vainly do we flaunt our little acquisitions of knowledge before each other. How arrogantly do we boast of our intellectual attainments, when we have successfully predicted an eclipse, or foretold the time and locality of a cyclone! But how our vanity subsides when we turn to ourselves and ask, "Whence?" and "Whither?" Have the agonizing inquiries of ages answered this startling question satisfactorily for the race?

True, now and then in the history of mankind, a spiritual Archimedes has fancied he has discovered the true solution of the golden problem, and cried to the world, "Eureka!" but the masses have never beheld such rapturous visions. Around all except a favored few the dark unknown is so near and dense that life, with all its light, is little more than a sombre prison, whose walls of impenetrable mysteries mock the ceaseless struggles of the captive spirit.

In my Orthodox associations I have heard many religious "experiences" told by the "faithful followers of Jesus"; and I have observed that doubt, despondency, and fear form a large per cent. of the "Christian warfare." I should like very much to attend an "experience meeting" of the readers of THE INDEX, and hear the old disciples of freethought till their real struggles with the world without, and there own reason and conscience within. What sublime heroism there must be in those lives that have determined to know nothing except the truth as it is in Nature, and in unswerving fidelity to this resolve have through long years of eager study bared their minds and hearts to the realities of thought and feeling! But how much of their investigations have been in the shadowy land of speculation, where still the night of the unknown is dark, and the promise of dawn but fitful and delusive!

Are not these the "times that try men's souls"? There is much to encourage and cheer in this age of irrepressible inquiry. We feel strong and hopeful at times, and rejoice that our lot was cast in an age of intellectual and moral revolution; but we also feel the heavy press of this deep, elemental agitation, and need the generous sympathy of noble hearts no less than the bold guidance of daring minds.

H. CLAY NEVILLE.

KENTON, Mo., Jan. 1, 1876.

THE TWENTY-EIGHTH CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY OF BOSTON.

DEAR EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your word for the "Memorial Hall" is most fitting and wise. Boston ought, indeed, to be proud of the institution that preserves to us the name of the greatest man that ever lived in her city. Theodore Parker was indeed one of the saviours of the race,—equally great with the sixteen saviours who had the honor of crucifixion, and his spirit still rests upon Boston. Although the cypress tree near the column of Frederick William marks the spot where his sacred dust lies buried in the lovely garden in Florence, I can fancy that his noble spirit, like the mother in the German legend, comes at the hour of service of the Twenty-eighth, and breathes a blessing upon the few who carry on the divine work he began. Let them remember his last words some short time before his departure:—

"Above all things else I have sought to teach the true idea of man, of God, of religion, with its truths, its duties, and its joys. I never fought for myself, nor against a private foe; but have gone into the battle of the nineteenth century, and followed the flag of humanity."

"Now I am ready to die, though conscious that I leave half my work undone, and much grain lies in my fields waiting only for him that gathereth sheaves."

I am deprived of the pleasure which many of your city readers enjoy—of seeing the "light-house," and walking in the bright, radiant, and cheerful beams, else every Sunday would witness to my high appreciation of the noble work of Theodore Parker, and willingness to help it forward, a living blessing to humanity.

SAUGUS, Mass.

THE HIGHEST PERFECTION.

SALEM, Ohio, Feb. 16, 1876.

DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

I am afraid you must be wearied with this controversy that your definition has drawn about your ears; but pray allow me to say a few words more in reply to your remarks on my letter of Jan. 20, and then forever hold my peace.

I did not at all mean to imply (as perhaps, strictly construed, my sentence can be made to mean) that, in seeking "deliverance from our finiteness," we also sought to lose our identity; but that in intercourse with the infinite we strive to lose sight of our finite and changing nature, and to rest in the immutable and absolute perfection of the great first cause. So, also, in the contemplation of Nature, the most ennobling and delightful effect is, that it leads us to forget our material, superficial existence, and feel ourselves a part of the great whole, from the highest to the lowest. Yet these experiences, I think, only intensify our consciousness of our innermost, highest self, which is part of the divine essence, and our most glorious possession.

I know these aspirations tend to the perfection of man, and consequently our views agree in the result; but, as I said before, I do not think the desire for perfection to be the impelling cause, but the unconscious result.

Truly yours,

M. E. S.

THERE is a colored man living in Lake City, Minn., who goes by the appellation of "Rawberry." A few evenings since, in the Methodist revival-meeting here, he arose and said: "Brethren and sisters, if a man loses his farm, he can get another one; if he loses his wife, he can get another one; if he loses his baby, he can get another one; but if he loses his soul, then Johnny is a goner—he can't get another one!"

Sanctuary of Superstition.

WHAT MEN ALL ARE WITHOUT CHRIST.—Christ is the way: men without him are Cains, wanderers, vagabonds. He is the truth: men without him are liars, like the devil of old. He is the life: men without him are dead in trespasses and sin. He is the light: men without him are in darkness, and go they know not whither. He is the vine: men that are not in him are withered branches, prepared for the fire. He is the rock: men not built on him are carried away with a flood. He is the Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, the author and the ender, the founder and the finisher of our salvation. He that hath not him hath neither beginning of good, nor shall have end of misery.—John Owen, before the English House of Commons.

HELL.—The Methodist preachers of New York and vicinity held their regular weekly meeting in the Mission Rooms of the Methodist Book Concern, Broadway and Eleventh Street.

The following questions were proposed for discussion at the next regular meeting: Shall the wicked be finally destroyed? Will the wicked in hell finally become extinct? Are the future punishments of the wicked permanent? Are the conscious punishments of the wicked endless, or are the punishments of the wicked in hell parallel to the eternal bliss of the righteous in heaven?

An elderly gentleman said that there was a disposition to ignore this subject of hell. The foundation of the Church stands upon this question. If there is danger, let the people see it. Why shut out the light? During the past week I have been approached by the members of my congregation, saying, "I see that the Methodists are dropping their eternal damnation." If the punishment of the wicked is not endless, then the joy of the righteous is not. One doctrine stands with the other. If the views promulgated by Dr. True be allowed to go unanswered it will make me desperate. My very soul is absorbed. It's an awful thing with me.—N. Y. Tribune.

A MICHIGAN MIRACLE.—A letter is published in Detroit, Mich., from Rev. S. E. Warren, pastor of one of the Methodist churches of the city, which makes these remarkable statements: "Mrs. Williams, of this city, a daughter of J. C. H. Woodhull, thirty years old and a widow about eleven years, for fifteen years has been out of health, and for nine years under a doctor's care. For the last ten months she has not been able to walk, and for six weeks could not sit up in bed. So rapidly was she sinking that her friends deemed her speedy demise certain. For six days before the event we record she suffered acute pain, which her emaciated body seemed scarcely able to bear. On Monday, the 13th of December, she felt impressed to pray for her immediate recovery, and she asked of God the gift of health. She realized at once that her bodily ailments, which were many, were giving way, and in a few moments she was able to sit up and read her Bible. Her whole system seemed to undergo a change, and her appetite immediately returned. The next morning she dressed herself. On the Thursday evening following she was at a prayer-meeting, and on Sabbath was at church three times, and ever since then has seemed to be entirely well. She walks, rides about the city, and is able to attend to her household duties. From long illness, through emaciation, she had become very weak, but she has been gaining in strength every day. Her physician, Dr. Webber, a member of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, says that her recovery cannot be attributed to human skill, but to prayer."

A TALE OF CONVERSION.—Some time ago a man at a prayer-meeting said: "A year ago I came here out of mere curiosity. I had no belief in the existence of a God. I was a complete infidel; and I had become so by devoting myself to investigations in philosophy, falsely so called. I was fully content with my situation. I thought I had sufficient reason to deny the being of a God. But in this meeting I felt the influence of a supernatural power, and I could not help confessing it divine. I came again and again, a silent spectator of all that passed. But when one day I saw here a very large number of business men, I said to myself, 'Certainly it is not human power that leads these men to leave their business to come here and pray. This meeting would long ago have come to an end, if it had originated merely in human consideration.' Thus I was forced to acknowledge that there is a Spirit above these human spirits, moving them to this union of action; and so my reason was thoroughly convinced of the being of a God. Soon I went further, and acknowledged that if there is a God, he must have a plan of government, and that he must be able to reveal himself to man in order to communicate his will to him. And this led me to accept the Bible at once with all its claims. Soon after this I felt that my mental peace was gone. I could find no rest. I was forced to confess that, if the Bible was true, I was a great sinner. I began to feel the need of a Savior, and with all my heart I received Jesus Christ as the Savior adapted to my need. A year ago I was here, an infidel, denying the existence of a God. To-day I am here to confess my faith in Christ as my Lord and my God. All things are become new to me; my wishes are new; my plans are new; my hopes are new."

The consistency, the faithfulness, the manifest sincerity of these Christians spoke silently, but mightily. This was the still, small voice, which the heart of the infidel could not resist.—Watchman and Reflector.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
" 13 " 25 "	8 "
" 26 " 51 "	6 "
" 52 " " "	5 "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 28, 1873.
TO THE INDEX ASSOC., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Ophelia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT.

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from

all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	1.50
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	6.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	5.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	6.00
BRACKETT (ANNA O.). The Education of American Girls.....	1.50
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 21 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.30
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	3.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Parlor.....	1.00
Social Games. A Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects, Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.50
CONWAY (MONROE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	3.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.00

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.50
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Peonies With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	6.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	6.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Beliefs of the Unbelievers.....	.20
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 5 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCOIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Orc of Christendom.....	7.50
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Essays from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Old Port Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	3.00
Oldport Days.....	3.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	2.00
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Mountains of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Sevan.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skelligs.....	1.75
Stories for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Moses the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.50
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Doctrine and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Essays, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	6.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS O.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	2.00
LEWES (G. H.) The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. E.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	2.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	5.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	5.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.50
Memorial Volume of his Life and Works.....	2.50
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN) Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau. 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER.) Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	2.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	3.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theological, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE.) A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 4 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping, with the Defence.....	1.50
The Two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS.) The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 34 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Society, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHILLER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 20 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic.....	2.50
Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	2.50
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The Classic-Boom Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Deeds Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Wild and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods.....	2.50
Cape Cod.....	2.50
Letters.....	2.50
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.50
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.50
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Excursions in the Alps.....	2.50
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.50
On Sound.....	2.50
Radiant Heat.....	2.50
Forms of Water.....	2.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.50
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	2.50
Vols. II, IV, and VI., each.....	2.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Banterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.50
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	3.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.50
Child Life.....	3.50

ADDRESSES:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS.
PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom. Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.

Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.

Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address
B. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

B O O K

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and Its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading.... The story is told in a very graphic style.... Mr. Holyoake... is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of TWO DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. S. LYON'S HYGEIAN HOME is at SPRINGFIELD, MO. Box 247. Send for Circular.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

SUNNY SIDE

A New Singing Book, prepared expressly for Sabbath Schools of Liberal Churches.

By C. W. WENDTE and H. S. PERKINS.

The words throughout the book have been prepared and selected with great care. Weak sentimentalism as well as crude doctrinal statements have been rigorously excluded from this collection, and it is believed that the literary contents show a higher grade of writers than have ever before appeared in a book of this character. The music, original and selected, is bright, fresh, vigorous, and altogether of a much better class than is usually found in Sunday-school books.

Price in Boards, 35 cents, or $30 per 100.

WM. A. FOND & CO., 547 Broadway, New York.

SUNNY SIDE.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

Horticultural Hall Lectures,

ON SUNDAY AFTERNOONS,

AT 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets to Course, One Dollar.

- Jan. 2. O. B. FROTHINGHAM.
"The Soul of Transcendentalism."
- Jan. 9. M. D. CONWAY.
"The Natural History of the Devil."
- Jan. 16. J. W. CHADWICK.
"Thomas Paine."
- Jan. 23. D. A. WASSON.
"Radical Formalism."
- Jan. 30. T. W. HIGGINSON.
"The Meeting of Extremes."
- Feb. 6. B. F. UNDERWOOD.
"Modern Scientific Materialism: its Meaning and Tendency."
- Feb. 13. BISHOP MOQUAID.
"The Public School Question as viewed by the Catholic American Citizen."
- Feb. 20. F. E. ARBOT.
"The Public School Question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."
- Feb. 27. Prof. FELIX ADLER.
"The Old Testament in the Light of Modern Criticism."
- Mar. 5. Mrs. E. D. CHENEY.
"The Religious Life of Michael Angelo."

PINE GROVE

MINERAL

SPRING WATER.

S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer of Massachusetts, gave a certificate of analysis of this Mineral Water, which contains more than twice as much iron as any other, at Boston, May 28, 1875. Dr. Hayes says: "This water should be classed as an Alkaline Chalybeate, and it is remarkable as containing an organic Salt of Iron (the Creatine), with Sulphate of Iron and Silicate of Soda, and the other constituents of recognized medicinal value. I think that some of this water might be charged with carbonic acid gas to good advantage."

Its effects are alternative—antacid—diuretic—tonic. Alkaline Chalybeate waters have been recommended for hundreds of years by experienced physicians, and it is well known that better and more permanent results have been accomplished, in many cases, than by alkaline and iron pharmaceutical preparations.

Send for Circulars to the Proprietor,

CARL H. HORSCH, M.D.,
Dover, New Hampshire.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

- THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade.....$3.00
THE SAVEST CREEK. By O. B. Frothingham.....1.50
THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd......75
NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50
SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph K. Peck......75
THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... 35

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor. Irenaeus the author of the Fourth Gospel. The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. 12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-paid.....2.00

The author here discusses a number of the inconsistencies of traditional and authentic Church history, and proposes solutions after the manner of the most modern German Rationalists, though with original and often startling theories of his own.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER. By Charles Sothoran. Including Portrait of Shelley and View of his Tomb. 60 pp. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

TRACTS.

- No. I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton.
- No. II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.
- No. III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. New and enlarged edition, with index and text of important citations.
- No. IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published. (Soon ready.)
- Of No. I., single copy, mailed, 5 cents; ten for 30 cents; one hundred for $1.50.
Of Nos. II., III., IV., single copy, mailed, 10 cents; ten for 60 cents; one hundred for $3.00.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, a volume made up chiefly of essays and addresses given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. "One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

- I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.
- II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.
- III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.
- IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.
- V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.
- VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.
- VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.
- VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.
- IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.
- X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.
- XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.
- XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Arbot, J. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. W. Foster, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. B. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucetta Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50. Send to Office of THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 9, 1876.

WHOLE No. 324.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF ———.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in ———, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification for any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

ion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

WILL SOMEBODY explain to the unsophisticated what it is to be "interned"?

ITALY has her Winslow in the Marquis Montecassino, who forged the King's name for $40,000.

PROFESSOR TYNDALL was married on February 29 to Miss Louisa, daughter of Lord Claude Hamilton.

CARDINAL McCLOSKEY has purchased the Le Grand Lockwood mansion, at South Norwalk, Connecticut, for a new Catholic college.

"WE DO NOT pretend to say," remarks the New York Tribune, "whereabouts in the mass of contradictory testimony the truth may lie." We venture to suggest that the truth never lies anywhere.

SAYS THE Civiltà Cattolica: "The Church is God himself, who is master and ruler of mankind through a visible organism, and of this the head and mouth is the Roman Pontiff." That is Ultramontanism in a nut-shell.

SIR HENRY MAINE says in his Ancient Law: "No society which preserves any tincture of Christian institutions is likely to restore to married women the personal liberty conferred on them by the middle Roman law."

MR. SMALLEY writes to the Tribune that a London "yellow fog" has "about the color and consistence of soup made from dried peas." All that the poor want in the world's metropolis, to avert starvation, would seem to be a plenty of spoons.

THE PEOPLE at large, not the churches only, must now utter their voices on the school question. That is what the Liberal League is meant for—to give utterance to the common sense of enlightened patriotism, which declares that purely secular schools alone, not Catholic and not Protestant schools, can be justly sustained by general taxation.

THE INDEX is not specially a political paper, though it has no religion of which honesty, political just as much as commercial, social, or intellectual, is not the core. In the interest of honesty alone, it is high time for the independent voters to speak loud enough to be heard in this day of national shame, mortification, and disgrace; and, as merely one of these uncounted voters, we nominate Secretary Bristow for President of the United States.

IN THE UNITED KINGDOM, according to a quotation from the New York Herald in the Boston Advertiser of March 4, the population, within a quarter of a century, has increased about twenty per cent.; and, taking this increase into account, primary education has become about six times as general. Yet, in the same period, pauperism has diminished more than twenty-five per cent., while serious crime has diminished by nearly seventy per cent. This is a most pertinent reply to Bishop McQuaid's intimation that non-Catholic education does not tend to diminish crime.

LIKE A THUNDERBOLT from a blue sky fell the announcement of Secretary Belknap's bribery, resignation, and impeachment, on the public mind. Notwithstanding an element of piteous pathos in some of the facts, pity itself was paralyzed in the great storm of indignation at such base betrayal of a nation's honor, such sordid and long-continued treachery to a nation's sacred trust. Let the House of Representatives be applauded to the echo that for once it showed a becoming sense of the outraged dignity of the United States—that it stood quibbling about no legal technicalities touching the "constitutionality" of impeaching a public officer after his resignation, but impeached him within an hour. It was the blow that is the only possible answer to an insult for which there can be neither apology nor redress. No: to have dealt it would have been absolutely unpardonable; America would have stained her scutcheon forever, if she had held her hand at such an intolerable moment.

IT WAS at first reported that, only partially confessing his shame to the President, General Belknap exclaimed, "I wish I had killed myself!" and that the President replied, "I wish you had." Such a reply, if made, would have uttered the truest friendliness; for what friend of the General would not have felt relief, if he had shot himself on the spot? Inability to survive his honor was the one virtue that remained possible to the disgraced soldier. That he still lives is the saddest proof of the depth to which he has fallen, and, falling, has dragged his country. When the Tribune says that suicide would have been "a cowardly act," it shows how the namby-pambyism of Christianity has rotted away the very ideal of courage and honor in the Orthodox mind. Suicide would have been confession that, though he had grown callous to the protesting conscience in his own breast, he could still reverence the outraged conscience in the eyes of his fellow-men. There is nothing that this country so profoundly needs as a little unadulterated paganism. If the Japanese law of hara-kiri could be introduced here, and every official proved corrupt were compelled by public opinion to rid the nation of his noisome presence in the shortest possible way, the moral tone of the United States would be raised infinitely higher than the Christian gospel has left it. Poor Belknap! We cannot help pitying him, after all; for he had not pluck enough or honesty enough to die. He can endure to live, and behold his country plunged by his own act into the abyss of a world's awfully merited scorn.

AMHERST COLLEGE, the Orthodox home of Prof. Julius H. Seelye (who is both a member of Congress and a staunch champion of the Christian Amendment to the United States Constitution), has a new sensation in a "Radical Club" recently organized among the students. This has fifteen members, all of the Junior Class, who stand among the highest in point of scholarship: three of them were editors of the Ohio, and four are editors of the Student. The Club meets on alternate Sunday evenings, to converse on some question introduced by appointment; such, for instance, as "The Bible in Literature," "The Bible in the Public Schools," "The Culture, Mental and Spiritual, of Radicalism," "The Inspiration of the Bible," etc. That these young men are representative of the best ability and highest moral earnestness to be found in the college, seems to be conceded. The Springfield Union of February 24 says: "We think our correspondent greatly exaggerates the importance and significance of the Club. College boys must have some outlet for the sap that is in them, and it might as well take one course as another. That it should in this case take the line of free thought is no more surprising than that the Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy at the college should abandon his chair for a seat in Congress." We doubt if any one of these independent young men is green enough to make so very "sappy" a remark as this. Free thought is neither a disease nor a symptom of juvenility, but the healthiest sign of sympathy with the spirit of the age. We expect to hear more of these active young minds in the future. Twenty years hence it is more than probable that they will have established a valid claim to be regarded as the flower of their Class.

"The Public School Question as Viewed by the Liberal American Citizen."

EIGHTH LECTURE BEFORE THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, IN HORTICULTURAL HALL, BOSTON, FEB. 20, 1876.

BY FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

It is my duty this afternoon to speak to you upon the "public school question as viewed by the Liberal American Citizen," terms which I understand to indicate merely the point of view occupied by those who look at this question in the light of well-recognized American principles, and with reference to the interests of the whole people and their self-chosen government, as distinguished from the point of view occupied by those who look at it in the light of other than American principles, and with reference to the interests of a party, a sect, or a church. There is a sectional, and there is also a national, aspect of every great public issue; there is a partisan, ecclesiastical, and sectarian view of the school question, and also a universal, secular, and strictly non-sectarian view of it. It is the latter view alone that I hold, and I shall try to represent faithfully this afternoon all who hold it. That they are only a portion, though a very large portion, of the entire population of the country, I of course admit; but that they look at this question in the light of their own interests as a party, and not in that of the equal interests of each and every inhabitant of the land, I emphatically deny. In other words, I maintain, contrary to the plausible and ingenious misrepresentation sometimes put forward, that the secular party to this school question is not a "sect," and cannot be justly so considered from the mere fact of its not embracing the whole population. If that fact alone were decisive, then unsectarianism is an impossibility so long as a difference of opinion exists among men. But what really makes a party partisan or sectarian is the selfish endeavor to sacrifice the interests of the whole people to their own interests as a mere part of the people; while, if any party aims honestly at securing the interests of the whole people by rendering equal and exact justice to every individual, it is a strictly non-partisan and non-sectarian party. For instance, the Republican party, whatever its subsequent sins, was an organized national and non-partisan party during the war of the rebellion, because it aimed at the true interests of the whole nation, including the very South which was in rebellion; and to-day the great body of honest men who are opposed to the army of corruptionists in politics is an unorganized national and non-partisan party, because it aims at establishing politics on the basis of common honesty, which is really the equal interest of all. Precisely in the same manner I maintain that the secular party on the school question is a strictly non-sectarian party, and not a sect at all, because it aims solely to settle this question on the basis of that equal justice which is the common and supreme interest of all mankind. What I have to say on the school question, therefore, will be said in the interest of no part of the people, but of the whole people; for, unlike some others, I belong to no party or sect which has interests separate from, or hostile to, the interests of the whole people.

But how comes there to be any school question at all? The public school system was established, and has been sustained, by the people itself, solely for the purpose of supplying a universal want: namely, the education of the people's children. Nothing human is perfect, and the school system is not perfect; but it was honestly founded for the good of the whole people, not of a party or sect, and can be improved. Why is there to-day a "school question" to be settled?

THE CATHOLIC PROTEST.

Since the year 1840, when the Roman Catholic Church, under the lead of Archbishop Hughes, began its attack on the public school system, there has been a persistent and determined protest against this system on the ground that it is unjust and oppressive to the Catholic conscience. Whatever the grounds of this complaint, its earnestness and sincerity are unquestionable in view of the fact that the Catholics of the country have voluntarily taxed themselves sufficiently to establish and sustain a great system of Catholic Parochial Schools for the education of their children, under the sole control of the Catholic priesthood, and that now about four hundred thousand children are receiving instruction in them, to the total neglect and disuse of the public schools. A protest manifestly so sincere, urged in the sacred name of conscience, deserves to receive the most respectful and dispassionate consideration of the majority. If the protest is a reasonable one, and if the public school system really infringes the undeniable rights even of a single citizen, reform and redress are the only right course to be adopted; and if not, the fact of even an unreasonable protest on the part of so large and so rapidly increasing a portion of the people is cause for grave disquietude in the minds of all intelligent patriots. The school question thus raised is complicated still further by the fact that the great body of non-Catholics who heartily support the public school system are themselves divided as to the relation it ought to bear to religion—one part holding that the schools should have a distinctively Protestant Christian character, the other part holding that they should be wholly colorless or neutral with respect to religious beliefs. The former maintain an intermediate position between the positions of the Catholic and the secular or liberal parties, and are in fact attempting to reconcile irreconcilable principles. But their consistency or inconsistency does not immediately affect the main question of the support or the abolition of the State school system. Protestants and liberals are nearly unanimous in supporting it, and differ only on the question whether the schools supported by the State shall be wholly or only partially secular. But the protest of the Catholic Church strikes at the very foundation of State schools; it denies the right of the State to educate at all, and claims the whole field of education as part of the domain of the Church itself. Let us, then, concentrate our attention for the present on the Catholic protest, and consider without passion and without prejudice, how far this protest is grounded in justice and in truth.

MINOR OBJECTIONS.

On the minor objections urged by the Catholic Church against the public school system, I shall touch very lightly, reserving my chief attention for the one great and central principle of its protest.

It is charged, for instance, that the public school system, as compared with the Catholic parochial school system, is unduly expensive, and the merit of superior economy is pleaded for the latter. This may be true to some extent, and is easily explained when the two kinds of education imparted are compared as to their intrinsic value. Economy is not always secured by buying cheap articles; and the cheapness of Catholic education is no argument in its favor, when its character is considered in the light of certain Catholic admissions which might easily be quoted. But that the universal adoption of the voluntary denominational system, supplanting the public schools with church schools established by each sect in its own sectarian interest, could possibly reduce the total cost of education on the whole, is incredible. The cost of so many sets of schools would greatly exceed the cost of our present school system, if the same number of children should be educated with the same degree of thoroughness as now.

Again, the gradual expansion of the common school system, by the establishment of State high schools, normal schools, and universities, is dwelt upon as a great evil, which will ultimately involve the destruction of denominational institutions of the corresponding grade. Perhaps no higher encomium, in the eyes of every enlightened friend of education who knows the worthlessness of most denominational colleges, could be passed upon our present system. Whoever is competent to compare Cornell University and Michigan University with sectarian colleges that could easily be named will see that this objection is of the nature of a boomerang, and returns to damage the unskilful launcher of it. It would be foreign to my present subject to discuss the equity of sustaining high schools, normal schools, and universities, as State institutions, since we are now concerned only with the elementary public schools as such; but I would enter a general denial of the assumption that the lower grades of State schools are inequitable because of the supposed inherent tendency of the system to expand into higher institutions of learning. Certainly a very strong argument can be made, on grounds of a thoroughly democratic character, in defence of that tendency, if it exists.

Again, the argument that the secular education given in the common schools not only does not tend to diminish crime, as is claimed by their friends, but on the contrary does tend directly to foster immorality both in teachers and pupils, was urged on this platform last Sunday by Bishop McQuaid. But statistics of unquestionable accuracy are against him on the former point, as any one may learn from the "Report of the Committee on Education of the New York City Council of Political Reform on Compulsory Education," published in 1873; while on the latter point it is sufficient to say that moral abuses tend to creep into every great institution, and that infinitely worse stories are told, on authority at least as good, of the immorality practised in Roman Catholic convents, nunneries, monasteries, and so forth, than have ever been told of American public schools. This is a very dangerous argument for Roman Catholics to use; it will hurt their own Church a great deal more than it can possibly hurt the public school system; but it is one which I have little inclination to go into, and one which will certainly draw upon the Catholic Church a host of assailants, if the Church is incautious enough to give them an opportunity. The wholesale charges brought by Catholic writers against the public schools with respect to their so-called immoral tendencies will not always be suffered to go unchallenged. Whatever truth there is in them should be made manifest; whoever is guilty should be exposed and punished; but wholesale insinuations against the teachers and pupils of the public schools will call out at last a species of reply not very agreeable to those who have indulged in this mode of warfare. No argument against the justice of taxing the whole community for the support of public schools can be drawn from any such local and incidental abuses as were referred to last Sunday; whether actual or invented, they are neither part nor product of the public school system as such; and I pass them by, not simply because they are irrelevant to the argument, but also because, if the debate is diverted to a discussion of the relative moral influence on society of the public school system and of the Roman Catholic Church, the latter will have all it can do to defend its own principle of ecclesiastical celibacy and the historical record of its effect on public morality.

THE CATHOLIC CONSCIENCE.

It is not these minor and subsidiary objections to the system of State schools—their alleged expensiveness, their tendency to supplement themselves with public high schools and colleges, or the insinuation of their necessarily immoral influence (which, if the insinuation could be sustained by proof, would be anything but a minor objection)—that constitute the real strength of the Catholic protest against the public school system. Its strength lies in the claim that the Catholic conscience is violated and oppressed by this system. This is a claim which demands the most patient, serious, and candid attention of every just man. No matter whether the claim of an aggrieved conscience is made by a great party or by an obscure and unsupported individual, it is a claim which commands instant and reverential heed; and no institution can be solidly built or stable which rests on disregard of one man's outraged conscience. Unless the foundations of the school system are laid on the rock of absolute equity and impartial justice, it is built upon the sand, and must fall; and the examination of the soundness of its foundations cannot be postponed, if only a solitary voice is raised in solemn protest against it.

Nevertheless, it does not follow that every protest made in the name of conscience must be obeyed or yielded to, even if made in most absolute and unquestioned sincerity. Conscience itself is under law; it is bound to be reasonable. So far as the individual is concerned, his private conscience, whether in fact reasonable or not, must be obeyed; for it is to him the expression and measure of his moral reason, beyond which or above which he cannot go. But so far as his claims on other men are concerned, his individual conscience is not, and cannot be, the ultimate law of their conduct. They too have consciences, as sacred to them as his to him; and the one common law of reason is binding on all alike. Hence the Catholic's claim of an injured and wronged conscience is not of itself a sufficient warrant for the immediate abandonment of the school system; he must first prove it to be a just and reasonable claim. Uninstructed and perverted consciences are altogether too common in this world—foolish and wrong things are too often demanded or done in conscience' name—to make it either wise or right to give up a great public institution of proved beneficence, or to surrender the necessary conditions of its existence, the very first moment that it is challenged. Despite his infallible standard of right and wrong, the Pope's ex cathedra deliverances, the Roman Catholic in this free country must waive his Divine authorities of Pope and Church, and consent to plead his case before the bar of the universal reason of mankind. This Bishop McQuaid did last Sunday; from this platform he addressed his plea to the public intelligence of the country, just as if no Pope had ever sat on the throne of the Vatican; and he never once quoted the authority of his infallible Sovereign as the supreme confirmation of his own words. The Catholic Church itself, Pope and all, must do the same; it protests against the school system, and addresses the protest to the general intelligence of the country; and by the verdict of this intelligence the protest must stand or fall. Therefore I say that the Catholic claim of an outraged conscience, with the tacit but evidently implied sanction of Bishop McQuaid and every other Catholic who consents to reason his case before the public, must be judged by the laws of reason; and, if it is adjudged to be unreasonable, such Catholics cannot without tergiversation repudiate the legitimacy of the verdict they have invoked and thereby sanctioned in advance.

What, then, is the essence and the rational ground of the claim that the Catholic conscience is wronged and trampled on by the maintenance of the public school system?

WHAT THE CATHOLIC CONSCIENCE CLAIMS.

1. The Catholic conscience demands, in the apt phrase of Cardinal McCloskey, "Catholic education for Catholic children." But by whom is this demand refused? Surely not by the State, which imposes on no child any particular form of religious education. I admit that the practice of Bible-reading in the public schools is a wrong and infringement upon the rights of Catholics, Jews, and all non-Protestant-Christian children; but that this practice prevents Catholics from giving Catholic education to their children, it would be preposterous to pretend. They are doing it at this very time. Certainly the demand of "Catholic education for Catholic children" is granted in advance, unless it means that the State should furnish such education. That is a very different matter. Whoever wants sectarian education is perfectly free to get it; but it must be at his own cost. The State ought to furnish education, but not sectarianism; that is his own affair altogether. The right and wrong of this matter are evident: the State should not and does not prevent "Catholic education for Catholic children"; but equally it should not and does not furnish it.

2. The Catholic conscience demands freedom of exercise, says Bishop McQuaid; and he proceeds to declare: "The majority of the people rule, by the power of numbers, that a large minority shall not be free to educate their children according to their conscience." I can only pass over this assertion in mute astonishment. The simple fact is that Catholics are educating their children according to their consciences, either at the public or at the parochial schools, as they freely elect.

3. The Catholic conscience demands "equal rights." Very well: that it ought to have. The equal rights of the Catholics, like those of the liberals, are infringed by Protestant worship in the public schools. Equal rights will be secured when the Catholics have as much right to have their religion taught in the schools as the Protestants, Jews, or radicals—that is, no right at all. The trouble with the Catholics is that this equality of rights does not satisfy them; they feel aggrieved unless their own religion is positively taught in the schools to which their children go. But, so far as the public schools are concerned, this is to demand unequal rights; and this is to have a very unreasonable conscience.

4. The Catholic conscience demands, in Bishop McQuaid's words, "the non-interference of the State in Church or in school." On the other hand, the secular conscience requires the non-interference of the Church in State or school. To which shall the school belong—to the Church or to the State? That is indeed the clean issue. But I do not see any way to reconcile here the two consciences. I suspect they are equally stubborn, equally unable to yield; but which is the more reasonable, is a point which must prove in the end decisive.

5. The Catholic conscience claims to be violated by a system which supports Protestant schools at the public expense; and the justice of this claim must be allowed. To make the public schools Protestant by requiring or permitting Protestant worship in them is truly a violation of all but Protestant consciences. But it is easy to rectify this wrong, and to establish a perfect equality of rights in the case, by simply secularizing the schools altogether. If this would satisfy the Catholic conscience, a permanent settlement of the school question could be effected; but the Catholic conscience is not satisfied with equality—it demands privilege, which is a very different matter.

6. The Catholic conscience claims to be still more violated by a system which should support secular schools at the public expense. Now what is a secular school? A school in which the elementary branches of an English education—reading, writing, arithmetic, and so forth—are taught, and in which religion is not taught; one which teaches nothing but what all children, whether of Catholic, Protestant, or liberal parentage, alike need to know, and which is scrupulously protected from all usurpation by any class of parents in the matter of religion. To pretend that this careful exclusion of all religious worship and instruction is to teach irreligion, is an instance of unparalleled audacity. It is impossible to teach the alphabet or multiplication table and the Catholic Catechism at one and the same instant; and even in the Catholic school a certain time is devoted to teaching the alphabet and the multiplication table exclusively. Is that to teach irreligion? It is undeniably to separate religious and secular education for the time being; but is that to teach irreligion? I must press this question: Is it teaching irreligion to devote a portion of time exclusively to teaching arithmetic or geography? If it is, then Catholic schools also teach irreligion just so long as they are teaching arithmetic or geography, and they should be denounced just as sweepingly as the public schools. But if not—if it is not teaching irreligion to devote in Catholic schools one or two hours exclusively to instruction in secular knowledge,—then it is no more teaching irreligion to devote in the public schools three or four or five hours to the same instruction. The Catholics may choose which horn of the dilemma they please: either the Catholic schools teach irreligion part of the time, or else the public schools do not teach irreligion at all. The sole ground of complaint against secular schools is that they omit to teach positive Catholic doctrine; and the attempt to twist this omission to teach Catholicism into a direct teaching of the contrary is a very desperate shift. Let me illustrate. I go to a carriage warehouse where buggies are advertised for sale, and order a horse and buggy. "But," replies the proprietor, "I do not sell horses; I only sell buggies." "That will do very well for those who want buggies only," I answer; "I don't believe in separating horses and buggies, and my conscience forbids me to purchase them separately." "I should be glad to accommodate you," replies the puzzled proprietor, "but really, my dear sir, I have only buggies for sale." "Then," I exclaim, "I denounce you for a violation of equal rights and for a secret purpose to outrage the community by abolishing horses. You grant all they ask to those who conscientiously want buggies alone; but you refuse what I ask, when my conscience demands a horse and buggy, one and inseparable. This is an invidious discrimination against my equal rights, a direct assault on the very existence of all horses; and now I propose to shut up your establishment altogether!" This is exactly what the Catholics are doing; they propose to shut up all State schools, if they can, because State schools can teach only secular knowledge, and not religion at the same time. They have profound scruples of conscience against buying buggies without horses.

7. But the gist of the claims made by the Catholic conscience is that Catholic parents ought not to be taxed for any but Catholic schools, since they cannot conscientiously send their children to any other; and, since the State cannot support Catholic schools, Catholic parents ought to be relieved from school taxes altogether, or else to receive back their own taxes from the State to be expended under their own control for Catholic schools. This is the beginning, middle, and end of the Catholic claim: all other claims of the Catholic conscience grow out of this. Bishop McQuaid says distinctly: "Catholics who are thus taxed are, to the extent of the taxes they pay, punished—persecuted for religion's sake." And again: "It must not be lost sight of in this argument that our rights go where our money goes."

It is in the name, therefore, of Catholic parents, who are taxed by the State for the support of the public schools, that the whole protest of the Catholic conscience is entered. But in truth the State deals exclusively with individuals in this matter of taxation; it deals with them neither as Catholics nor even as parents, but simply and solely as citizens. The State does not ask whether the tax-payer is a Catholic, or Protestant, or Jew, or freethinker; it does not ask whether he is married or unmarried, a parent or childless; it only asks him to pay his fair proportion of the school expenses as an individual member of the civil community. Now the question whether the State, which wholly ignores the inquiry as to the tax-payer's religion or family relations, has a right to tax all citizens indiscriminately for the support of the public school system, will presently come up for independent discussion; but I wish to point out that this general question is not raised by the Catholic conscience, which claims exemption from the public school tax for Catholic parents as such. It is the duties imposed by Catholic parentage which constitute the ground of the demand of "Catholic education for Catholic children"; and it is the rights inherent in Catholic parentage which constitute at least the ostensible grounds of protest against taxation for the public schools. The protest is essentially a denial of the general obligations of citizenship in the name of church membership and family ties. Before discussing the right of the State to tax all its citizens for public schools, I must first consider the astounding claim of Catholic parents to be treated as if they were not citizens at all, but to be excepted, set apart by themselves, and permitted to receive the benefits of the State without discharging the corresponding obligations. The Catholic claim is—not to be taxed for non-Catholic public schools; and it rests wholly on the alleged absolute rights of Catholic parents as such. These rights, it is evident, must be closely scrutinized and analyzed.

"PARENTAL PREROGATIVE."

The protest of the Catholic conscience against taxation for a non-Catholic public school system grows out of what Bishop McQuaid has well described as "Parental Prerogative." But in this matter he speaks not for himself alone.

Chief-Justice Dunne, of Arizona, in a lecture delivered a year ago, laid down these two principles as the basis of the Catholic demand respecting the schools:

"1. Religious instruction is of paramount importance.

"2. Each parent has the right to say what religious instruction his child shall receive."

And he says in another passage: "This claim to the absolute control of our domestic affairs is a sacred right which we cannot yield to the State."

The Catholic World for January speaks in the same strain, laying the foundation for the Catholic demands in a seemingly very harmless proposition:—

"Whatever you do, keep your hands off the family altar. Do not set foot into the hallowed precincts of the domestic sanctuary. The family, though subordinate, is not to be violated by the State. Parents have rights which no government can usurp." (These rights are intended to include absolute control over the education of children.)

Rev. Father Müller, in his book called Public School Education, defines the doctrine of "Parental Prerogative" as follows:—

"It is not on the State, but on parents, that God imposed the duty to educate their children, a duty from which no State can dispense; nor can fathers and mothers relieve themselves of this duty by the vicarious assumption of the State. They have to give a severe account of their children on the Day of Judgment, and they cannot allow any power to disturb them in insisting upon their rights, and making free use of them. The State has no more authority or control rightfully over our children than over a man's wife. The right to educate our children is a right of conscience, and a right of the family. Now these rights do not belong to the temporal order at all; and outside of this the State has no claim, no right, no authority."

Again, condensing into a pregnant phrase the whole Catholic theory of "Parental Prerogative," Father Müller emphatically declares—and I would solicit special attention to the declaration:—

"The social unit is the family, not the individual."

Bishop McQuaid thus stated the same general position in a lecture at Rochester, New York, in March, 1872:—

"Parents have the right to educate their children. It is wrong for the State to interfere with the exercise of this right."

"By the establishment of Common Schools at the expense of all tax-payers, the State does interfere with this right, especially in the case of poor parents who find it a burden to pay double taxes."

Last Sunday the Bishop expressed the same general views as follows:—

"The last to be heard and consulted is the one to whom the settlement of the question first and finally belongs—the parent of the child. . . . In despite of all, the responsibility of the education of his child falls on him, and on no one else. . . . Parental rights precede State rights. . . . A father's right to the pursuit of happiness extends to that of his children as well. . . . Parental rights include parental duties and responsibilities before God and society." After quoting various authorities in defence of his position, the Bishop continued: "It is the Christian view of parental rights and duties which is here given. . . . The doctrine coming into vogue, that the child belongs to the State, is the dressing-up of an old skeleton of Spartan paganism, with its hideousness dimly disguised by a thin cloak of Christian morality."

I have quoted enough, I think, to give a fair view of this theory of "Parental Prerogative," on which the Catholic protest against the public school system is founded. Its principal points are as follows, restated in something like logical order:—

1. The social unit is the family, not the individual; and in the family the father is the supreme authority, or head,—both the wife and the children being required by the Catholic Church to "obey" him.

2. The father, representing the family, is charged with all rights, powers, and responsibilities concerning the education of the children. The State has absolutely no share either in the rights, powers, or responsibilities; for all education must be Catholic, and the State has neither capacity nor authority to impart it.

3. The State, consequently, by establishing a Common School System and taxing all citizens to support it, violates the sanctity of family rights, invades and usurps the "Parental Prerogative," and oppresses the father's conscience by requiring him to support a system of schools to which he cannot send his children, and by which all these wrongs are committed.

Here we have the core and pith of the Catholic protest against taxation for the public schools, so far as it is deemed wise to address it to the general intelligence of the American people. It is the side of the Catholic conscience which is turned to the outside world, although there is another side of it which is turned towards the Catholic Church. We see that, so far as this protest is addressed to the universal reason of mankind, it plants itself on a doctrine of "Parental Prerogative" which is at bottom a general social theory: namely, that society has for its ultimate unit the family, not the individual, and that all the educational rights, powers, and responsibilities of the family are concentrated in the father as the Divinely constituted head of the family. Whether, therefore, the protest of the Catholic conscience against the public school system is an intrinsically reasonable conscience, or not, is a question which can only be determined by examining the social theory on which it rests. Should this theory not prove to be inherently reasonable, but to involve unreason and injustice of a grave character, then the school question will be fundamentally changed. It will no longer be the question whether we ought to abandon the public school system out of deference to the rights of an oppressed minority, but rather how we should most justly and most tenderly deal with the honest, but unenlightened and dangerously misguided, conscience of a sect which is discontented with the essential principles of republican institutions. This is certainly a question of the greatest gravity; but it is not so grave as one which involves the possible abandonment of all State education. If the Catholic protest is actually not based on sound reason and impartial reverence for the rights of all—if it turns out to be the stealthy and masked attack of an ambitious hierarchy on the bulwarks of popular liberty,—our minds will be at least relieved of much perplexity and embarrassment. What, then, is the intrinsic character of this doctrine of "Parental Prerogative"? Is it true or false?

THE CATHOLIC SOCIAL THEORY A RELIC OF BARRIBISM.

Remembering clearly the chief features of the Catholic social theory which lies at the bottom of the so-called "Parental Prerogative"—namely, that the social unit is the family, not the individual, and that all powers and rights touching the education of children are vested in the father, as the head of the family,—you will gain a clearer insight into the truth of this matter, if, instead of giving you any reflections of my own, I read to you some pretty copious extracts from a book which every well-read person will recognize at once as one which enjoys a world-wide reputation of the highest possible character. I refer to the treatise of Sir Henry Sumner Maine on Ancient Law, a work which by common consent ranks among the ablest and most valuable productions of the century. What he has to say on this subject will hardly be gainsaid by any but the uninformed; and I prefer to give his views in his own language without attempting to translate it into my own. Sir Henry Maine says:—

"The effect of the evidence derived from comparative jurisprudence is to establish that view of the primeval condition of the human race which is known as the Patriarchal Theory. . . . The difficulty, at the present stage of the inquiry, is to know where to stop—to say of what races of men it is not allowable to lay down that the society in which they are united was originally organized on the patriarchal model. . . . The points which lie on the surface of the history are these. The eldest male parent, the eldest ascendant, is absolutely supreme in his household. His dominion extends to life and death, and is as unqualified over his children and their houses as over his slaves; indeed, the relations of sonship and serfdom appear to differ in little beyond the higher capacity which the child in blood possesses of becoming one day the head of the family himself. . . . If I were attempting to express compendiously the characteristics of the situation in which mankind disclose themselves at the dawn of history, I should be satisfied to quote a few verses from the Odyssey of Homer: 'They have neither assemblies for consultation nor themistes, but every one exercises jurisdiction over his wives and children, and they pay no regard to one another.' . . . [Archæic law] is full, in all its provinces, of the clearest indications that society in primitive times was not what it is assumed to be at present, a collection of individuals. In fact, and in the view of the man who composed it, it was an aggregation of families. The contrast may be most forcibly expressed by saying that the unit of an ancient society was the Family,—of a modern society the Individual. . . . In most of the Greek States and in Rome there long remained the vestiges of an ascending series of groups out of which the State was at first constituted. The Family, House, and Tribe of the Romans may be taken as the type of them, and they are so described to us that we can scarcely help conceiving them as a system of concentric circles which have gradually expanded from the same point. The elementary group is the Family, connected by common subjection to the highest male ascendant. The aggregation of Families forms the Gens or House. The aggregation of Houses makes the Tribe. The aggregation of Tribes constitutes the Commonwealth. . . . No doubt, when with our modern ideas we contemplate the union of independent communities, we can suggest a hundred modes of carrying it out, the simplest of all being that the individuals comprised in the coalescing groups shall vote or act according to local propinquity; but the idea that a number of persons should exercise political rights in common simply because they happened to live within the same topographical limits was utterly strange and monstrous to primitive antiquity. . . . This was the principle of local contiguity, now recognized everywhere as the condition of community in political functions."

We thus see clearly that the Roman Catholic social theory, according to which (in the very phrase of Father Müller himself) the "social unit is the family, not the individual," appears to be a mere relic of primeval barbarism, the survival of an antiquated and fossilized conception utterly out of harmony with the pervading spirit of modern society.

THE "PARENTAL PREROGATIVE" ONLY THE "PATRIA POTESTAS."

A closer investigation only reveals this fact more plainly. The "Parental Prerogative" of Bishop McQuaid is nothing but a modification of the "Patria Potestas," or Fatherly Authority, of the ancient Roman law. What this was, Sir Henry Maine shows as follows:—

"On a few systems of law the family organization of the earliest society has left a plain and broad mark in the lifelong authority of the Father or other ancestor over the person and property of his descendants—an authority which we may conveniently call by its later Roman name of Patria Potestas. No feature of the rudimentary associations of mankind is deposited to by a greater amount of evidence than this, and yet none seems to have disappeared so generally and rapidly from the usages of advancing communities than this. . . . In the mature Greek jurisprudence, the rule advances a few steps on the practice hinted at in the Homeric literature; and though very many traces of the stringent family obligation remain, the direct authority of the parent is limited, as in European codes, to the non-age or minority of the children, or, in other words, to the period during which their mental and physical inferiority may always be presumed. . . . The Patria Potestas of the Romans, which is necessarily our type of the primeval paternal authority, is equally difficult to understand as an institution of civilized life, whether we consider its incidence on the person or its effects on property. It is to be regretted that a chasm which exists in its history cannot be more completely filled. So far as regards the person, the parent, when our information commences, has over his children the jus vitæ necisque, the power of life and death, and à fortiori of uncontrolled personal chastisement; he can modify their personal condition at pleasure; he can give a wife to his son; he can give his daughter in marriage; he can divorce his children of either sex; he can transfer them to another family by adoption; and he can sell them. Late in the Imperial period we find vestiges of all these powers, but they are reduced within very narrow limits. The unqualified right of domestic chastisement has become a right of bringing domestic offences under the cognizance of the civil magistrate; the privilege of dictating marriage has declined into a conditional veto; the liberty of selling has been virtually abolished; and adoption itself, destined to lose almost all its ancient importance in the reformed system of Justinian, can no longer be effected without the assent of the child transferred to the adoptive parentage. In short, we are brought very close to the verge of the ideas which have at length prevailed in the modern world. . . . The movement of the progressive societies has been uniform in one respect. Through all its course it has been distinguished by the gradual dissolution of family dependency and the growth of individual obligation in its stead. The Individual is steadily substituted for the Family, as the unit of which civil laws take account. . . . Nor is it difficult to see what is the tie between man and man which replaces by degrees those forms of reciprocity in rights and duties which have their origin in the family. It is contract. Starting, as from one terminus of history, from a condition of society in which all the relations of persons are summed up in the relations of family, we seem to have steadily moved towards a phase of social order in which all these relations rise from the free agreement of individuals."

We are now in a condition to understand precisely the value of that "Parental Prerogative" on which Bishop McQuaid and other Catholics base their claim that the school system violates "parental rights." It is the "old skeleton of" Roman "paganism"—dressed up with a "thin cloak of Christian morality." It is the ancient and outgrown Patria Potestas, intruding itself into modern society with its claim of despotic authority for the father over his child, and ignoring both the personal rights of the child and the collective rights of society. It is the galvanized corpse of the old Patriarchal Theory, good enough for the days of Abraham, who in obedience to it undertook to murder his own son, but a disgusting anachronism in the nineteenth century and the Centennial Year. The school question cannot be justly referred for settlement to the "parents" alone; the children have something at stake—society has something at stake,—and parents must dislodge the notion that their despotic selfishness will be allowed to substitute the rights of one party alone for the rights of three parties to this issue. The Catholic social theory, with its claim that "the family, not the individual, is the social unit," is the unburied skeleton of pre-historic barbarism, the most ancient and best authenticated relic in the keeping of the Church; while the "Parental Prerogative" which is so confidently relied upon to crush the great public school system under its elephantine tread is nothing but the pale and powerless ghost of the ancient Roman Patria Potestas, with not enough substance in it to crush the life out of a daisy.

THE "PARENTAL PREROGATIVE" A MERE STALKING-HORSE OF THE POPE.

But I have not got through with this "Parental Prerogative" yet. It is a most shrewd and sagacious appeal to the very democratic instinct to which it is really opposed. It is an endeavor to rouse the jealous independence of the American father in repulse of a purely illusory attack on his reserved parental rights. That he has parental rights I am the very last to deny; I am a parent myself, and not slow to defend the rights of a parent. But it is tyranny for a parent to forget or disregard the rights of his child; and it is usurpation for a parent to defy or despise the rights of society. Let the parent by all means stand firmly by his true parental rights in this school question; but let him be intelligent and self-restrained enough to recognize that he is not proprietor of all the rights in the case. Children are no longer the absolute property of the father. The plea of "Parental Prerogative" is well calculated to create a sense of wrong where no wrong exists—to sting ignorant parents into claiming a jurisdiction that does not belong to them, and to induce them to look on the Catholic Church as the bold champion of their rights against the assaults of a tyrannical majority. Such parents as these need to have their eyes opened; they are unsuspecting dupes. When the Catholic Church pleads "Parental Prerogative" to break down the beneficent public school system, and seemingly champions the rights of parents against the oppressions and aggressions of the non-Catholic majority, such parents ought to see that the Church does not recognize any "Parental Prerogative" at all as towards itself. No sooner has the Church succeeded in rescuing the Catholic parent from the imaginary jaws of the State, than it immediately proceeds to devour both parent and child with its own jaws. It claims for the parent, so far as the State is concerned, absolute and undivided authority over his child; but, as the Divinely deputed parent of all Catholics, it claims for itself absolute and undivided authority over both parent and child. It is well to understand this matter thoroughly. Whatever "parental rights" or "Parental Prerogative" the Church may claim for Catholic parents, it concedes to them no rights whatsoever that are inconsistent with its own autocratic dominion over them. Let no one for a moment imagine that the Church would tolerate any exercise of "Parental Prerogative" which should withdraw Catholic children from parochial schools to place them in the public schools. That sort of parental independence it is swift to punish with the severest penalties in its power to inflict. I must adduce some evidence of this statement, to convince you that I am not talking at random.

In the list of "damnable heresies" known as the Syllabus Errorum, denounced and condemned by Pope Pius IX. in 1864, the forty-eighth is as follows: "That method of instructing youth can be approved by Catholic men which is separated from the Catholic faith and from the power of the Church, and which has regard, or at least principally, to a knowledge of natural things only, and to the ends of social life on this earth." The condemnation of this proposition is the explicit condemnation of all secular education by the supreme and infallible Head of the Church; and it forbids all Catholics to sanction or approve anything but strictly Catholic education. The whole warfare of the Catholic Church in this country is the direct consequence of obedience to this command of the Pope; and the Church could not possibly recognize any "Parental Prerogative" which should dare to dispute it.

Further, in answer to the question, "Who is bound to obey the Church?" the Catholic Catechism replies, "All baptized persons, for we are commanded by Jesus Christ himself to obey his Church." What "Parental Prerogative" is left outside of this obligation of universal obedience?

But I do not adduce merely abstract declarations of Syllabus or Catechism. The Dubuque Daily Telegraph of January 3, only seven weeks ago, had this paragraph: "Father Ryan announced in St. Patrick's Church yesterday that the rule heretofore adopted of refusing the Sacraments of Penance and Holy Eucharist to parents who send their children to the public schools would be enforced and adhered to henceforth. He spoke emphatically on the matter, and advised parents who send their children to the public schools not to attempt to approach the sacraments, while they persist in refusing obedience to this law of the Church, alleging that such is the law." Remember that to refuse the sacraments to a Catholic is practically to condemn him to an eternal hell.

There can be no doubt that this is the law of the Church. Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, explicitly declared it to be the law in his Lenten Pastoral of 1873 as follows: "We solemnly charge and most positively require every Catholic in the diocese to support, and send his children to, a Catholic school. When good Catholic schools exist, where it may be honestly said a child will get a fair common school education,—if parents, either through contempt for the priest or through disregard for the laws of the Church, refuse to send their children to a Catholic school, then, in such cases, but in such cases only, we authorize confessors to refuse the sacraments to such parents as thus despise the laws of the Church, and disobey the command of both priest and bishop."

In Rhode Island, according to the New York Independent of February 10, 1876, "it seems that the father of a Miss De Fray made an affidavit in which he swore that the mother of the child had been excluded from the sacred rites of the Catholic Church, because she allowed her daughter to attend the public school, and was told that, so long as she persisted in doing so, she would not be entitled to the privileges of the Church." In consequence of this oppression, a bill has actually been introduced into the Rhode Island Legislature to prohibit such interference with family affairs. In other words, the State, which is denounced as violating "parental rights," is actually invoked to protect Catholic parents from violation of these very rights by their own priests!

I must not fail to add some personal testimony of my own to the same effect. Last Sunday evening, Bishop McQuaid lectured on "Catholic Education for Catholic Children" in St. Mary's Hall, Cambridgeport; and, desiring to hear him speak on this subject to a Catholic audience, I attended the lecture. Among other things, he said substantially this (I may not give the exact words in every part, but I know I give the exact substance of his words): "Now I am going to read to you from the Syllabus, which is a bugbear to many people, as if it were the horn of the beast of the Apocalypse thrown into the world to make mischief. But the Syllabus is only the condensation of great truths which the world needs for its salvation." He then read the extract I have already quoted, condemning so emphatically all Catholics who approve of any education apart from the faith and power of the Church, and said, with a lowering of the voice and an intensity of manner and tone which well conveyed the verbally suppressed menace: "Whoever does not believe in the Syllabus, as the infallible truth of God, ceases to be a Catholic. He may perhaps attend Mass, and go to confession; but—" and he spoke with an emphasis sure not to be misunderstood—"I would not like to have the absolving of him!"

Such, then, is the extent of the "Parental Prerogative" which the Bishop so eloquently claimed for Catholic parents on Sunday afternoon, and as eloquently scattered to the four winds of heaven on Sunday evening. Nothing can be plainer than that the Catholic conscience hurled against the school system is not the free and independent consciences of individual Catholic parents, but rather the conscience formed irresistibly in them by the clergy to whom they listen with fettered minds, massed like an obedient and well-disciplined army in defence of the Church. It is not the unbiased conscience of the parents as such, left to form their candid opinions in profoundly respected liberty, but the coerced and yet honest conscience of spiritual slaves. It is, in short, not the conscience of free parents at all, but the organic conscience of the Church of Rome, knowing its own interests, oblivious of everything else, and determined to protect them at all costs. It is the conscience of the priests, the bishops, and the Pope, using the consciences of the laity as mere pawns in their desperate game with modern civilization. Let us understand the matter: the battle is between the corporate, consolidated, ecclesiastical conscience of the Roman Papacy, on the one hand, and, on the other, the multitudinous, independent, and secular consciences of the American Republic—nothing but that; and this whole theory of "Parental Prerogative," which is now held up high before the gaze of the outside world in order to compass the destruction of the public schools, and now trampled scornfully under foot within the precincts of the Church in order to build up the parochial schools, has no life, meaning, or veracity except as the Pope's stalking-horse. In saying this, I do not in the least question the sincerity of the Roman priesthood. Ambition is a terribly sincere thing; despotism is a terribly sincere thing. But the American citizen who is deceived by this talk of "Parental Prerogative," and consents to abolish the public schools out of tenderness for "parental rights," unbolts and unbars the cage of a tiger whose first leap will be at his own throat. The Church cares nothing for parental rights except as an outer wall of defence against the Republic's just claim to establish schools for the education of her own children. Before the Church, the parent has no right but to obey. The Pope commands the bishops; the bishops command the priests; the priests command the parents; the parents command the children; and the burden of the command is evermore the same—"Believe and obey!" That is the beginning, middle, and end of "Parental Prerogative." Shall any freeman be so simple as not to know slavery when he sees it?

THE AMERICAN SOCIAL THEORY.

No—it is high time for all who would enjoy liberty to understand the conditions of liberty. While the Church is built on the social theory which makes the family, not the individual, the social unit; while it binds the parent both to be a true and obedient Catholic himself, and to make his children also true and obedient Catholics; and while it teaches the doctrine of "Parental Prerogative" in this, and no other sense,—the free State is built on a social theory exactly the reverse of this. It recognizes the individual, and not the family, as the true social unit, the ultimate atom of human society; and it exists solely to guarantee and to protect the equal natural rights of all individuals. This is the distinctly avowed basis of the American Republic. The Declaration of Independence proclaims, as the first great principle of our national existence, that "all men are created equal;" all men, all individuals, not all families or all parents. The preamble of the United States Constitution, ordaining and establishing the fundamental law of the land, does so in the name of—"We the people;" that is, we the aggregated individuals who compose the people, and not, we the families, or, we the parents. In accordance with this initial recognition of individuality, and the rights of individuality, as the prime fact of human society, all our institutions are framed. Our national life consists in a fuller and higher realization of this supreme principle. While the Church binds women and children to domestic servitude under man, as the Divinely appointed head of the family, the State is coming more and more to abolish this irrational and oppressive supremacy of man. It is coming to recognize woman as man's equal before the law; it has long regarded marriage as a civil contract only, and this is leading to the gradual establishment of woman's equal civil and political rights. That is the deeper meaning of the woman movement, which aims to establish and protect woman's right to the enjoyment of her own free individuality. So also the movement for a better and more strictly universal education, the movement to extend and improve the public school system, is at bottom nothing but the State's growing consciousness that children are also individuals, with all the rights of individuality,—not, as the Church makes them, the personal property of the father, but really wards entrusted to his fostering care during the period of their immaturity. Just as the movement for female suffrage is a growing recognition of the rights of women as individuals, so is the movement for better public schools a growing recognition of the rights of children as individuals. Whoever would consent to the abolition of State schools, which are necessarily imbued with this principle of the individual rights of children, consents to the substitution in their place of the inevitable Church schools, which are all more or less imbued with the principle of the Christianized Patria Potestas. Alas for the radicalism which, through jealousy of the State, would thus unwittingly hand over the education of children to the Church! The abolition of State schools means the inevitable establishment of denominational or Church schools. But the social theory and tendency of the State is the development of free individuality, while that of the Church is the development of ecclesiastical despotism. Which has the better claim to be the educator of those on whose shoulders must rest the responsibility of handing down free institutions to posterity?

Vicar-General Windischmann, of Munich, who clearly saw that the control of the future belongs to those who educate the children of the present, and who uttered the profound conviction and fixed purpose of the consolidated Roman hierarchy, did not exaggerate the importance of the school controversy, when he exclaimed: "The struggle for the school has the same importance in the nineteenth century that the struggle for the occupancy of the bishoprics had in the eleventh." It is indeed so. There are but two contestants in this great controversy—the despotic and remorseless Church of Rome, the democratic and humane Republic of America; and that one of the two which shall control the education of the common people will be lord of the land from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

RIGHTS OF THE CHILD.

I think it must now be sufficiently clear that, instead of handing over the school question for final settlement to the parents alone, as Bishop McQuaid recommends (of course with the reservation that the parents must settle it just as the Church dictates, on pain of being deprived of absolution for their sins), the question can only be justly settled by the whole community, after a careful consideration of the rights of the three parties interested; namely, the children, the parents, and the State. Parent though I am, I should refuse to be made judge in a case in which I am myself one of three equally interested parties; and I must decline election to the bench under such circumstances, even on so flattering a nomination. But I find it my duty to present to the community, the real tribunal, my view of the case as involving these three classes of rights.

The child's principal rights as an individual seem to be, briefly, these:—

1. The right to existence. The father has no right to deprive him of it, for that would be murder, and the State, the protector of rights, would not admit the plea of "Parental Prerogative" as any defence against the just punishment of the crime. Even before the child's birth, his individual right to existence begins; and foeticide is justly regarded as a crime of the blackest dye.

2. The right to proper maintenance, including food, clothing, and shelter. To withhold these is a crime against the laws of the State, which again stands ready to invade the sanctity of my household, if I press my "Parental Prerogative" so far as to wrong the little being entrusted to me by a wilful failure to provide for its fundamental wants.

3. The right to a fair education, as the necessary condition of a happy and useful career in the life for which I am responsible. This right is very imperfectly protected by the law; and it is a right which constitutes a claim not only on the parent, but on the State. Society has even a larger stake in my child's education than I have, since the larger portion of the child's life is to be spent away from my care and control. The child has a right to be educated, for his own sake and for society's sake; and society, having at least as large a stake as mine in his future, must share with me the duty and the expense of furnishing the education. The burden and the cost of the education by which society is to be benefited at last even more than I, and to which the child may plead justly a natural right, ought in equity to be divided between the State and the parent. The right of the child to education, therefore, constitutes in equity a joint claim on both.

4. The right to be protected by the State against parental selfishness, cruelty, ignorance, indifference, superstition. No parent has a right to overwork a child for the sake of his little earnings, or to work him at all to the neglect of his education. No parent has a right to abuse the child in any way. Such things as these are violations of the child's rights as an individual, and ought to be protected better than they are. The State is responsible for this protection, and sometimes affords it. An important case has just occurred in England, in which the State most righteously interfered to protect children from the unintentional cruelty resulting from mere superstition. Harper's Weekly, in its issue of December 18, 1875, says: "An important decision has been given by Lord Coleridge in the case of 'the Peculiar People,' which was carried up on appeal. A member of this sect, for neglect to provide medical attendance for his sick child, was charged with manslaughter. The conviction for this offence in the court below was affirmed by the judges. Baron Bramwell said that 'the man thought that to fulfil the duty imposed by statute was wrong; the law, however, did not excuse him on that account.' It is part of the creed of this sect of the "Peculiar People" never to call in medical aid in sickness, but to rely only on prayer; and it was rightly held that the child's right to decent care in his sickness could not lapse by reason of the father's superstition. This is a very instructive case, and shows how respect for the rights of children is gradually abolishing the barbarous "Parental Prerogative." The plea of parental "conscience" in this instance is no justification for the infringement of the child's right to life; it may be found equally invalid in justification of infringement of his right to education. The child has a right not to be taught superstitions which shall unfit him to be either a good man or a good citizen. He has a right to be taught what the rights of others are, and what his own corresponding duties are. A school which should teach children that it is wrong to take or to give medical advice in sickness would be as mischievous and criminal in character as a school for instruction in the "fine art" of murder. The facts of the universe discovered by physical or moral science are a part of the great human heritage of which it is as much a crime to defraud a child as to defraud him of his share in his father's estate. Children's rights in these matters have yet to be studied and defined far more exactly, and protected far more efficiently, than is done to-day; and they have a very important bearing on the whole school question.

Children, therefore, have, as individuals and members of society, a right to life, a right to maintenance, a right to education in the knowledge of those facts of the universe which are essential to its social welfare, and a right to protection against its own ignorance of those facts, whether enforced in the name of "Parental Prerogative" or any other name; and the State, which exists to protect individual rights, should protect the child from violation of these rights either by its own parents or by the Church.

RIGHTS OF THE PARENT.

But the parent has also rights which are just as sacred as those of the child; and I am just as strenuous for the protection of them as Bishop McQuaid.

1. The parent has a right to exercise authority over the child so long as he does not violate the rights of the child or the rights of the State. His authority is that of the natural guardian of the child, not that of his owner or proprietor; and it can only be exercised within the limits of that relationship. The child's reason and conscience being undeveloped, the parent represents them during the child's minority, and is consequently bound to act from his own mature reason and conscience, not from his own arbitrary will or caprice. Being justly required to maintain the child, he has a right to such small services as the child may render without being deprived of the rights above defined; and he is no tyrant or oppressor in requiring from the child a general deference and obedience to his own commands. The natural affection for his offspring, and the natural wisdom derived from superior experience, which must be presumed to be his until the contrary is proved, entitle him to be free from all intrusive interference or petty supervision on part of the State in the exercise of his authority as the child's natural guardian; and it is only after a manifest and proved abuse of this authority that the State can justly interpose its shield over the child. From the nature of the case, there is little danger of too much interference by the State; the danger is all the other way.

2. The parent has also the right to supervise and direct the education of the child to a very considerable extent. Provided he does not withhold altogether the education to which the child has the right already explained, he may justly decide the place where it is to be acquired, and the agencies by which it is to be imparted. He may either educate the child himself, or send him to a public or private school at his own option. The child has simply a right to a certain amount of education; provided he is not deprived of this, places and times and instrumentalities are nobody's concern but the parent's. Especially with regard to religion and religious influences, the parent has an undoubted right to teach his child what he believes to be the most important of all truths. But there is a plain limitation of this right. Under the name of religion, he has no right to teach anything which shall lead the child to trample on the rights of others, or unfit him for the duties and responsibilities of good citizenship. The State has a wholly independent right to protect the child from such abuse of parental authority as this. No parent, for instance, has a right to teach his child that stealing is the proper way to secure a livelihood. If he does, the State has a right to interfere, and see that the child is taught to respect the rights of others with regard to property. There is a certain natural morality resulting from the mere co-existence of many individuals with equal rights in one society; and this the parent has no right to disregard in any instruction he may give to his child. But he has a right to teach his child whatever views of religion, outside of this natural morality, he may hold to be true and precious. All that the State has a right to require is that the child shall not be prevented from knowing what is essential to the discharge of his duties as a member of society, and shall not be taught what is inconsistent with those duties.

RIGHTS OF THE STATE.

Besides the child and the parent, the State has rights and duties of its own, absolutely independent of the Church. It does not ask any permission of the Church to exist or to ensure the conditions of its own existence. Rightly considered, the State is nothing but human society, acting collectively to preserve the equality of rights among all the individuals that compose it, and to guarantee to each individual the maximum of individual liberty which is compatible with this equality of rights. If all individuals knew and respected the rights of others, there would be no need of the State as an organized power; and the power of the State will fall into disuse precisely in the proportion that all individuals do actually learn to know and respect the rights of others. The organized power of the State, however, must continue to be exercised until that day; and it does not exist by the sufferance of, or in subordination to, the organization known as the Church.

1. The first great right of the State, then, is to exist and to perpetuate its own existence. Whatever conditions are indispensable to its existence, it has an absolute right to require. It is based wholly on the social theory that the individual, not the family, is the social unit. On this theory, its right to exist as an organization rests on the prior rights of the individuals that compose it; and its whole function is to maintain, protect, and enlarge as much as possible, these antecedent individual rights.

2. The second great right of the State is to establish universal suffrage, as the necessary condition of its own existence as a society in which the rights of all individuals shall be equally respected.

3. The third great right of the State is to establish universal intelligence and social morality, as the necessary condition of universal suffrage.

4. The fourth great right of the State is to establish universal education, as the necessary condition of universal intelligence and social morality.

5. The fifth great right of the State is to establish a universal system of public schools, as the necessary condition of universal education.

6. The sixth great right of the State is to establish universal use of the means of education, by the instruction of all children either at the public schools, or at private schools, or at home, as the parents may elect; and, further, to establish public examinations of all children, at proper times and places. If the children pass these examinations successfully, the State will be satisfied, no matter how, or when, or where, they acquired the requisite knowledge; but, in the case of children who fail to pass the examinations, it will properly require them to attend such schools as shall furnish it.

All these six rights are involved in the right of the State to exist, as a society of individuals whose equal rights are universally known and respected. A knowledge of these rights and the corresponding duties constitutes that social morality which should be taught in the public schools; and it can be taught easily from text-books which do not infringe in the least on the religious beliefs of anybody. All religions profess to teach it; it can be taught, and should be taught, as a simple matter of positive knowledge, without stepping outside of the circle of the common relations of human life.

THE STATE'S RIGHT TO TAX FOR PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Now from what I have said it clearly follows that the State has a right to tax all its tax-payers for the support of public schools:—

1. Because the child's right to an elementary education is a joint claim upon the parent and the State; and the State can only discharge its own part of the obligation by maintaining a public school system.

2. Because the State finds the public school system to be an absolute condition of its own existence as a free society charged with the protection of all individual rights, including the rights of children as individuals.

3. Because the school taxes are collected for the support of the school system as a whole, of which all tax-payers alike receive the benefit through the perpetuation of the State as the protector of all individual rights, including their own. If the State has the right to tax all for any purpose, it has the right to tax them all for the public schools, which are the indispensable condition of its own continued existence. The school tax paid by each tax-payer is not the payment of his separate bill for the instruction of his own child, for he may be childless, yet justly taxed all the same. The school tax is only the just assessment on each tax-payer of his share of the cost incurred in maintaining the existence of the State which protects his individual rights in all their multiplicity. It is a distorted, false, and wretchedly contracted view of the matter to see nothing in the school-tax but a bill for the tuition of the tax-payer's own children. On the contrary, it is only a part of his general contribution to the support of the State itself.

That it is not only the right, but the duty, of the State to support a system of public schools, which can only be done by the impartial taxation of all, is no new doctrine. Daniel Webster said: "The power over education is one of the powers of public police belonging essentially to government. It is one of those powers the exercise of which is indispensable to the preservation of society, to its integrity, and its healthy action. It is evident, therefore, that popular cultivation, as diffuse and general as the numbers comprising the Republic, is indispensable to the preservation of our republican forms; and hence arises the great Constitutional duty of the government. It is the duty of self-preservation, according to the mode of its existence, for the sake of the common good."

Barsdow, the great-grandfather of Professor Max Müller, about a hundred years ago taught the true doctrine on this subject in Germany. The German Biographia, recently published by the Bavarian government, says in its life of Barsdow: "This one great principle he established: that national education is a national duty; that national education is a sacred duty; and that to leave national education to chance, church, or charity, is a national sin! Another principle which followed, in fact as a matter of course, as soon as the first principle was granted, was this: that in national schools, in schools supported by the nation at large, you can only teach that on which we all agree; hence, when children belong to different sects, you cannot teach theology."

On this great right and duty of the State to perpetuate itself, and on the impossibility of its doing so, when its fundamental basis is the equal rights of all individuals, except by means of a State education which shall be universal and secular, rests the great, positive argument for the public school system, and the justification of the State in taxing all tax-payers equitably and impartially for its support. It is no wrong to any man to tax him for this purpose, even though he be childless; it is no wrong to tax him for it, even though he prefer to send his child elsewhere than to the public schools, as many besides Catholics do; for the protection of his individual rights in this free republic is a full and fair equivalent of his money. When the Catholic conscience, which is only the conscience of the Pope enforced on all Catholics, and not the free, independent conscience of Catholic parents as individuals, claims exemption from this just school-tax, it is a selfish, blind, and arrogant attempt to get the benefits of this free government without paying for what they get. It is a conscience essentially unreasonable and unjust; and reason and justice, therefore, command the American people to follow unflinchingly the better-instructed conscience which has built, and will still sustain, the grand American system of public schools. It only remains to make them absolutely just by making them absolutely secular.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 9, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER, WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES VOSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England), DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

THE PHILADELPHIA Liberal League elected officers on February 27 as follows: President, Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore; Vice-President, James Buckle; Secretary, John S. Dye; Treasurer, Miss Mary Pratt; Executive Committee, D. Y. Kilgore, J. B. Beam, A. Loos.

THE OPENING LECTURE of this week's issue is commended to the careful, thoughtful, and conscientious attention of all our fellow-citizens. Our purpose has been, not to prove a point or win a victory, but solely to make plain what is just and right. If a valid reply can be made to our reasoning, we shall be the first to admit its force.

REV. JOHN WEISS has with great kindness sent us for publication his marvellously brilliant and bold lecture on "American Morals and the Atonement," delivered with startling effect last Sunday before Theodore Parker's Society, the Twenty-eighth Congregational, in this city. It will appear in the third issue of THE INDEX after the present, as next week's paper will contain Mr. Underwood's able lecture on "Modern Scientific Materialism," and the succeeding paper another of Mr. James' striking letters. When so much ability is concentrated in THE INDEX, we have a good right to ask the radicals of the country to "lend a hand" in giving it increased circulation. Its foes are many and strong; will not its friends be as earnest as they?

FATHER HENNING, a Catholic priest of St. Louis, shows by the boldness and explicitness of his language how confident the Catholic Church is growing in this country. Harper's Weekly of January 15 quotes a report of his public instructions from the Iowa Falls Sentinel, as follows: "It is the duty of every Catholic to vote for a Catholic candidate; for one who is not opposed to the Catholic religion, who is not an enemy to the Church; and it is the duty of every faithful Catholic to vote against those candidates who are enemies of our Church and our holy faith. . . . The Church, we are bound to believe as Catholics, is infallible. She is infallible in faith; she is infallible in something more; she is infallible in everything, in morals as well as in faith; and it follows that the State can never be absolutely separate from the Church; that the declaration of the independence of the State from the Church is simply political atheism. God has appointed the Church as His interpreter in morals; and as no State can exist without morality, no State can exist separate from the Church."

THE CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

AN APPEAL TO THE EARNEST.

Our readers are aware that a convention of Liberal Leagues was held at Philadelphia on the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth of last September, to take preliminary steps towards holding a General Congress of Liberals in that city on or before July 4, 1876. This convention was reported at considerable length in THE INDEX of September 30. A General Centennial Committee (F. E. Abbot, D. Y. Kilgore, Prof. A. Loos, Prof. I. Rhen, B. F. Underwood, H. S. Williams) and a Centennial Committee of Finance (E. M. Davis, W. B. Thomas, E. H. Corson, J. Wetherbee, J. S. Dye) were appointed, with power to increase their respective numbers; but, the latter Committee through their Chairman, Mr. Davis, having requested the former Committee to relieve them of the duty of raising funds, it has become necessary to make a frank appeal for assistance to the general public.

In kind compliance with our request at this emergency, Mr. Kilgore has consented to share with us the labor of raising money for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, and will act as Treasurer, as explained by the subjoined communication:—

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, {
March 1, 1876.

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia on Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates or individuals, who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,
Acting Treasurer.

Mr. Kilgore is a member of the Philadelphia bar, and we believe him to be a man of unquestioned and unquestionable personal integrity. Whatever is contributed, we have not a shadow of doubt, will be honestly and economically used in furtherance of the Congress and its cause. Every friend of this movement should go to attend the gathering, if possible, and in any case should remit without delay such sum as he can spare, whether great or little. Two men within our personal knowledge, neither of whom is well able to do it, some time ago pledged twenty-five dollars apiece, if needed, to help defray the expenses of this convention; a third wrote to us, making inquiries and spontaneously offering assistance, if anything practical was proposed to be done about it.

The time has come: it is proposed to do something very practical; the promise of success is great; money only is wanted. Shall it not be had? We believe that the Liberal League, and the great principle of STATE SECULARIZATION it stands for, are destined before long to command, not to solicit, the attention of the entire country; and the day will yet come when it will be a proud thought—"On July 4, 1876, I was one of those who began the New Century with the New Declaration of Independence."

For what is wanted now is that the State should declare emphatically its absolute and total independence of the Church. To-day it is not independent of the Church, as the "Demands of Liberalism" sufficiently indicate; nor is the country really a unit in demanding such entire independence. The Roman Catholic Church, notwithstanding its smooth professions of acquiescence in the American system, is secretly plotting to make the State the mere subservient tool and slave of its own theocratic Pope. The great bulk of the Orthodox Protestant population demands that the State should plant itself, if not on the Church, at least on "unsectarian Christianity," and thus take its law from the Bible and the Christ, the Church's sacred Book and the Church's sacred Lord; and this demand is only uttered with boldness and frankness by the party which has proposed the Christian Amendment to the United States Constitution. Here, then, is the flag of the Catholic Church, representing the empire of the Church over the State; and here is the flag of the Protestant Church, representing a disastrously "entangling alliance" of the two. But where is the flag of the great party of unchurched American citizens who believe and demand that the State should stand solely on its own natural foundation, the Rights of Man, and know nothing of churches, sects, creeds, or priests? Where is the flag representing that august principle of STATE SECULARIZATION, by which this democratic republic must stand or fall? Nowhere! There is nowhere a clear, strong, bold, emphatic affirmation of this great principle, in all the majesty of its naked simplicity, except in the Liberal League. It is to run up this, the true flag of the Republic, and to nail it at the mast-head, that the Centennial Congress of Liberals has been called: to adopt and proclaim to all the world, in such tones that all the world shall hear, that new Declaration of Independence which should give dignity and meaning to this Centennial Year.

Liberals! Fellow-citizens! Men and women who comprehend the great need of the hour and the dazzling destiny of America! I appeal to you, with all the energy and earnestness of my whole soul, to give us your indispensable aid in raising, befittingly and betimes, the great Flag of the Future—the only pledge that the shadows shall not move backwards on the dial-plate of the ages—the only principle that can transmit to our children and our children's children the religious liberty we ourselves enjoy. Above all the uproar of the times, above all the conflicts of parties and the multitudinous clashing interests of the hour, towers this mighty and transcendent issue, appealing to every mind that can think, to every heart that can feel, to every unselfish and noble nature that can act. The clock has struck; the hour for action has arrived: who will not answer—"Ready!"

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

MR. MORSE'S BUST OF THEODORE PARKER.

We hope that all friends of Theodore Parker who remember his living presence will take advantage of Mr. Morse's invitation to see the full-sized marble bust which he has completed, and which is, we believe, to be placed in Parker's native town of Lexington.

This bust is not an enlarged copy of the half-size bust which Mr. Morse modelled a few years ago, and which, although possessing much merit, was not entirely satisfactory to all Mr. Parker's friends. Mr. Morse has made an entirely fresh and independent study of the head for this new work, and so, while reaping the advantage of the knowledge of his subject gained by the former attempt, he has escaped the danger of repeating its faults, and has embodied in it the riper experience of thought and the greater knowledge of his art gained in that time.

As it now stands, the bust is a sincere, frank, manly, dignified representation of the great reformer and preacher, and, we think, combines more of his characteristic traits than any other bust that has been modelled. Adequately to portray Mr. Parker's head was one of the most difficult of tasks. His features had not the classic symmetry which sculpture loves; and their flexibility and variety of expression make it very hard to select any special aspect which will satisfy all who knew him.

But Mr. Morse has given a great deal both of the strength and of the tenderness of his character, and even of the humor which was so strikingly characteristic of him.

Mr. Parker was not only a great reformer and preacher, but his services to literature and education were very great; and this bust ought to have a place in the Public Library in which he took so warm an interest, and to which he bequeathed his dearly loved books. There on Sundays, many a little urchin, as he pores over his book, might look up at this kind and helpful face, and gather encouragement to imitate the labors and virtues of one who started with as few worldly advantages as himself. We do not wish to forestall the opinions of our readers on this excellent work of Mr. Morse's; but we do urge them to go and see it for themselves, and ask if they do not recognize "this great friend to all the sons of men," even in "his very habit as he lived."

E. D. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—In your paper of January 27, there appears a letter signed "Frank J. Mead," taking exception to some few words at the close of my letter in THE INDEX of December 30. This is the second time an objection has been made in your columns to that passage, and although with your usual tact and promptness you have given an editorial note more than half explanatory of my position, for which I sincerely thank you, still I think it right to say something more in reference to Mr. Mead's letter. I am at this moment lying under the disadvantage of not having access either to my own letter of December 30, or to THE INDEX containing the former of the two objections which have been made to it, as my INDEXES are gone to be bound.

The passage of my letter which is objected to is as follows:—

"Believe me, it is not atheism, but rational faith that can cure these deadly maladies. Atheism plays into the priests' hands, and drives many a trembling but honest inquirer back into the narcotic slumber which awaits him in the weird embraces of Rome."

In the first place, let me deal with the fact I have stated; namely, that atheism drives people back into the superstitions they were beginning to shake off. My meaning would have been much clearer, had I said, "The fear of atheism" does this. I am continually meeting with people who say, and say honestly, "We would become Romanists to-morrow, if we thought we should be logically compelled to embrace atheism as the only alternative." As a matter of absolute fact, hundreds of people have, after a little awakening to a spirit of inquiry, gone back into more determined dogmatism and Orthodoxy than ever, through sheer dread of losing all faith in God. I have seen too many instances of this kind not to insist upon the fact in spite of all Mr. Mead's remonstrances. He may explain it how he will; there is the fact; and from it I draw the inference that atheism will not help people to throw off their superstitions; but, in the present state of feeling, it will make them cling to them more closely than ever.

Ask any of these people what it is which they dread losing, and they will tell you—one and all,—"We are afraid of losing God altogether." Rightly or wrongly, the average man and woman does cling to this idea of God, no matter how well or how ill defined. Your readers must know by this time that I yield to none in my aversion to dogmatism, in my reluctance to embody in any conception, anthropomorphic, or other, my idea of God. Terms of some kind we must use. To feel reliance or trust in any being, we must, of course, attribute to him some qualities of trustworthiness, such as wisdom and benevolence. But we do this without any idea of impersonation in form or localization in space. I am as willing as Mr. Mead to acknowledge the unknown and unknowable mode in which God may exist; but my firm faith in him and in his capable good-will to myself and all other beings is not irrational, but rather all the more rational because not hampered by metaphysics, or open to palpable conviction of impossibility or absurdity.

Mr. Mead's expression for God—namely, "the very essence and spirit of all life, coextensive and coexistent with the universe"—(to me) full of incomprehensible terms, scarcely less puzzling to the mind than the phrases of scholastic theology. They do not help my conception of God, in the least, nor does any other language that I have heard of. I may be deluded, but I apprehend what I call God by sensations which I cannot communicate, but which are felt and understood by so many of my fellow-men that we can understand one another when we speak of "faith in God." The atheist is one who denies that there is any God to have faith in. And, were it not for Mr. Mead's objecting to my quoted remarks, it would be difficult to classify him as an atheist from the rest of his letter. He seems to me to be trying to speak from both sides at once. As an atheist he recommends atheism as a cure for superstition; as one who is not an atheist he gives us his definition of God whose existence none but a fool or a madman would deny.

Which is he, an atheist, or a believer? If he be an atheist, let him not be so inconsistent as to attempt to define God, or even hint at his relation to the visible universe. If he be a believer, let him not reproach me with repudiating a position which he says could only be occupied by a madman or a fool.

I do not know how to argue with him, for he is first on one side and then on the other. Professedly my opponent, he yet betrays that he has some belief in God which is not exactly mine.

I am not sorry, Mr. Editor, that you publish these adverse replies. We do not want to have it all our own way. We would not have a faith that cannot bear attack. But while I read with equanimity and patience letters advocating atheism, or bordering closely upon it, I am more than ever resolved to attack and denounce atheism, if I can do so in a proper way, and in the right spirit. It is incumbent on us all to speak our honest minds right out; and, though it is more pleasant to agree together and talk smoothly, it does us more good to have a tussle sometimes, and bring our varying opinions into open conflict.

I believe atheism to be alien to human nature,—to be the direct offspring of lying creeds, and, when seen in its true light, certain to scare the timid and those who are mere surface-thinkers away from the region of inquiry and back into the dungeons of superstition. These are facts which cannot be denied. Mr. Mead may draw from them what inferences seem most reasonable. He may proclaim himself an atheist, or he may reveal that he too believes, even while claiming a title which belongs in his opinion only to the madman or the fool.

I, in turn, think my rational faith the best antidote to superstition, or I should not hold it; and, although I would not bring myself to define my God, or treat any attempt to do so otherwise than with scorn, I will not go so far as to call even the atheist ill names, or attribute his want of faith to discreditable conditions of mind. I believe every one would believe in God, and would believe rightly too, if only he could.

I am very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, S. E., Feb. 11, 1876.

MR. WILLIAM J. HEADY, of Louisville, announces himself as a Democratic candidate for the United States Senate, and pledges himself, if elected, to introduce, vote for, and urge the passage of the following amendment to the Constitution of the United States:—

"ARTICLE 28. SECTION 1. The United States shall render just compensation to the owners of private property taken for the public use of the United States during and since the late war, to wit: property taken for supplies and subsistence of the United States army; property in persons held to service or labor in the State of Kentucky, and other States which are named by the laws thereof, and recruited as soldiers in the United States army, or taken into the United States service in any other capacity, and thereby lost to the parties to whom such service or labor was due; and property in persons held to service or labor in the States of —, Kentucky, and under the laws thereof, and emancipated by the thirteenth amendment to the Constitution, and thereby lost to the owners and parties to whom such service or labor was due. Such compensation shall be paid to said owners, their heirs, assigns, representatives, successors, and distributees, in whole or in part, in United States currency and in United States bonds, payable in — years, if not sooner paid, bearing — per cent. interest, payable semi-annually in United States currency, at the capitals of the States respectively of the holders of said bonds. Said bonds shall bear date and interest from the date of the loss of the property."

Mr. Heady is a worthy Southern Democratic candidate. He speaks right out, boldly, and without suppressing it until after the Presidential election, what he knows to be the real intents and purposes of the masses of Southern Democrats. This frankness is refreshing, and it should really be in the Senate, so as to squarely, manfully, and rightly represent the Democracy of Kentucky, so that the North might know beyond dispute exactly what Kentucky Democracy is, and what the ascendancy of the Southern Democratic party really means.—Detroit Post.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The subjects of most exciting interest during the past week have been, of course, the sad fall of Mr. Belknap, the Secretary of War, and the many rumors of disclosures yet to be made of corrupt practices on the part of other government officers of high position. The completeness of the details of Mr. Belknap's corruption, and the suddenness of their disclosure, have had a startling effect upon the minds of many people, although the certainty that any close search on the part of the numerous investigating committees would result in something of the kind must have been a foregone conclusion to any careful observer of public affairs at Washington. When the most intimate associates of the Chief Executive are "Bosses" and "Toms," when he sends pawnbrokers and poker-players to represent the United States in foreign countries, and when he retains as Private Secretary a man proven to be the dear friend of whiskey thieves,—who can wonder that his subordinates not only have similar associates, but learn also to commit the actions of thieves, gamblers, and "Bosses"?

In speaking of the corrupt practices of Belknap and others as natural results of the administration of General Grant, we do not mean in any way to cast suspicion upon the personal integrity of the President. General Grant furnishes only another illustration of the well-known fact that a man may be a successful general, and at the same time be utterly unfit to perform successfully the duties of civil administration. He completely lacks the delicacy of perception necessary to test fitness for prominent civil position. His tastes are coarse. The vulgar moral precepts—those which forbid stealing, murder, and adultery—he apparently understands and lives up to; but of any high standard of honor he evidently has no conception, and any sense of the fitness or propriety of social requirements, or of the dignity of exalted official station, he knows nothing about. His appointments have been continual surprises from the time of his first going to Washington. Their singularity was excused at first on the ground that their originality was in keeping with the character of the independent soldier, and, when notoriously unfit appointments were made, many people actually endeavored for a long time to convince themselves that Grant's penetration had discovered in the person appointed some previously unsuspected excellence. It was long before people in general were willing to admit, and many are yet unwilling to do so, that their military idol lost all his picturesqueness when transplanted from the crude surroundings of camp-life to be enthroned in the presidential mansion.

Together with the pain which every sincere lover of his country must feel at the spectacle of a Cabinet officer selling official appointments, there may well be a general feeling of gladness that the revelation of these abominable practices has been made at the present time. The effect upon the coming presidential nominations and election cannot help being beneficial. For the past month, at least, there has been a growing impression in the minds of most impartial observers of political movements that the Republicans were destined to elect the next President, and unless recent or coming events should create intense disgust for the very name of the party which has so long been tolerant of impurities in high places, we know of no reason why the impression should not prove to be correct. The great danger to the country has been that Morton, or Conkling, or any one of a dozen similar and well-known politicians, might manage to secure the Republican nomination, and that thus (if elected) we should retain all the worst features of Grant's administration for another four years. Belknap's downfall will prove "a blessing in disguise" if it awakens the country to the absolute necessity of a thorough reform in the civil service,—a reform which no mere politician can possibly carry out, but which requires for success not only a President of courage and of unblemished integrity, but one who possesses also the instincts of a gentleman.

At last we are in a fair way to get at the "bottom facts" connected with the Emma Mine affair. Mr. James E. Lyon, who claims to have been the original owner of the Emma Mine, has appeared before the Congressional Committee which is investigating the connection of Mr. Schenck with the swindle, and has given a full outline-history of the whole matter. His account, which does not seriously differ from other accounts heretofore published, implicates badly not only Messrs. Park and Schenck, as well as ex-Senator Stewart, of Nevada, but also, we deeply regret to add, Professor Silliman of Yale College, who seems either to have allowed his scientific sagacity to be foiled by the devices of a set of sharpers, or to have made a false report for the sake of a large fee. General Schenck has already sailed from England, in order to appear before the Committee; Senator Stewart has been summoned to appear and testify; and Professor Silliman has published a card in which he states that he also at the proper time will be happy to give a full explanation of his connection with this notorious piece of rascality. Warned by sad experience, we advise our readers not to allow their expectations to become unduly excited because of the appearance upon the scene of Messrs. Schenck, Stewart, and Silliman; but, while hoping to receive a large amount of clear explanation, to be prepared to accept a very little with becoming resignation.

Mr. Bowen's statement read before the Examining Committee of Plymouth Church has been made public. It charges Mr. Beecher with a succession of adulteries, and corroborates some of the main assertions made in the public statements of Mr. Tilton. The names of Claflin, Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Richards, Mrs. Stanton, and Miss Anthony are given in support of some of his statements; and on Wednesday evening, of last week, in the presence of Mr. Beecher, at a business meeting of Plymouth Church, Mr. Bowen made the following proposition: "If you still demand all the names and particulars, and if Mr. Beecher demands them, I will do this: I will tonight, at this moment, meet Mr. William McKay, A. H. Garbut, and S. V. White, alone, or in the presence of Mr. Beecher, in the adjoining room, and there give to them the facts in my possession which long ago convinced me Mr. Beecher is an adulterer. I shall only require that these gentlemen shall preserve the names and identifying circumstances secret; and I shall make no request of them for any action in the case, leaving that to their discretion and to yours. Will you accept this offer?" With reference to this offer, the Boston Journal, which has always been favorably disposed toward Mr. Beecher, comments as follows: "Here was an offer on Mr. Bowen's part to go before a committee of Mr. Beecher's friends, and in Mr. Beecher's presence, and give the names and particulars which have been sought for with so much appearance of eagerness. The offer was fair to all parties; why was it not accepted? Until this question can be satisfactorily answered, a cloud must rest upon the sincerity of the Plymouth Church proceedings. Here were the 'bottom facts' almost reached, but Mr. Beecher refused to go farther. Why?"

For a few years past, numerous wealthy men of Boston have been quietly changing their residences,—that is, while continuing to do business in this city, they have acquired legal residences in neighboring towns, either by the purchase of a country-seat therein, or, in some instances, by simply boarding there for a portion of each year. Owing to this transfer of residence, their personal property has been taxed outside of the city, and, as the towns selected for residence have relatively low rates of taxation, many men have thus managed to save very large sums of money. The Chairman of the Board of Assessors asserts that the city has thus lost in the last seven years over $20,000,000 of taxable property, seven-eighths of which still belong to men who are for all practical purposes (taxation only excepted) residents of Boston. Legislation is asked for to remedy this state of affairs, but it is difficult to understand how legislation can be made efficient without becoming inquisitorial and arbitrary to an excessive degree. In fact, the whole question of the government of great cities is involved in this matter, and we are glad to find that pecuniary interests are likely at last to bring this important subject to the attention of the men by whom it must be settled, but who have heretofore seemed indifferent to its importance and its urgency.

The Senate, early last week, passed the Colorado Bill, which provides for the organization of a Constitutional Convention, and for the formation of a State government in that Territory. The bill had already passed the House. The Senate also passed a bill for extending the time (until Feb. 1, 1877) for the redemption of lands held by the United States under the several acts levying direct taxes; the West Point Appropriation Bill, increasing the amounts appropriated by the House; a bill appropriating $75,000 for the St. Louis Custom House; another, regulating the leave of absence of army officers; and a bill which came up from the House, "recommending the people of the several States to assemble in their respective counties or towns on the approaching Centennial Anniversary, and to cause to be delivered a historical sketch of the county or town from its formation, copies of which be filed in the County Clerk's office and in the Library of Congress, so that a complete record may thus be had of the progress of the Republic." In addition to this last bill, the House also passed an appropriation of $400,000 for building a Custom House at Memphis; a bill amendatory of an act relating to the filing of railroad reports; and a bill to encourage the growth of timber on Western prairies. The House also passed a resolution of impeachment against W. W. Belknap, Secretary of War, and appointed a Committee to notify the Senate, to prepare articles of impeachment, and to conduct the case before the Senate. The principal debate of the week took place in the House upon a motion to restore to the pension-roll the names dropped therefrom because of the sympathy of their owners with the Southern rebellion.

In the Associated Press report of the proceedings of the Senate one day last week appears the announcement, "Various bills passed," but of the character of these bills we are told nothing. It is not difficult, however, to imagine their character; they were undoubtedly "private" bills, of interest only to those whose names appeared in them, and to the members of Congress who proposed them. Of the great number of these private bills passed at every session of Congress, people in general have little conception. One member alone has already introduced during the present session no less than forty, and other members have introduced almost as many. These private bills are mainly responsible for the maintenance of lobbyists, and are also the source of not a little existing political corruption. It is these bills, so lavishly introduced by Southern members of Congress, which have helped to float the assertion that the South is in favor of "the old flag and an appropriation." Under any rational system of legislation, 99 per cent. of these bills would have no place in Congressional proceedings, but would be settled by general laws, or, in case of dispute, by judicial proceedings; and the fact that they are not thus provided for, shows how incompetent is the average legislator to perform in an adequate manner the work which he undertakes.

The war in Spain is ended. Don Carlos passed over the frontier into France early last week, and reached England last Saturday. He formally announces that he has withdrawn from the contest at present, and it is to be hoped that hereafter he and his family will cause no more bloodshed by striving for the possession of a throne to which they have never had more than shadowy claims. The Spanish government has already granted amnesty to all Carlists who surrender before the 15th inst. Spain is now at liberty to devote herself to the pacification of Cuba, a task to which—for the benefit of certain American politicians, if not for her own sake—we trust she will proceed at once and with vigor.

Communications.

THE "COMMON FORCE."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I have been reading with much interest the letters from Mr. James, your comments on them, and letters from others which were the results of both. Now I also would like to address you on the subject, though I hardly hope to do more than express my surprise that you see no essential difference between your view and that of Mr. James with respect to the means through which the universal brotherhood is to be reached. And yet let me try.

It is of course evident that, when we shall have a perfect society, creation will reflect the creative perfection. Earnestly desiring this, you say the individual members that must compose society ought to seek self-perfection; while Mr. James objects, on the ground that "the only force at the basis of human affairs is common force." According to you, individual force has to precede social reflection; but, according to Mr. James, the common force has to precede the individual reflection.

You, it seems to me, are pre-Harvey, while Mr. James is post-Harvey. For you, as it were, cry out to each member: "Perfect yourself, that the whole body may be reformed and made beautiful." But Mr. James has learned not only about the circulation of the blood, but that without it the members could have no existence. He, therefore, counter-cries, and proclaims that the blood forms the members, and that the members consume their life-force in vain in trying to reform the body. Mr. James craves that the members should recognize their constant source, and the commonness of their life-force, because he believes that a perfect reformation, an harmonious and enduring strength and beauty, would very speedily result.

Even now, when the Divine beauty is so imperfectly reflected, we say that we see it most in those who are least conscious of self, and who cannot therefore be striving to attain to self-perfection. Phenomenal individuality is full of self-assertion, but I imagine that the true, the lasting individuality, which Mr. James expects instead of the present transient phase, will not be in the least self-conscious, while it will delight all beholders. True individuality will be thoroughly conscious of the individuality of others, but it will not see its own. I cordially unite with you and Mr. James in craving a perfect society, and am,

Truly yours,

A. D.

NEW YORK CITY, Feb. 23.

[It is true that we differ from Mr. James, when he says that "the only force at the bottom of human affairs is common force"; for we affirm common force and individual force at the same time. "Common" to what, if not to all individuals? There is no question of precedence, but of existence; is there, or is there not, a veritable individual force? Mr. James thinks he can have society without it; we think that the bare fact of society presupposes and implies it; and we find that Mr. James does actually presuppose and imply it, even while he imagines he is dispensing with it. All we seek to preserve is the roundness and wholeness of the truth, as opposed to a partial and fragmentary view of it.—ED.]

THE RELIGIONS OF PERFECTION AND OF DEGRADATION.

MR. EDITOR:—

Your definition of religion, "the effort of man to perfect himself," to my mind is not quite correct. It is as often the effort of man to degrade himself as to perfect himself; at least history shows this to be the fact. I should say that "the effort of man to perfect himself" is comprehensive of the highest, the most perfect religion possible. We must accept the meaning of the word religion as it is most commonly used; namely, as the word that signifies the acts of man that are prompted by his feelings concerning his spiritual existence. There is in man a desire, a longing, so strong, so prominent, so predominating, that it justly entitles itself to a place as a faculty, an attribute of his nature, which can be called most properly a religious faculty.

Man has other faculties or attributes (which are very well classified by phrenologists) all of which are the sum total of the man; also he is a sympathetic being, surrounded by psychological influences. Now as his predominating faculty and his psychological surroundings, so is he (or, I might say, as is his psychological surroundings, so are his faculties. I suppose properly that the psychological surroundings are the soil from out of which grows the spirit). The man that has grown up free from hereditary taint, with well-balanced faculties, with mathematical and moral axioms and reason, the governing principles of life, will be the man with the most perfect religion. His erect, commanding manhood, facing God or Nature, and man, life, death, and eternity will be a lasting monument to the fact that the most perfect religion lies in the effort of man to perfect himself; while the story of the self-degrading religious performances—the self-torturing of mind and body of the people of those idolatrous nations of Asia, Africa, and the islands of the sea—is a lasting record on the page of history that tells of the effort of man to degrade himself.

Between these two extremes lie all the varied religions of the world; and religion is the proper name for each and every variety; and every belief or act that satisfies the longings or desires of this faculty in the mind is religion to that being, no matter what form it may take. Thus it is that religion is the effort of man both to perfect and degrade himself. And such is the Janus-faced religion of the Orthodox Church of to-day. Our degradation, as set forth by Mr. James, clearly runs into annihilation; while the other—yours, Mr. Abbot—takes the individual man nearer and nearer to God. H. D. S.

MILL RIVER, Mass., Feb. 6, 1876.

[Probably our correspondent does not mean that even the "idolatrous nations of Asia," etc., intend to degrade themselves by their religion. That may be, and often has been, the actual effect of religious belief and practice; but it cannot be the conscious intention. In other words, all religion, so far as it is sincere, aims at perfection, not at degradation; and what is wanted is a more intelligent conception of what constitutes it.—ED.]

THE "RECOMPENSE OF REWARD."

TIPPECANOE CITY, Ohio, }
Feb. 21, 1876. }

EDITOR INDEX:—

After reading Mr. James' third letter, and before reading your reply, I wrote on a piece of paper before me the following: "Then society is made of individual selves, and selves are nothings. Society is then one gigantic Nothing, and should be represented this way: 0+0+0+0+0=0."

Then I paraphrased a well-known verse as follows:

"This world's a dream, an empty show
For man's illusion given;
The smiles of joy, the tears of woe,
Deceitful shine, deceitful flow;
There's nothing true, but Nothing."

This may be: who knows? At death I think we shall waken up with a little more light on the subject. This I can't help hoping for. But if not, we all shall "sleep the sleep that knows no waking," and be as happy as he who feels and knows nothing; and man can never be that elevated intelligence he has so longed for, but must content himself with being but one unconscious block in the great pyramid of intelligence which Nature appears to be intent on erecting. A work worthy of a God!

After reading your reply, I wrote the following:—

"If Mr. James and Mr. Abbot could only see that 'self' is the great central magnet, drawing man on to perfection—that God, in the nature of things, has not made or required man to act without regard to himself! He should have an eye to 'the recompense of reward,' and, if his instinct or moral nature does not hit upon the best way of securing such reward, then the reformer should 'tug away at man's intellectual suspenders' until he is elevated to such a height that he can see the obvious truth, that 'self interests and social interests are the same.' That would be encouraging. Mr. James appears not to see self at all, yet he appears troubled how to get clear of it; Mr. Abbot sees the great Social must be made up of selves, and, if the parts are not perfect, the whole cannot be. But he does not see the great truth that God, in the nature of things, has made it impossible for man to act without regard to himself. Hence he keeps tugging away at the wrong suspenders. But I would by no means insinuate that he is not, in the main, doing a master's work in the right way." E. L. CRANE.

[Since our chief endeavor has been to show that "self interests and social interests are the same," and that, in living for the interests of mankind, each man lives for his own as well and achieves the highest perfection attainable, we do not see what Mr. Crane adds to this statement, unless it be an insistence on the necessity of "having an eye to reward." Perhaps we are in error in thinking that the desire of personal reward drives out the unselfish spirit, and necessarily obscures the claim of social interests to our supreme attention; but we at least perceive that whoever lives for all mankind lives for himself so far as he is a part of mankind. Does not this cover all that Mr. Crane intends to say? If not, we shall be glad to hear from him again. One cannot easily defend himself against a charge of blindness; but the only way to convince him that he is blind, is to state exactly what he has failed to see. Abstractly, we concede that we may be as blind as the eyeless fishes in the Mammoth Cave; but we shall more cheerfully concede that we are, when furnished with a precise description of the objects so visible to our critic-seer.—ED.]

A LADY'S FOUR QUESTIONS.

GROTON, N. Y., Jan. 25, 1876.

DEAR EDITOR:—

While reading some of your articles in THE INDEX, a few questions have been suggested to my mind upon which I would like to know your opinion, if you can reasonably grant me a reply at your own convenience. It is quite possible that you have already answered these questions, substantially; but an editor's patience may be supposed to reach twice around the world, and tie in a good, generous, double bow-knot.

Yours with profound gratitude and esteem,

[This letter was "not intended for publication," and so we suppress the name of the writer; but we could not possibly make so graceful an introduction as by printing the above, with its humorous and characteristically feminine metaphor. The questions follow:—

"1. Are some people morally better with belief in Christianity than they would be with belief in Free Religion?"

"2. Ought we to make any effort to shake the faith of our friends who are perfectly satisfied with Christianity?"

"3. If the individuality (or 'atomicity') of the soul is an argument in favor of its continuance in being, does the eternity of God argue its existence as an individual or atom?"

"4. Should you become convinced that the actual truth respecting God and immortality would, if known and universally received, tend to lower the moral status of mankind, would that fact lessen your reverence for truth itself?"

We must make our answers brief:—

1. No: because they could not believe in Free Religion without thereby believing in a better morality than the Christian,—which could not, of course, tend to make them morally worse than they now are.

2. It is no part of good morals or good manners to be intrusive. But how could the world ever grow wiser, if teachers forbore to instruct children—who are perfectly satisfied with their ignorance? Nothing but ignorance is ever "perfectly satisfied": knowledge, like Oliver Twist, always "asks for more."

3. Not at all.

4. If we should become idiotic, probably our reverence for truth would be lessened; but we should have to be pretty far advanced towards idiocy in order to become convinced of the "fact" supposed. Morality depends on social, not theological, considerations.—ED.]

NO DANGER FROM CATHOLICISM.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

Your correspondent "H." asks whether I do not "believe that, if the (Catholic) Church ever acquires power, the Pope, as head of the Church, would crush each and every liberal, each and every INDEX, each and every free school, till none but loyal Catholics were left."

I would say in reply that I believe that, if the earth should suddenly cease to revolve in its orbit, and fly off on a tangent toward the sun, very serious consequences would result to the unfortunate inhabitants thereof. I do not believe in the possibility of the one occurrence any more than I do of the other.

When we of this generation have lived to see the complete overthrow of the Pope's temporal authority, the weakening of the bonds of the Church in all nominally Catholic countries, until France tolerates and honors a Renan, and Spain tolerates and honors a Castelar; when we have lived to see the statesmanship of Bismarck hold back with firm hand the Ultramontane influence of the Catholic Church in Germany, and everywhere the State declaring its supremacy, while the Church is powerless to resist, it seems to me that one must have wonderfully little faith in the inherent vitality of free institutions to consider, even as the remotest possibility, the acquisition of power in our own country by the Catholic Church.

There are no facts or figures which I have ever seen that excited my fears of such a possibility. Everywhere during the last decade has the secular idea been gaining ground, and one by one are the temporary advantages which have been granted to the Church in a few localities by unscrupulous politicians of both parties, overthrown.

Whenever any question involving the integrity of our public school system has been raised in the Catholic interest, the people have overwhelmingly sustained the schools and rebuked their opponents. It was so in New York and New Jersey, where the Catholic influence is most powerful, and it will be so wherever the question is raised. Intelligent Catholic laymen all over the country are sustaining the schools and the State against the dictum of Pope and priest, and the Church is too weak to crush this internal opposition, or expel the recalcitrant members.

Possibly my answer to your correspondent's question might be in the affirmative, did I admit the possibility of the consummation suggested by his "if"; although when we see in the Catholic nations of Europe constant progress toward the separation of Church and State, the toleration of other religions, and the steady advancement of civilization, I think we might logically conclude that it is safe to have faith in the sufficiency, under all circumstances, of the eternal law of evolution, in politics and government as well as in the material universe.

The radical thinker surely ought to be wise enough to see that all organizations—churches or what not—are mere forms, through which, if it may, over which, if it must, civilization advances, conquering and forever to conquer.

Yours faithfully, LEWIS G. JAMES.

ORTHODOX "READERS" IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

SOUTH MOUNTAIN, Idaho, Jan. 3, 1876.

MR. FRANCIS E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—In your paper you take strong grounds for the secularizing of the public schools. This all liberals strongly favor, and you are doing great service in this cause. You have our heartiest sympathy and support, and may you succeed in your gallant effort!

But I would respectfully call your attention to one thing you seem to have overlooked, and is a grievance to the liberals on the coast. I refer to the use of such books in our schools as Willson's series of Readers, published by Harper & Brothers. Why banish the Bible and retain these Readers? We may as well retain the Bible. It seems to me the Catholics are right to attempt to divide the school fund when their children are forced to read and use such Readers.

It is too much that the bigotry and fanaticism of Christianity cannot content itself with ostracizing us liberals, but it must force on our children books overflowing with pious twaddle and silly balderdash. The commonest occurrences of life give ministers an opportunity to "point a moral," and we can endure it; but to mix knowledge with superstition under the guise of Readers is a little too much.

Please give us your views on this subject in THE INDEX, and greatly oblige

FRANK LESSMANN.

[Mr. Lessmann justly complains of such Readers. The use of them in public schools, however, is the result of local school regulations, not of State enactments; and this fact throws the responsibility for their introduction on each particular community which tolerates such encroachments of Orthodoxy. An earnest Liberal League could do much to abate this nuisance in their own neighborhood; and there is little likelihood of any reform in this direction until the liberals combine to protect themselves.—ED.]

THE "FREE RELIGION BELL."

DEAR INDEX:—

At a recent meeting of a literary society connected with one of our colleges, a member read Bungay's poem, "Creeds of the Bells." At the close of the recitation he improvised, by request, the following stanza:—

"Ho, ye who love man's liberty to tell!
In loyal tones pealed forth a bell.
'Progression is the law to-day;
Progress lights the Eternal way.
Yet, whatsoever ye leave behind,
Bring peace, good-will, to all mankind.
Love well, Love well, Love well, Love well,
Sweetly chimed the Free Religion Bell."

DIVINITY HALL, Cambridge, Feb. 8, 1876.

MR. BRADFORD'S LECTURE.

BEAVER FALLS, Pa., Feb. 21, 1876.

ED. INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Rev. A. B. Bradford, of Enon Valley in this State, favored us with a rare treat by reading in my parlors to a select company his masterly lecture in favor of secular schools, the taxation of church property, and the maintenance of a purely secular government. The profound reasoning and boldness with which Mr. Bradford presented the "Demands of Liberalism" entitles him to rank among the first advocates of freethought.

J. E. EMERSON.

[We should be very glad to receive Mr. Bradford's paper for publication, for the high quality of his work is well known.—ED.]

THE WORD "REVEREND."

NEWPORT, R. I., Feb. 21, 1876.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Now that the judiciary committee of the Privy Council, speaking through the Lord Chancellor, has decided in the case of Peet that the word "Reverend" is not a title, but only an epithet, a mark of respect and reverence, and nothing more, and not exclusively vested in the Church of England, I hope to see your editorial contributor, Mr. Voysey, follow the example of the rector of Little Petherick in Cornwall, and drop the prefix.

Very respectfully,

SAM'L R. HONEY.

THE FOLLOWING extract from the Catholic Times indicates the growth of freethought principles in the very home of religious bigotry and political serfdom: "The grave scandal recently presented in the Assize Courts of Rome gives pain and anxiety to every honest man. There are men now in the city of the Popes, where but a few years ago religion was all in all, who refuse to take the oath because they openly declare themselves atheists and unbelievers, and the magistracy blushes not to say that, 'an oath is a mere formality which does not bind the conscience.' It seems like a dream, but it is a painful reality, that the actual rulers of the once Holy City have now gone to a depth below Paganism itself which recognized, at all events, an avenging God, and taught that it was easier to find a city without foundations than a people without religion. . . . But the Italian government officially approves such infidelity and unbelief, inasmuch as it allows its magistrates to declare that an oath is a mere formality that does not bind the conscience. It is difficult to conceive anything more scandalous pronounced from the very seat of judgment than that the solemn oath instituted by law in criminal proceedings for the protection of truth should be declared a mere formality, and that too by a State which declares that the Catholic religion is its basis, and offers itself to the world as the guardian of the august head of religion."

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

BLIND.

Bars of crimson and amber,
Dashes of purple and gold,
Wrought in the western glory
That is old as the world is old—
Falling and deepening ever,
Trembling with splendor untold?

Oh, eyes that are weary of seeing
The brownness and bareness of earth,
Oh, eyes that are heavy with revels,
And know only tears of mirth!
Gaze long on the beauty vouchsafed you,
That giveth the soul a new birth.

Crimson, say you, and amber?
Ah! crimson seems warm, like your love;
And amber I fancy delicious
As sweet-scented airs of a grove;
And the gold and the purple are surely
In symphonies' souls interwove.

How fair must the hour be that gladdens
The world with such beauty supreme;
How blessed the eyes that behold it,
Though gazing hot tears between!
Rejoice, be ye glad of the vision;
I only can see in a dream.

The time would be long, love, without thee,
While in bitter life-darkness I bide;
The way would be rugged and thorny,
I know not what pain would betide;
Love's magic doth change hours to moments,
Rough places and thorns it doth hide.

Loving, untiring magician,
Doth thy patient heart never quail?
From mine eyes, if for only a moment
Of rapture, were lifted the veil,
And I might see thee—all unheeded
The Heavens might flush and grow pale.

CARROLL GODFREY.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 4.

F. Plimpton, $3.20; R. R. Atchison, 50 cents; H. Duhme, $3.20; E. S. Brown, 75 cents; Pardon Armstrong, $3.20; Mrs. M. Westphal, $13; W. O. Pisk, $6.40; S. Armstrong, $4; W. B. Winship, 10 cents; C. F. Gard, 25 cents; W. M. Mackey, $1.25; Cash, 80 cents; J. C. Correllus, $6; A. P. Rose, $3.20; A. L. Munroe, $3.20; M. Pierce, $3.20; S. E. Wells, $3.20; F. E. Abbot, $2; C. N. Ertlinger, 10 cents; Kate N. Doggett, $3; Mrs. T. F. Von Arnim, $3.20; E. Wigglesworth, $6.20; S. B. Ring, 3.20; W. P. Atkinson, $3.20; Eben Turk, $3.20; Rufus Tucker, $3.20; Mrs. E. D. Schull, $1.50; S. C. Gale, $3.20; J. L. Smith, $3.20; Mrs. E. L. Saxon, $1; C. J. Rider, $3.20; G. K. Wittington, $3.20; Chas. T. How, $3.25; J. McMahon, $3; A. E. Macomber, $6.40; C. H. Pierce, $13.20; Mrs. Sarah S. Russell, $150; S. B. Zelgler, $2; Wm. Rotch, 10 cents; W. H. Downes, $10; J. H. Clark, $3.20; D. McCallum, $4; A. Grant, $3.25; H. M. Simmons, $1; James Parton, $3.20; D. Ayres, $3.20; E. A. Hodsdon, 30 cents.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

THE LAWS CONCERNING NEWSPAPERS.

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary, considered as wishing to continue the subscription.
2. If subscribers wish their papers discontinued, publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscribers move to other places without informing the publisher, and the paper is sent to the former direction, they are held responsible. Notice should always be given of the removal.
4. If subscribers neglect or refuse to take their papers from the office or place to which they are sent, they are held responsible until they settle bills and give notice to discontinue.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take a paper from the office, or removing and leaving it uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, will be held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers pay in advance, they are bound to give notice to the publisher at the end of their time if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to continue to send it, and the subscribers will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of all arrears, is sent to the publisher.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12	Insertions, 10c per line.
13	25
26	51
52	8

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
To THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen.—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.
Yours truly,
HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX.

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 25 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,

T. W. HIGGINSON,

W. J. POTTER,

W. H. SPENCER,

F. W. NEWMAN,

CHAS. VOYSEY,

A. W. STEVENS,

F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extrads. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. Voysey has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.50
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experiences.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights, Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.00
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Friest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 41 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verses.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	2.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANKS POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	2.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
COONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter; with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE; Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Ordination.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrawska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	2.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUNNING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Comprising: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	2.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.40
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.40
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker.....	8.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	4.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second.....	1.00
Child World. Part First.....	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	3.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	1.50
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	1.50
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	1.50
The Marble Faun.....	1.50
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimania Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals.....	3.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy: A Story.....	.60
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aeronautes. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 1 vol.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 3 vols.....	1.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.D.). What is Judaism for, or a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 3 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 3 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty, both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras.....	1.50
Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Boussais, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Sketches from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul's Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism.....	.25
Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson, with an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Truist Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged In.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTER'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.00
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, &c., With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.50
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT.) Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	6.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.50
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.25
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	9.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER.) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	1.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.00
The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.....	1.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.50
The Newcomes.....	1.50
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.50
The Virginians.....	1.50
Edmond, and Lovell the Widower.....	1.50
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Fanny Hill, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. No. 66, Sketches, Denis Daurat, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	1.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	1.50
Primitive Culture. 1 vol.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	5.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTTER (SARAH.) Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.00
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.00
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES.) The Sling and the Staff. Vols. I and V, each.....	1.50
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	1.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN.) American Religion.....	1.25
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	2.00
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.00
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.00
Success and its Conditions.....	1.00
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.00
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Girls.....	1.50
Real Other Girls.....	1.50
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I. METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANCHI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$2.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

MORSE'S SUMNER.

Cabinet Size Bust. Price $10. Address B. H. MORSE, 25 Bromfield St., Boston.

THE AMERICAN EDITION

OF

MONCURE D. CONWAY'S

SACRED ANTHOLOGY,

A BOOK OF ETHNICAL SCRIPTURES, has just been published, and will be sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $4.00.

Address THE INDEX,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

Boston, Mass.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Beade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... 25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor. Irenaeus the author of the Fourth Gospel. The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century

Exposed. By George Reber. 12mo.

Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

The author here discusses a number of the inconsistencies of traditional and authentic

Church history, and proposes solutions after the manner of the most modern German

Rationalists, though with original and often startling theories of his own.

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER

AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Including Portrait of

Shelley and View of his Tomb. 60

pp. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

"The 'Pioneer Period' was almost wholly taken up with socialistic experiments; and of this period Robert Owen was the prophet. Probably very few in this country have any idea of the extent and importance of this movement in England, contemporary with and allied to the Brook Farm and New Harmony experiments in this country. The volume is therefore instructive as well as entertaining reading.... The story is told in a very graphic style.... Mr. Holyoake... is a hard-headed, common-sense Englishman, who sees clearly that it was looseness of thought and building without foundation that caused the ruin of the experiments which he here describes."—New York Nation.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

THREE ESSAYS ON RELIGION.

By JOHN STUART MILL, is now for sale at this office. Price—Two dollars and fifty cts. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address

NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston.

B O O K

Card,

—AND—

Job

PRINTING,

Of all kinds, neatly and promptly executed by

GEORGE H. ELLIS,

1 TREMONT PLACE,

BOSTON.

SUNNY SIDE,

A New Singing Book, prepared expressly for Sabbath Schools of Liberal Churches.

By C. W. WENDTE and H. S. PERKINS.

The words throughout the book have been prepared and selected with great care. Weak sentimentalism as well as crude doctrinal statements have been rigorously excluded from this collection, and it is believed that the literary contents show a higher grade of writers than have ever before appeared in a book of this character. The music, original and selected, is bright, fresh, vigorous, and altogether of a much better class than is usually found in Sunday-school books.

Price in Boards, 35 cents, or $30 per 100.

WM. A. POND & CO., 547 Broadway, New York.

SUNNY SIDE.

THEODORE PARKER:

A Biography. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. With Heliotype Portrait. 1 vol. 8vo. $3.00.

An exceedingly interesting memorial of a very remarkable man—one of the striking figures in American history. Mr. Frothingham has given a large number of Parker's letters and journals not previously published; he has written in the light reflected upon Parker's words and efforts by the momentous events of the last fifteen years, which have brought out in bold relief the sagacity, wisdom, and heroism of Theodore Parker's career; and he has written so candidly, and with so profound an appreciation of Parker's characteristic qualities, that his book is of surpassing interest.

The NEW YORK TRIBUNE closes a four and a half column review of this book by saying: "It holds up a remarkable specimen of robust manliness whose form and lineaments can be studied with equal advantage by friend and foe."

Sent, postage prepaid, on receipt of price. Address THE INDEX,
Tremont Place, Boston.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET of INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 80 cents. Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

THE FALLACIES

OF THE

FREE LOVE THEORY:

OR,

Love Considered as a Religion.

By J. W. PIKE.

This able and conclusive pamphlet contains forty-five pages, is printed with large type on excellent white paper, and will be mailed postpaid on receipt of the very moderate price of TWENTY CENTS. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

PINE GROVE

MINERAL

SPRING WATER.

S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer of Massachusetts, gave a certificate of analysis of this Mineral Water, which contains more than twice as much iron as any other, at Boston, May 26, 1875. Dr. Hayes says: "This water should be classed as an Alkaline Chalybeate, and it is remarkable as containing an organic Salt of Iron (the Creatine), with Sulphate of Iron and Silicate of Soda, and the other constituents of recognized medicinal value. I think that some of this water might be charged with carbonic acid gas to good advantage."

Its effects are alternative—antacid—diuretic—tonic. Alkaline Chalybeate waters have been recommended for hundreds of years by experienced physicians, and it is well known that better and more permanent results have been accomplished, in many cases, than by alkaline and iron pharmaceutical preparations.

Send for Circulars to the Proprietor,

CARL H. HORSCH, M.D.,

Dover, New Hampshire.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

TRACTS.

No. I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton.

No. II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

No. III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. New and enlarged edition, with index and text of important citations.

No. IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published. (Soon ready.)

Of No. I., single copy, mailed, 5 cents; ten for 30 cents; one hundred for $1.50.

Of Nos. II., III., IV., single copy, mailed, 10 cents; ten for 80 cents; one hundred for $3.00.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, a volume made up chiefly of essays and addresses given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. "One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Ednah D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. By W. J. Potter, R. W. Emerson, O. B. Frothingham, C. H. Malcom, Celia Burleigh, D. A. Wasson, S. Longfellow, C. D. B. Mills, F. E. Abbot, I. M. Wise, Julia W. Howe, C. A. Bartol, R. D. Owen, W. C. Gannett, T. W. Higginson, J. Weiss, Lucy Stone, A. B. Alcott, D. A. Wasson, F. E. Sanborn, W. Phillips, H. Seaver, Lucretia Mott.

424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50.

Sent to Office of THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

this respect, all that the intelligent padre and Bishop McQuaid said of the efficiency of properly exercised parental authority in keeping sectarian fervor vivid.

Without paternal boots of considerable thickness, no sectarian belief can be made hereditary in any family for more than one generation or two. On this alone depends the difference between what we see, in this respect, in Europe and in this country. The letter of the law, with regard to paternal authority, is, in this country, pretty much what it is in Europe—Draconian. But in Europe it is enforced with Draconian rigor, and therefore in Europe sectarianism is, with very few exceptions, strictly hereditary. In America the Draconian rigor of the law becomes an empty spectre in presence of the common sense of the people. Parents do not avail themselves of power which the law gives to them upon their children, who, as soon as they reach puberty, are here, in most respects, practically as free as if they had reached majority. This is right so far as it goes; and if a change is demanded it is the letter of the law that should be accommodated to the manners of the people, and not the contrary. The authority of the parent upon the child is legitimate as long as the child is a child; but even then it should not be used in enforcing upon a youthful mind the sectarian fancies of another time and of less happy countries. Against such a tyranny we, men, will protect the consciences of our fellow-citizens, whether children or not, whether the children of Catholics or the children of other persons. The declamations of Bishop McQuaid on the sanctity of parental authority and the liberty of parental conscience from State interference are very fine. But in substance what does all that mean? That monks and nuns shall have the power of enforcing Roman Catholic beliefs and practices on the children of Roman Catholics through the whip, the college prison, and the bread-and-water pittance, just as is done in France and elsewhere; and that if the children revolt and run away, the Protestant sheriff (notwithstanding the beautiful preface about the absence of State interference) shall be required to catch the fugitives and bring them back to the detested abode.

BALAM'S PROPHECIES.

BY WILLIAM DENTON.

Balaam, an Eastern soothsayer, is rather singularly elevated into the rank of a true prophet, and his language in the Bible is adduced as proof of its divinity. The Israelites in their travels came to Moab; and the King of Moab, being afraid of them, sent for Balaam to come and curse them. This he at first refused to do, but after much persuasion went to the King of Moab, when he uttered repeated blessings on the people he had been paid to curse.

Who informed Moses what was said by Balaam we are not told, but must believe he received it by direct inspiration. He prefaces his prophecy with a false eulogy of the Israelites: "He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perversion in Israel. The Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them. God hath brought them out of Egypt; he hath, as it were, the strength of an unicorn."

And this, too, after the worship of the golden calf; after they had murmured for water, and desired to return to the flesh-pots of Egypt; and after God had said to Moses: "Let me alone that I may destroy them." And God impressed Balaam that "he hath, as it were, the strength of an unicorn!" God Almighty as strong as a rhinoceros!

The prophecy states that Israel's king should be higher than Agag; but how high Agag was we have no means of knowing. From the account, we may suppose him to have been a petty king of the Amalekites, and there would be nothing wonderful in Israel's king being higher than he.

"There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth."—Num. xxiv., 17.

The star and sceptre are here supposed to denote some illustrious king or ruler, and this prophecy is said by Bishop Newton to have been fulfilled in David, for we are told in Samuel that "David smote Moab." But where is the proof that the account in Samuel is true? Or, supposing it to be true, who can tell that the prophecy was written before Moab was smitten? Granting that the whole was just as recorded, what was there wonderful in foretelling that one nation would smite the borders of another nation in the space of several hundred years? It would have been much more wonderful if they had not.

The prophecy says nothing about Moab's smiting Israel, and yet the Israelites were the slaves of Moab for eighteen years.—Judges iii., 14.

The same sceptre was to destroy all the children of Sheth. If Sheth means all the sons of Adam, then all mankind were to be destroyed by it. If it does not mean that, what does it mean?

"And Edom shall be a possession: Seir also shall be a possession for his enemies, and Israel shall do valiantly. Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and destroy him that remaineth of the city." (18th and 19th verses.) Edom and Seir were to be possessions for his enemies. Whose enemies? The enemies of Israel, or the enemies of Edom and Seir? If the enemies of Israel, then they had possession already; if the enemies of Edom and Seir, the same prophecy might be made regarding every country then existing, for nothing was more common than for countries to become the possession of their enemies, and it needed no prophet to foretell such a fate.

The prophecy states that out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and destroy him that remaineth of the city. It would have been strange if a nation had produced no one who had dominion, and nearly as strange if he had not destroyed some city; and since no time is fixed, no individual pointed out, and no city mentioned, Balaam was quite safe in making the prophecy.

Some think the prophecy had an ultimate fulfillment in Jesus Christ; and doubtless it refers to him just as much as it does to David, and to Martin Luther as much as either.

"The Kenite shall be wasted till Asshur shall carry them away captive." Whether this was fulfilled or not, the Bible does not enlighten us.

"Ships shall come from the coast of Chittim, and shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict Eber, and he shall also perish forever."

What country is meant by Chittim nobody knows. Some think it refers to the coast of Cyprus; others to Italy; and others still to the eastern coast of the Mediterranean. If by Asshur is meant Assyria, which is generally acknowledged by commentators, and Chittim was in or near the Mediterranean, then it was impossible for the ships of Chittim to afflict Assyria, for to do so they must have doubled the Cape of Good Hope, and navigated the shallow water of the Euphrates in ships large enough to accomplish such a voyage. But Assyria was not circumnavigated till centuries after Assyria ceased to be a nation. Of Eber there is nothing to be learned, either in the Bible or out of it.

So much for Balaam's prophecies.

Newton, commenting on them, says: "It appears that Balaam was a prophet divinely inspired, or he never could have foretold so many distant events, some of which are fulfilling in the world at this time."

When viewed by eyes divested of Orthodox spectacles, it is very clear that the prophecies in the Bible attributed to Balaam are altogether unworthy the name of prophecy; and that cause must be weak that requires to be established by such evidence.

JUDGE TAFT CALLED TO THE CABINET.

HIS NOMINATION AS SECRETARY OF WAR.

Judge Taft is a lawyer of wide experience and great ability. No man in South-western Ohio is better known or more highly respected. He served for a short time on the bench of the Superior Court in Cincinnati, and delivered a minority opinion in reference to the Bible in the schools. This created a prejudice against him in certain quarters, although the opinion of his colleagues was subsequently overruled and his own sustained by the Supreme Court on appeal. Last summer he was a prominent candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor of Ohio, and he would undoubtedly have carried the Convention against Gov. Hayes if it had not been for the school and temperance questions. His strength was in the cities; the Cincinnati and Cleveland delegations united in his support, but the country delegates urged that although his decision on the school question might be for the best interest of the common schools, it would be impossible to make their constituents understand his position. On the eve of the Convention Gov. Hayes telegraphed to one of the delegates: "I cannot allow my name to be used against Judge Taft. He is an able and pure man, and a sound Republican. I would not accept a nomination obtained by a contest with him." The Republican leaders, however, felt that it would be unwise to nominate a man whose record on two important issues would have to be explained on the stump, and Judge Taft's name was withdrawn after 186 votes had been cast for him. He explained his views on the school question at a meeting held in the evening to ratify the nomination of Gov. Hayes. "The division of the school fund among the churches or sects," he said, "would be as fatal to our school system as the dissolution of our political Union would be to our political power. Without our common schools our liberties are endangered, our ballots dangerous. I believe that they who would now divide the schools will sooner or later be satisfied to leave religious instruction and worship to the family and church, while the State attends to the great duty of making this education universal through the great system of common schools." Judge Taft took an active part in the canvass. With the single exception of last year's campaign, however, he has studiously kept out of politics, and has devoted all his time and energy to his profession.—New York Tribune, March 8.

WORSHIP OF THE GOLDEN CALF.—What we need is a higher and more exacting public morality, severer judgments upon lapses in honorable conduct, sharper self-criticism, the elevation of the tone of business conduct, the private social punishment of political offenders, and the denial to a man of a leading seat in the church or in society who does not come with clean hands. The only question is, How are we to do the things required? So long as the rich man—no matter how bad his public life, no matter that he may be known to every member of the church as a bribe-taker and public plunderer—is received with open arms in any church to which he offers himself for membership, how can we expect a higher tone in business, social, or public life? Now, to our thinking, the very basis of all our present private and public rottenness has its seat in the dishonesty of the churches. There are but few of our readers who do not know as well as we do, that the shortcomings of the poor members of churches are visited with stern punishment, while the sins of the rich members are passed over in silence. We remember a case which made a sensation some twenty-five years ago. A woman was brought up for discipline in the old John Street Methodist Church. She was charged with the reading of novels. She admitted her heinous offence, and was either censured or expelled, we forget which. A low fellow among the members asked her who were the publishers of the novels which she read. She answered that the publishers were the Harper Brothers. This low fellow moved that the Harpers, who were members of the church, be disciplined for publishing novels. He was "sat upon" immediately by the whole body of deacons. There was one law for the poor woman and another for the rich publishers. So long as the churches are corrupt and subservient, can we expect to see a high standard of honor among business men, faithful performances of duty by public officers, or a higher social tone? While the teachers of morality bow them down in worship before the Golden Calf, can they expect their pupils to do otherwise?—N. Y. Dispatch.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 11.

Geo. H. Francis, $3.20; L. G. Ware, $3.20; B. Stickney, $1; Sam'l Graham, $2; Wm. Green, $3.20; D. Muncey, $3.20; David Wright, $8; H. Lieber, $3.20; W. Griswold, $1.20; A. Warren, $2.44; H. Kiest, $3.20; J. A. Stevens, $3.20; H. O. Orth, 35 cents; H. C. Baker, 10 cents; W. A. Abbott, $3.20; J. Casson, $3; J. Asmann, 75 cents; D. C. Fox, 10 cents; W. B. Clark, $2.20; G. W. Park, $3.20; C. W. Pierce, $13.20; Photius Fisk, $3; Aaron Skinner, 75 cents; M. P. Thurston, 25 cents; E. Barth, 50 cents; C. H. Darrow, $2; Cash, $1.40; C. Doerflinger, $1.30; H. S. Hunnewell, $6.40; J. R. Hawley, $3.40; C. Truesdale, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

RECEIVED.

Books.

THE MOVEMENTS AND HABITS OF CLIMBING PLANTS. By Charles Darwin, M. A., F. R. S., etc. Second Edition, Revised. With Illustrations. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876.

THE NATURE OF LIGHT, with a General Account of Physical Optics. By Dr. Eugene Lommel, Professor of Physics in the University of Erlangen. With 188 Illustrations, etc. New York: D. Appleton & Co. [International Scientific Series.]

FILTH-DISEASES AND THEIR PREVENTION. By John Simon, M.D., F.R.C.S., Chief Medical Officer of the Privy Council and of the Local Government Board of Great Britain. First American Edition. Printed under the Direction of the State Board of Health of Massachusetts. Boston: James Campbell. 1876.

THE INDIAN SAINT; or, Buddha and Buddhism. A Sketch, Historical and Critical. By Charles D. B. Mills. Northampton, Mass.: Journal and Free Press Office. 1876.

THE PROTECTION OF MAJORITIES; or, Considerations Relating to Electoral Reform. With other Papers. By Josiah Phillips Quincy. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1876.

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigma of Christianity. St. John never in Asia Minor; Irenaeus the Author of the Fourth Gospel; The Frauds of the Churchmen of the Second Century Exposed. By George Reber. New York: Charles F. Somerby. 1876.

TEXT-BOOK OF PROSE; from Burke, Webster, and Bacon. With Notes and Sketches of the Authors' Lives. For use in Schools and Classes. By the Rev. Henry N. Hudson. Boston: Ginn Brothers. 1876.

THIRTY DISCUSSIONS Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. Bennett. New York: D. M. Bennett. 1876.

Pamphlets and Periodicals.

MRS. LIMBER'S RAFFLE; or, a Church Fair and its Victim; A Short Story. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876.

THE COTTON STATES IN THE SPRING AND SUMMER OF 1875. By Charles Nordhoff. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

THE LITTLE JOANNA. A Novel. By Kamba Thorpe. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876.

FOUR-LORR AND FAIRY TALES. By W. A. Leonard. Bristol (Eng.): Arrowsmith, 11 Quay St. 1874.

SERMONS BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM: "Knowledge and Faith," New Series, No. 14; "Infidelity," No. 15; "Religion and Childhood," No. 16. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1876.

SERMONS BY JOHN W. CHADWICK: "Self-Respect," February; "The Higher Reverence," March. New York: Charles F. Somerby. 1876.

SERMONS BY THE REV. CHARLES VOYSEY: "The Burial Strife," Dec. 5; "Society and the Individual," Dec. 12; "Doubt and Dissent," Dec. 19; "Getting On," Dec. 26; "The Light of the World," Jan. 2; "Protestant Safeguards," Jan. 9, 16, 23; "The Fear of Death," Jan. 30.

PUBLICATIONS OF THOMAS SCOTT, ESQ., 11 The Terrace, Farquhar Road, Upper Norwood, London, S.E.—"What is Truth?"—"On Inspiration."—"Dialogues Concerning Natural Religion"; No. II. By David Hume.—Signs of the Times for February.

THOMAS PAINE. An Essay before the Minneapolis Liberal League, Jan. 16, 1876. By Frank J. Mead. Published by the League. 1876.

A CENTENNIAL SERMON IN MEMORY OF THOMAS PAINE, Feb. 6, 1876. By Rev. W. E. Copeland. Lincoln, Neb.: 1876.

THE FUTURE GREAT CITY OF THE WORLD. By J. W. Scott. Second Edition. Edited by F. J. Scott. Toledo, Ohio: 1876.

THE CLAIMS OF CAPITAL CONSIDERED. By William Brown. Montreal: John Lovell.

CUPID'S YOKES. By E. H. Heywood. Princeton, Mass.: 1876.

ERRORS OF AMERICAN STATESMEN; Possible Impeachment of Grant. By Salvador. New York: 1876.

THIRD REPORT OF THE Newton Home for Orphan and Destitute Girls. Boston: 1876.

ANNUAL REPORT OF Northwestern Branch, National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. 1875.

UNITARIAN REVIEW, February, 1876. Boston: L. C. Bowles.

THE WESTERN, January and February. St. Louis: Western Publishing Association.

PENN MONTHLY, February and March. Philadelphia: Penn Monthly Association.

HERALD OF HEALTH, February and March. New York: Wood & Holbrook.

THE SANITARIAN, February. New York: McDivitt, Campbell & Co.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 16, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
 OTAVIUS BROOKS BROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
 VOTSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
 DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York,	$5.00
Mar. 13.	" M. Einstein, Tituville,	4.00
" "	" E. Whicher, Boston,	5.00
" "	" J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.,	1.00

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

AS REPORTED above, Mr. Kilgore has received the first subscription to the fund for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, just in season for acknowledgment in this issue of THE INDEX. We hope it will prove to be the first of a long list. Mr. Kilgore writes: "Perhaps you will see fit to extract a word from Mr. A.'s letter, it is so good. 'I give myself the pleasure of handing you enclosed $5.00 for the good work'—has the true ring. Time will prove it to be the most honorable money ever expended, and his children's children will be proud of it." P. S.—Three other subscriptions have also just been reported.

MR. UNDERWOOD'S lecture this week on "Modern Scientific Materialism" will command deserved attention as a very able and careful paper. If we desired to offer any criticism, it would be that his premises seem to us to be those of a purely subjective idealism, and not to warrant the assumption of the objective existence of any "material" world at all. But we desire only to thank Mr. Underwood for favoring THE INDEX with so fine a statement of a philosophy which, even if not the whole truth, certainly presents a part of the truth, to which very imperfect justice is still done.

THE ACQUISITION of an accomplished lady correspondent in England, the first of whose weekly "English Sketches" will be found in another column, is an event upon which we must specially congratulate the readers of THE INDEX. Mrs. Besant has already earned a high reputation at home, both as a popular lecturer and as one of the most talented writers for the London National Reformer, Charles Bradlaugh's vigorous and fearless journal; and Mr. Moncure D. Conway, some months since, drew in the Cincinnati Commercial a most charming portrait of her as she appeared before an English audience (a portrait which, by the way, he himself assured us fell far short of the truth). Wholly unsolicited, and moved by generous friendship for THE INDEX, she offered a few weeks ago to write these letters regularly for our columns, and we accepted the offer with alacrity and gratitude. That our readers will appreciate the favor so kindly conferred on them and us, we are assured beforehand. But we wish that the high eulogy she passes on the American people—"You have preserved for us the honor of our common name"—were not so sure to bring the hot blood to their cheeks, as the accumulated disgraces of this evil hour rush to their recollection. Mrs. Besant did not mean to be satirical in the least; but, alas, into what a terrible satire do Schenck and Belknap and their brood turn her innocent and admiring words! Yet she is not wrong—America is indeed sound at the heart; and we shall none of us be the worse to find that high and noble things, despite all evil seeming, are expected of us still as a mere matter of course. If we are knaves and slaves, we shall soon enough be found out; if we are honest freemen, we must do the deeds of honest freemen.

THE PRIESTLY INTIMIDATION OF CATHOLIC PARENTS.

A bill has been recently introduced into the Rhode Island Legislature designed to protect Catholic parents from priestly interference and intimidation. The occasion of its introduction was an affidavit by the father of a Miss De Fray, who swore that the child's mother had been excluded from the sacred rites of the Catholic Church for sending her to the public school, and had been told that the exclusion would be continued as long as she persisted in her rebellion against Church authority. The first section of the bill reads as follows:—

"No person shall hereafter threaten, dissuade, hinder, or obstruct by denouncing, threatening, intimidating, or otherwise interfering with any parent or guardian who may send or wish to send any child under his control to any public school in this State which such child is qualified to enter; nor shall any person, other than a parent or guardian, attempt to hinder or prevent any child from attending a public school from which such child shall not have been expelled, or which he is not prohibited from attending in consequence of some law or regulation of such school."

The third section imposes a fine of fifty dollars for each and every offence of the kind specified in the first section.

On this proposed law the New York Independent comments as follows:—

"The best thing to be done with this proposition is to lay it on the table and then leave it there. As a law it would be an outrage to religious liberty and a disgrace to the State of Rhode Island. If Catholic parents choose to be influenced by any threatened denial of the privileges of the Church, or by any spiritual anathemas of the Catholic priesthood in respect to the question of sending their children to the public school, then so be it. This is their business, and with it the State can have nothing to do without exceeding its own province. This is a free country for Catholics as well as Protestants; and, hence, no law should attempt to provide any protection for Catholic parents against the Church influences of their priests. The question is one which they must settle between themselves, and any regulation of it by the civil power would be simply an act of despotism. Law can supply no remedies for the victims of superstition. It must assume their competency to take care of themselves. Nor can it justly interfere with the right of any one, be he priest or layman, to denounce and oppose the public school system, and do what he can, without any act of violence, to induce parents to send their children to private rather than to public schools."

The general principle on which the Independent rests these criticisms,—namely, the impropriety of State interference in the internal regulation of Church affairs,—is undeniably a sound one; and the Independent evidently intends to apply this principle in all fairness to the case in question. If there were no civil rights involved—if it were simply a case in which purely ecclesiastical penalties had been threatened for purely ecclesiastical offences,—there could be no reasonable objection to the Independent's solution of the difficulty. If a Catholic, for instance, should neglect to go to confession, and should in consequence be refused the sacraments by his priest, he ought not to look to the State for redress of such a grievance; for refusal of the sacraments is not a civil wrong, and cannot be recognized as a wrong at all by the courts or the legislature. But the present case is one of more difficulty, and we are inclined to differ from the view of it taken by the Independent. Bearing in mind that this whole school question (as we have shown at length in the lecture published in THE INDEX of last week) involves the rights of three parties, the children, the parents, and the State, let us analyze the case a little more closely, and see whether there is not a manifest justice in some such law as that now proposed in Rhode Island.

1. The right of the child to a rudimentary education is sufficiently regarded, if he actually receives such an education; and it is no concern of the State, in that case, where the education is imparted. The State's duty as the protector of the child's rights is discharged, if it does not permit the child to be deprived of his education by parent or priest. So much as this is required by the principle of "compulsory education," which will yet be recognized as essential to the democratic form of government; but more than this would be inconsistent with it.

2. If the Catholic parent prefers to send his child to a Catholic school, and sees that the child is actually instructed there in secular knowledge to the requisite degree,—if he freely chooses to submit his conscience to the dictation of his priest, and voluntarily surrenders the exercise of his conscience as an independent individual,—then again there is no civil wrong, and no call for the State to interfere.

But suppose that the parent conscientiously believes that his child will receive a better education at the public than at the Catholic school, and therefore feels bound in conscience, for his child's sake, to send him to the public school; then it is an essential part of his "religious liberty" to obey his own individual conscience in this matter, without interference by any outside party. He may still remain a sincere Catholic on the whole; he may believe in all the dogmas and rites of the Catholic Church, and in every other respect intend to submit to its authority; but he has become so far independent as to desire to exercise his "religious liberty" as an individual, in respect to the education of his child. We admit that he is taking the first step outside of Catholicism, and ceases to be wholly faithful to its inexorable logic; nevertheless, he is a citizen, with all a citizen's rights, and, notwithstanding his inconsistency, is entitled to protection in those rights by the State. If only strict logicians could enjoy their civil rights, we fear that there would be very few to enjoy them; but it is necessary to secure their civil rights to all who do not forfeit them by crime.

But, now that the Catholic parent makes this first beginning in the exercise of his individual conscience, and thereby really begins to fit himself for worthy citizenship in a State based wholly on the rights of individuals, the priest steps in, takes advantage of the parent's still undiminished faith in the Catholic doctrines, and threatens to deprive him of Catholic privileges which he still believes essential to his salvation, unless he yields absolute submission to the priest and sends his child to the parochial school. It is of no sort of consequence what particular beliefs the priest appeals to, in the effort to intimidate the parent in the exercise of his "religious liberty," his individual conscience; it is perfectly immaterial whether the priest threatens death to his body or damnation to his soul; the fact remains that the parent is intimidated and coerced in his conscience, and that this attack on his free individuality is a direct and grievous infringement of his most precious rights. A system of religious terrorism is brought to bear with crushing effect on the thoroughly honest, but yet timid and superstitious conscience of the Catholic parent, who has been trained from childhood to believe in the potency of priestly threats and to submit to them as to the voice of God himself; and what wonder is it, if thousands are frightened into a course which their better judgments deplore? This is the case with very many Catholic parents, as is proved by the necessity of the priests' resorting to threats as the only means of filling up and sustaining the Catholic schools. Yet wherein is this religious terrorism, driving parents to send their children to schools which they believe to be less useful than the public schools, worse than a political terrorism which drives colored voters to cast their ballots contrary to the dictates of their own judgment? We cannot consider the one any less a crime against the person than the other. The proof of intimidation in the making of a contract or a will violates it in the courts; a bill has just been introduced in Congress declaring it a penal offence to "intimidate any witness by threatening him with prosecution"; such influences are recognized in many cases as violations of personal liberty; why not in this?

The fact of priestly intimidation of an extreme and most oppressive nature, in many cases, is placed beyond a doubt by explicit evidence. A gentleman of large experience and high social position in this city bears timely testimony to this fact as follows:—

"BOSTON, March 6, 1876.

"Dear Sir,—When listening to your recent lecture in reply to Bishop McQuaid, I regretted not to have stated to you a fact of which I was cognizant as to the schools of New York, in order to show that, however much the priests may desire to instruct the children in their schools, the scholars are forced, contrary to their own wish and that of their parents in many cases, to leave the public schools in order to attend the Catholic schools.

"Two or three years ago, accommodations for as many as thirty thousand (30,000) scholars in Catholic schools were prepared in New York. The problem was how to fill those schools. Some of the children preferred to remain in the public schools, and the parents wished to have them remain. But the priests, finding their schools unfilled, went to the parents under their charge, and forced them by threats (such as you know) to take their children from the public, and make them attend the pariah schools. I think I have heard it stated that as many as fifty were removed within a very short space of time from some of the large grammar schools for girls, contrary to the wishes and in spite of the tears, in many cases, of children and mothers. I am confident I have stated the case correctly, and not overstated it. It may be verified or corrected by application to the Board of Education in the city of New York, if there should be occasion to wish to know more about it.

"The point I would make is: if Catholic children desire earnestly to attend the public schools and not to attend the parish schools, that should be taken into account, as far as it goes, as a protest against the exactions of the Catholic priesthood, who claim to educate certain of our young citizens, male and female, in parish schools, whether they will or no."

"I send these statements for you to make use of, in whole or in part, as you may think proper."

"Yours respectfully, D—."

Three things should here be noted: the great reluctance of the children and parents alike and the violation of the rights of both—the fact of priestly intimidation, its iniquity, and its success—and the necessity of protecting the parents from this forcible interference with their individual consciences, which is practically tantamount to a deprivation of their civil right to send their children to such schools as they at heart judge the best.

3. "But," it is urged, "the State cannot meddle with intimidations based on such superstitious fears as these, without mixing the State with the Church. 'Law can supply no remedies for the victims of superstition.'" But, without inquiring at all into the nature of any alleged intimidation further than to establish its existence as a fact, the law ought to protect inoffensive citizens from intimidation altogether, if it invades, impairs, or destroys the free exercise of their individual minds and consciences, or the full enjoyment of their civil rights. Now it is a civil right of every citizen to send his children, if qualified, to the public schools; and every State which, like Rhode Island, guarantees "religious and political freedom" to its inhabitants, makes the free exercise of the individual conscience also a civil right. It is, then, a violation of their civil rights to attempt by intimidation of any sort, no matter what, to frighten parents from sending their children to the public schools; it is neither more nor less than a crime against the person, and therefore against the State, which the State ought to treat as a crime and to punish as a crime. The crime consists in the intimidation which deters inoffensive citizens, against their will, from claiming or enjoying their civil rights—not at all in the nature of the fears appealed to by those who practise it upon them. Whether it is the Catholic priests or the Ku-Klux-Klan that undertake to play the rôle of intimidators, it matters nothing; no free State can long survive where such crimes can be committed with impunity, and it is about time for the American Republic to become aware of its own danger in permitting them. On every ground, we fail to see why the proposed law in Rhode Island is not a just, a righteous, and a needed one. Although there is a certain ludicrousness in seeing a Church which pleads "parental prerogative" and "parental rights" against the public school system take the initiative in remorselessly trampling them under foot, the subject is of altogether too serious a nature to provoke much mirth; and we trust that the Independent will reconsider its somewhat hastily formed views concerning it. At any rate, we hope that our countrymen will not so hastily dismiss from consideration the pertinent reminder of their duty which Rhode Island, the ancient and tried friend of religious liberty, has now so pointedly given.

"But this is a free country for Catholics, as well as Protestants," says the Independent. Yes—just so long as Catholics propagate their religion by persuasion, by argument, by appeals to imagination or faith or the senses, or by other peaceable means; and no longer. It is not a free country for Catholics, when they resort to force or intimidation; or, if it is, it ceases to be a free country for anybody else. "Have I not a right to wallopp my own nigger?" indignantly exclaimed the slave-holder, planting himself on his constitutional right to be free from the meddling North. "Have I not a right to make my child religious?" might have been exclaimed by the Rev. Mr. Lindale, who whipped his little three-year-old child to death for refusing to say its prayers. That is the argument of "parental rights," and it is the only argument of the Catholic Church in defence of its treatment of refractory parents themselves. Now it is time to understand clearly that this is not a "free country" for any man to enslave, or to abuse, or to oppress, or to intimidate any other human being; and the plea of a "conscience" which requires these things ought to be sternly refused. The "liberty of conscience" is a most precious right of the individual, and it should be protected by all the power of the State, so long as the individual does not insist on wronging any other individual; but beyond that point it becomes tyranny, which has no rights whatever in a "free country." The Catholic conscience in the matter of the schools is the conscience of the Catholic Church as an organized despotism, not the conscience of free individuals; and it neither has nor ought to have the least sanction, protection, or reverence, when it manifests itself in trampling under foot the consciences of individuals. This is a "free country" for individuals alone, not for great corporations whose exclusive aim is to subjugate and enslave individuals; and it will be a woful day for humanity, when the people of the United States, by infatuated concessions and an easy gullibility in swallowing the cunning sophistries of those who aim only at power, cease to protect the rights and liberties of individuals against every oppressor.

THE EVANGELISTS.

As I sat in the Hippodrome a spectator of the course, some thoughts came to me which, commonplace as they may appear, and unworthy to be put down in print, may be suggestive of the incidental effects of the revival. The title of "Evangelist" that is bestowed on them provokes comparisons not wholly in their favor. The original evangelists were not of their kind.

Jesus, the first evangelist, was distinctly of a very different kind. He came to the metropolis an opponent of the existing, popular, rich, and powerful sect of the day,—was the apostle of unfashionable ideas, and had the Church's priests and high personalities arrayed against him. He could not preach at the corner of a street without being told to "move on."

Mr. Moody, his successful successor, finds everything reversed. The Scribes and Pharisees are on his side to a man; the wealth and high influence is all with him; a perfectly organized army sustains him with the respectability of the town. The Master had not where to lay his head; he has the superb guest-room of one of the finest houses in New York as his sleeping-chamber, is lodged like a prince, and fares sumptuously every day. Instead of twelve poor disciples, he has as many "Christian helpers" and "Christian workers" as he chooses to draw from the Orthodox legions. He is the pet of the synagogues. The papers, having a shrewd eye to business, report his sermons and puff his efforts.

"The saying of Peter is no longer true, 'Silver and gold have I none,'" said the Pope to the saint, as he pointed to the treasures of the Church. "But neither is the other part of what he said true, 'In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, rise up and walk,'" the saint replied to the Pope. The preaching of the first evangelists produced great excitement. Mr. Moody produces none. His audiences are quiet, but cool. They neither laugh nor cry, neither shout nor sob. Not a ripple of emotion passes over the vast assembly. There is not even the enthusiasm that crowds generate. He is no orator, does not make his points well, misses the effect of his best illustrations, tells his stories clumsily, has no humor, no wit, no pathos. He is simply a galvanic battery. His head being set flat upon his shoulders, with no neck to limit the passage of blood to his brain, the intercourse between lungs and cerebellum is close; he has also the advantage of a full and swift respiration. There is a propriety in the prominence he gives in his preaching to the "Blood." There is little else. The charm of Mr. Sankey's singing (and it is a rare one) is the absolute distinctness of his articulation of words. Not a syllable is lost. The voice is a low baritone, of small compass, strong, clear, and telling, but not especially sweet. The effect, which by the way is greatly overestimated, is in great measure due to the rhetorical tricks he practises, the bold, dynamic transitions, the assistance of the numerous choir, the simplicity of the melody and harmony, and the sentimental character of the songs, which are love songs, or songs of patriotism, with pious words. They address the lowest form of sensibility.

The revival has its peculiarities, spiritual, logical, and rhetorical. The first came out when the evangelist, having after the most passionate appeals induced one man out of the thousands before him to confess himself a lost sinner, broke out into praise to God for so much success.

The logic appeared when he declared that Jesus Christ came only to sinners. The inference was that, if he had not come to any, they were not yet sinful enough. Would Mr. Moody have a right to complain of the man who might take him at his word, and try the experiment of sinning worse, or in some new way, in order to qualify himself for the Savior's grace? If a little more sin would beget the conviction of sin, why not plunge into iniquity deeper? Fortunately the evangelists' hearers are not, as a rule, quick-witted enough to draw the inference.

Of the rhetoric, what shall be said? No words will do justice to that. The last specimen is the best. "Over the autograph which the Holy Ghost has written on these regenerated hearts, I see inscribed the names of Moody and Sankey." It should be added, in justice to the evangelists, that this imaginative outburst proceeded from Rev. George H. Hepworth; but even he would hardly have been inspired to such a pitch by any ordinary descent of tongues.

O. B. F.

"THE CHRISTIAN VIRTUES."

One of the religious weeklies recently argued for the moral and literary validity of using many of the common theological words and phrases without attempting precisely to define their meaning, on the ground that, though there is much vagueness about them, and they may be capable of several meanings, ordinary hearers or readers may be safely assumed to understand the meaning intended. Among the illustrations the use of the word "Christian" was cited. It was asked, Why should one who finds "Christian" a convenient and pleasant epithet be expected, every time that it comes to his tongue or pen, to say, in long parenthesis, that he does not use the word in any of the theological or dogmatic senses, but as meaning a good and pure man, or a good cause, or a good influence? The writer reasons that the word "Christian" has passed into current speech, "suggesting by its sound a peculiar type of excellence in spirit and in practice, concentrating many virtues," and that therefore it may be used without misunderstanding, and without giving any dogmatic offence.

It does not seem to have occurred to this writer that under the use of the word "Christian" in this sense, as synonymous with certain general moral virtues and graces, may lurk the most offensive form of theological dogmatism and spiritual arrogance. Such a use of the word, indeed, comes of an assumption that is most unjust to the devotees of other religions than the Christian, and might well be resented by them as morally insolent,—the assumption that Christianity has a monopoly of goodness. It is doubtless a good sign when a community of a particular religion, living by itself, begins to define its theological and religious words as synonymous with words that indicate integrity and goodness of character; for it is a proof that such community begins to see the highest ends of religion. But when, as at this period of the world, the religions are being brought into contact with each other, and it is discovered that certain general moral virtues are common to them all, then it becomes a high offence, not only against the law of social courtesy, but against truth and right, for any one of the religions to give its religious name to these general virtues as if they were its own exclusive property.

These considerations have been recently impressed upon me with new force, by my good fortune in having had as hostesses for several weeks two Jewish ladies, who combine in an eminent degree just the virtues that are usually denominated, by such writers as I have alluded to above, as "Christian." If I have ever or anywhere seen livingly exemplified in character the moral and spiritual qualities of gentleness, kindness, sympathy, generosity, forbearance, self-sacrifice, loving to serve others' needs, patient bearing of burdens, and serene resignation to the most afflictive domestic events, I have seen these qualities in the daily life of these cultivated ladies of the Hebrew faith. Yet they come strictly of Jewish ancestry, and hold to a type of their faith that has been little influenced by Christian surroundings. To speak in their presence of such elements of character as "Christian" would be really to insult them and their religion. Yet they are constantly liable to hear this kind of unconscious display of religious arrogance in the Christian community amid which they live. One of their zealous Christian neighbors, well knowing them and their faith, actually called upon them once for a contribution to support a mission for the conversion of the Jews! Suppose that they were wont, in ordinary social speech, to call all the high excellences of character "Hebrew virtues," what would their Christian neighbors think of it?

And the truth is, the peculiar moral qualities commonly called "Christian" are not so much at home in the limits of modern Christendom as they are in some other faiths of the world. They are more native to the peoples and religions of Asia than to that branch of the Indo-European stock that made the ancient civilization of Greece and Rome, or the modern civilization of Europe and America.

W. J. P.

WHEN a MAN is no longer anxious to do better than well, he is done for.—Haydon.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

The newspapers have furnished very dismal reading throughout the past week, and only a strict sense of duty could enable any one to get through some portions of their contents. The air is filled with unpleasant rumors or disclosures yet to be made of iniquity in high places; and the testimony of Mr. Orville Grant, brother of the President, before the Committee on War Expenditures, furnishes another dreary chapter to the history of the corruptions of the present administration. According to his own account, Mr. Orville Grant has been engaged for years in making money out of his real or supposed influence with his brother. This influence he has sold—sometimes for a stipulated sum, and sometimes for a regular annual salary—to those who desired post-traderships or lucrative contracts with the departments. Nevertheless he asserts (with what might be astonishing naïveté if it were not disgusting stupidity) that he has done nothing wrong, and that, if he had done anything wrong, he should have lost all influence with his brother. The revelations of brother Orville give additional emphasis to what we said last week concerning the associates of General Grant and his friends.

The news of the appointment of R. H. Dana, Jr., as Minister to England, and of Judge Taft as Secretary of War, comes as a refreshing breeze through the noisome political atmosphere of the week. Mr. Dana is a cultivated gentleman, and as a lawyer has made a special study of International Law. Some years ago he endeavored unsuccessfully to stem the tide of Butler's popularity in Massachusetts. His residence in England as representative of the United States would soon do a great deal towards removing the odium created by the "eccentricities" of his predecessor. Judge Taft is also a lawyer, and a gentleman of unimpeachable integrity. He would now be Governor of Ohio without doubt, were it not for the frank utterance of his convictions on questions which divided the Republicans prior to the last State election. Whether he possesses the special ability useful to contend with the shrewd rascals by whom he will be surrounded, time and events will soon determine; but any honest man must also possess good courage, at least, as well as a clear perception of national duty, to accept a Cabinet appointment under present circumstances.

The nominations of Messrs. Dana and Taft, and the remembrance of what Secretary Bristow has already accomplished, are not only encouraging facts, but the mere mention of the names of these three gentlemen suggests the kind of administration that was possible to President Grant, had he chosen his associates and made his appointments with some little discretion. During the past seven years we have become familiar with a long list of names belonging to men who should never have been known in their present relations. Casey, Corbin, Murphy, Shepherd, Williams, Delano, Robeson, Belknap, Schenck, these men should be known only in localities of small radius as pettifoggers, or hotel-runners, or traders suspected of "sanding" their sugar. We have been in danger of forgetting the requirements of men of honor in official station. When the Danas, and Tafts, and Bristows, and Motleys come back again into public life, the country will awaken as from a bad dream, and we shall begin to suspect that the records of to-day's doings are extracts from the early and legendary history of some uncivilized nation.

The impeachment of Belknap has made but little progress owing to the escape of Marsh, the principal witness against him, who has gone to Montreal; and the Committee having the matter in charge has asked and received permission to take additional evidence before the case is presented to the Senate. The escape of Marsh has already been the occasion of considerable squabbling between the members of the two political parties. On the one hand, it is alleged by the Democrats that he ran away because of threats made by Republicans that he should be prosecuted; on the other hand, the Republicans maintain that the Democrats sent him away because they had discovered that he knew too much; or, in other words, that a further examination would be likely to draw from him evidence showing that certain well-known Democratic politicians had been guilty of corrupt practices. Marsh will probably be brought back in some way; and in order to encourage the giving of testimony, a resolution has been put through the House, by an almost unanimous vote, providing that no witness shall be prosecuted in consequence of any testimony given by him before an investigating committee.

Professor Silliman has given his promised explanation before the Emma Mine Investigating Committee. At the present writing, abridgments only of his explanation are before us. From these it appears that he received $5,000 from the projectors of the now notorious enterprise before visiting the mine, with the condition that a further sum—not less than $10,000, and not more than $20,000—should be paid upon the publication of his report. He was absent six or eight months, visited the Emma Mine and other mines belonging to the company, and received $25,000 for his work. He maintains the correctness of the report as originally given, and asserts that the Emma Mine is still valuable, although in very bad condition, and needing a large amount of capital for development. We forbear comment until we shall have heard from Park, Schenck, and others, simply stating that the amount of explanation thus far furnished by Professor Silliman leaves us in the frame of mind ascribed to Oliver Twist at the work-house. We should like to have "some more."

At a recent meeting of Methodist ministers in New York City, the Rev. Dr. Lippincott asserted that "under the present system," Sunday-schools were "places of flirtation and match-making"; that many of the teachers were immoral; and that "children are going to Satan by thousands by means of Sabbath-school festivals and exhibitions." We are inclined to believe that Dr. Lippincott's rheumatism must have given him an extra twinge just before he made the above assertions, or that his dyspepsia was rather more severe than usual that morning. We have no great faith in the value of Sunday-schools; in our opinion they seldom do much good, and equally seldom, we hope, are they the source of a great deal of mischief. That they are places of flirtation and match-making to some extent is probably true, as it is likewise true of every place in which young people assemble, and is likely to remain true of every such place so long as the human race remains male and female. That children might generally spend their time to better advantage than in the attempt to pick any meat from off the dry bones of an evangelical catechism, we are quite ready to believe; but that children are going to Satan by thousands because of Sunday-school festivals, is one of those extravagant assertions which weak-minded people are apt to make in despair of otherwise calling attention to some pet hobby.

The Rev. Dr. Storrs, of Brooklyn, having resigned recently several positions of importance in connection with representative Congregational organizations, gave an explanation of his reasons for so doing. In a sermon before his church last Sunday evening. As had been suspected, these reasons were connected with the course of Plymouth Church, and especially with the proceedings of the Advisory Council. He declared, in brief, that the Council was a "packed" affair, having been largely composed, in the first place, of churches the pastors of which were known to be friendly to Mr. Beecher, and, in the next place, having been kept throughout its sessions under the personal influence of Beecher and Shearman. He asserted also that witnesses before the Council had been "primed" by Shearman before they were allowed to testify. The verdict of the Council on the most important points he criticised severely as contrary to Congregational usage, as subversive of the Church, or as contrary to decisions of previous councils. Even the provision for the selection of the Examining Committee he denounced as an arrangement made for the purpose of securing judges known in advance to be favorable to Mr. Beecher. The prominence of Dr. Storrs in the Congregational body gives great weight to these trenchant criticisms. In this connection it may be mentioned also that the Rev. Dr. Fairfield, of Mansfield, Ohio, has laid himself open to criminal indictment on account of a publication in which from "absolute knowledge" he refers to Mr. Beecher as one who "will be ultimately and universally conceded to be the most infamous character of the nineteenth century."

The Senate has passed a bill providing for the appointment by the President of a commissioner to examine and report upon the ravages of insects upon agriculture; has also passed a bill (very unwisely, we believe) making the necessary arrangements for changing the present Territory of New Mexico into a State; and has at last disposed of the often deferred Louisiana Senatorial case, refusing to admit the indefatigable Pinchback by a vote of 32 to 20. The bill providing for the continuance of work on the St. Louis Custom House, having been amended by the Senate, was passed by the House; which also passed a bill declaring subject to State taxation all land heretofore granted to railroad and other companies; a bill authorizing the sender of any third-class mail matter to write on the outside of the wrapper his name and address, and also the name and number of the articles enclosed; and a bill appropriating $100,000 for the relief of the Sioux Indians. An exciting debate occurred in the House with regard to the propriety of the members of the Investigating Committee on War Expenditures obeying the summons of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia to appear before the Grand Jury and furnish evidence to procure the indictment of Belknap. The House finally adopted a resolution, offered by Mr. Lamar, declaring that the summons of the Court was a breach of the privileges of the House, and directing the members of the Committee to disregard the summons. The resolution was adopted by a strict party vote.

The French Assembly was formally opened on the 8th inst., and the President has appointed a new Cabinet, of strong conservative tendencies of course, but much more in harmony with the result of the recent elections than the former one. A bill conferring upon the Queen of England the additional title of "Empress of India" has passed to a second reading in the House of Commons by the large vote of 284 to 31. China has taken another step towards the adoption of the customs of the barbarous Western nations by the appointment of two foreign ministers. Messrs. Chin Lan Pin and Yung Wing, both of whom have been connected with the Chinese Educational Mission in this country, and the latter of whom is still here, have been appointed ministers to the United States, Spain (Cuba), and Peru.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, Feb. 19, 1876.

It is with exceeding pleasure that I connect myself regularly with THE INDEX, a paper that, on the other side of the Atlantic, leads one wing of the free-thought army against the marshalled hosts of superstition. In this first letter, one may be pardoned a few words of introduction, which will put the new writer and the new readers on a friendly and well-understood footing. THE INDEX being a free platform, and the only bond of union between its writers being a common love of truth, it will be thoroughly comprehended by all that my "extreme opinions," both theological and political, are my own possessions, and in no way imply the agreement of the other collaborators; but I offer one word of sincere thanks to wide-hearted Mr. F. E. Abbot, for his liberality in welcoming as co-worker one with whom he disagrees on many important points. And to the earnest freethinkers of America I offer a hand of cordial greeting and friendship, asking them to bear with differences of opinion, so long as the lips are the true exponents of the thought, and the motive-power is the desire to serve humanity. And I would that my words in these letters might serve to draw somewhat closer the bonds, American friends, between you and ourselves,—bonds whose strength and straitness mean the triumph of peoples, but whose frailty and relaxation mean the triumph of kings. Brethren, we are in race children of one mother; yours and ours alike are Cromwell and Elliot; yours and ours alike the grand traditions of the English struggles for freedom, the inheritance of the mighty non-conformist spirit, the immortal passion for truth and for justice. You have preserved for us the honor of our common name, while we have let its sun-glow become obscured by German cloudlets. You rebelled for us against a tyrant king. You kept alive for us in the eighteenth century the spirit of the seventeenth, and taught once more in Faneuil Hall the lesson of Whitehall. The cry you uttered there resounds among us to-day with a triumph-tone that has lost none of its inspiration, none of its compelling power; and we pray you that no folly of the few on either side, no ungenerous suspicion, no unworthy distrust, may avail to sever us from each other. In the union of the English and the American peoples lies the hope of the world; it is the union of the young and strong democracies against the swiftly-dying tyrannies whose day is set. The opposing forces are still powerful, and they fight with the courage of despair; the monarchical and priestly superstitions, twin-children of darkness, are struggling passionately, for, like the dragon of the Revelation, they "come down, having great wrath," because they know that they have but a short time. The victory is sure, only its hour is doubtful; for the hour depends upon the self-sacrifice and the courage of the soldiers of freedom, upon the dash of their charge at the foe, on the strength of their stroke at the tyrant.

Just at present, in England, in America, in the European Continent, one of the most puzzling, and at the same time most pressing, problems is the attitude to be adopted by secular governments towards the religious organization of Rome. The Secolo, a leading Milan journal, in an article on "The Religious Question," remarks that this anxiety extends "from London to New York, from Berlin to Washington. In England it is Mr. Gladstone who utters a cry of alarm; in the United States it is President Grant. It is Germany, it is Italy, it is Spain, who occupy themselves with this important question"; and after drawing a careful distinction between "true religion and ultramontanism," it concludes by declaring that to ultramontanism, "which tries to provoke civil war, and which receives its orders from the Vatican, no government either can or ought to afford protection." It appears to be forgotten, at times, by Liberals, that treason does not cease to be treason when carried beneath the cassock, nor does disloyalty to the fatherland cease to be disloyalty because it calls itself piety. It is in no sense "religious persecution" to strike at a traitor, when the traitor happens to be a priest. When priests meddle in politics they must stand on the same level as other politicians, and must incur the same penalties. The "rights of conscience" are much talked about by Roman Catholics in England, and are declared to be sacred and inviolable—in England, that is, for in Spain it is horrible and impious to grant such rights to the Protestant minority; and the term "rights of conscience" is stretched to include a variety of things whose permissance is dangerous to the stability of the State.

The crucial question is the question of the schools, and round the schools the Roman Church in England is rallying all its forces. The Establishment, of course, here aids its natural ally, and strengthens the cry for "denominational education," and for the avoidance of School Boards. Where common sense is too strong to be entirely defeated, the supernaturalists endeavor to carry denominationalists as members of the Board, and so to enforce "religious education" in the Board schools. Thus non-conformists, though allowed to withdraw their children while the Bible is read and the Lord's Prayer prayed, are compelled to pay a rate, part of which goes to instruct other people's children in the supernaturalism which the rationalist rejects. There is only one way out of the difficulty, and along this way all governments must walk sooner or later; that is, the stern exaction by the secular government of a certain amount of secular knowledge, and the equally stern refusal to meddle in any fashion with the warring religious sects. Not one penny of State money—i. e., of money raised by taxation—should go in support of religious teaching; because it is unjust to take money from the Roman Catholic to teach Protestant Christianity, from the Jew to teach any Christianity, from the Rationalist to teach any supernatural creed. It is pleaded by some that it is against the principles of liberty to support compulsory education which is an interference with the liberty of the parent; but those who argue in this fashion forget that liberty means the fullest right of personal action, provided that the action does not trench upon the rights of any one else. But the parent who neglects the education of his child encroaches on the rights of the child; and the starvation of the brain by the non-supply of intellectual nourishment is as wicked a deprivation of the rights of the child as the starvation of the stomach by the non-supply of bodily nourishment. It is the duty of the State to defend the liberty of every one of its members, and to guard the weak against the oppression of the strong. Therefore, if the State is bound to punish the father who does not feed and clothe his child, so is it also bound to punish the father who does not feed the mind, and clothe it with the fair garments of knowledge.

There is one further argument that may be fairly used against the Roman Catholic Church, which cannot be used against any other religious body. The Roman Catholic organization is not a simple organization of citizens in any given country; it is, on the contrary, an organization spread over the world, and ruled by a foreign prince. In every country the Roman Catholic is really an alien, owing allegiance to an alien sovereign, and having his citizenship "beyond the mountains," and not in the country of his birth; he belongs to a body who move at the word of command of a foreign, and possibly hostile, power, and may, therefore, be justly regarded with suspicion, his half-allegiance being recompensed by a half-trust. So long as he is a loyal citizen, he should enjoy the full rights of citizenship; but where, as in Germany, he becomes disloyal through allegiance to his foreign master, he must be regarded as an alien, and as dangerous from the power of his co-religionists in every land.

The progress of freethought throughout Europe is most encouraging, and the signs of the coming victory may be seen on every hand. From members of our society in different countries we receive reports of the rapid decay of theologies that may well make us "thank" man "and take courage." It is strange, too, to note the awakening of intellectual life in India. We lately received an urgent request for a large supply of anti-theological literature, and the National Reformer—so often quoted in the columns of THE INDEX—has there a large and ever-increasing circulation. The keen and subtle Hindu intellect, trained to-day by European methods, and cultured by European thought, will be of the utmost service to the cause of freethought, and we may, perhaps, look to India, from whose ancient creeds so much of Christianity is drawn, for the crushing attack and exposure that has yet to be made, which shall show that Christianity is decked in the ancient feather-garments of a splendid but barbarous age; and that her ceremonies, her doctrines, her symbolism, and her very deities, are but the reflex of those mystic rites in which the child-wonder of the infant-world shadowed forth its marvel at the life around it, and its imaginings of the fathomless mystery of existence.

Communications.

THE KNOWABLE AND THE UNKNOWN- ABLE.

Human nature seems to be possessed of a certain tendency to reach out after the unattainable, the mysterious, and the endless. Such is the curious temper of the mind that the more it is reminded that God is the unconditioned unknowable, the more does it extend its web of speculation, though ever remaining at the same hopeless distance from positive, satisfying knowledge. Let some popular speaker be announced for next Sunday to speak on some speculative religious enigma, and you can fill your best hall with the best respectability. If Emerson could be induced to come to some intellectual centre and fumble over his manuscripts for shapeless aphorisms, you could draw out the cream of "advanced ideas"; and the disciples of great thoughts would return to their elegant homes in search of somebody who knew what the ideas really might be, if expressed in worldly English. We find men in almost feverish anxiety concerning the nature of materialization, diacres, elementary spirits, and odic force. Some have evolution so heavily on the brain, that they would almost be tempted to analyze an ox-cart by it, if put to a rigid argument on its functions. What Herbert Spencer and Emerson say seems of more importance, with many persons, than what they mean, or whether they themselves always know what they mean, or whether they mean anything.

We have no objection to speculation. The ideal is the chase out of which Nature finally arranges the solid strata of history. But there is a certain undergrowth of fact which society must dispose of while history is making itself, lest it cover up the choice nurseries of speculation. Important as may be evolution, transcendentalism, and the occult sciences, such facts as hunger, the avarice of capital, poverty, ignorance, the taxation of the liberal to support stained glass and hypocrisy, will not always remain secondary issues.

These latter issues we may call the knowable, as distinguished from the speculative unknowable. For instance, it is a very knowable fact that a poor wretch in Lonsdale, R. I., by a month of brutalizing toil on five looms, can earn twenty-six dollars, as a collateral for the support of a wife and several children. Now, if the Baptist President of Brown University should be announced to speak next Sunday on justification by faith, in our largest hall, it would call together perhaps fifteen hundred of our most respectable citizens; and the Providence Journal would have an elaborate report of a most able sermon. Now if, on the other hand, it should be announced that a few humane men were to hold a convention on the same Sunday, to discuss the very knowable and palpable fact of man's "will and power to make his fellow mourn," by way of ill-paid toil, privation, ignorance, and hunger, these disciples of the knowable would be regarded as a set of Sabbath-breaking fanatics, and the popular press would scarcely deign to notice them.

Speculation is a safe occupation. As long as hard facts are suppressed, and the results do not seize on anybody's throne, the most despotic tyrants encourage it. In the Middle Ages, when the most grinding servitude was imposed upon the people, speculation on the most sacred and vital subjects was the favorite amusement of ecclesiastics and princes. Woe to him, however, who breathed a word looking to the application of the results of philosophic research for the emancipation of the masses! The theory of many a despot, put to anything like an application, would have soon left him headless and throneless. Descartes and Rousseau come down to us as monuments of the turning point of modern philosophy and government. Robespierre and Robert Emmet, who thought of putting their philosophy into tangible shape, were ignominiously ground up in the attempt. John Locke, whose philosophy pointed to liberty and truth, wrote a most ridiculous and bigoted constitution for one of our early colonies, to suit the prejudices of the English monarch.

The kind of emancipation that society most needs is not so much the emancipation from creeds and legends, as emancipation from the scarecrow of popularity. There is a mountain of intellect in every community for every handful of moral courage. A man who has half an idea, and is not afraid to live by it squarely and fearlessly, is worth a dozen philosophers, who steal an alibi on the knowable wrongs of society by transcendental flights into the regions of the unknowable. The coming novellist of the new age will find no more stinging sarcasm on our present social tone than the picture of some wealthy manufacturer, living in ease and popularity on the toil of half-paid operatives,—immensely given to "advanced ideas," and bemoaning the fact that people think so little.

A thought is a very harmless thing. It is the act that tells. Many people thought as Martin Luther did, two centuries before he burned the Pope's bull. The cultured Goethe was a thinker. To him Napoleon was a historic phenomenon; but to Fichte, and the German poets and students who took up arms against a tyrant, he was a fact, to be met by an act.

If the tendency of wealth in this country be to gravitate into a few hands, and wealthy society should come to be the exponent of scepticism and speculation, it would only be repeating the old story of history. What we most need is a healthy, honest education of the people touching the just grounds of the various conditions and estates of society. While speculative play with the unknowable is beautiful in its place, in the long run the criterion of the worth of philosophy must be the amount of general happiness which results from it. The end of religion and speculation is the ultimate elevation of the common soul of the race. No one thinker or set of thinkers will ever build a perfect cosmos. The universe of thought and life is too complex to stay long by any man's theory. While we do not ask that every body should set up a howl for reform, we fancy the finishing beauty of any theory to be the light and hope which it radiates into some-shackled soul, to guide it to better manhood and well-being.

HENRY APPLETON.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

"INFIDEL."

Every day brings us a wall, by the pulpit or press, from some individual whose tender feelings have been seriously injured by the epithet "Infidel." Indeed this feeling is so generally shared among the so-called liberals of the day, that it is safe to estimate at least one-half of them as moral cowards, or people unacquainted with the true meaning of the term infidel.

Prominent among the former class are those who claim the right to put their own construction upon language, and to make their own definition of words irrespective of all acknowledged authority.

According to Webster, an infidel is "one who disbelieves the inspiration of the Scriptures, and the divine origin of Christianity." By the same standard of authority the word inspiration, in this place, means "the supernatural influence of the spirit of God on the human mind by which prophets, apostles, and sacred writers were qualified to set forth divine truth without any mixture of error; or the communication of the divine will to the understanding by suggestions or impressions on the mind which leave no room to doubt the reality of their supernatural origin."

Therefore any person who may have doubts in his mind as to the truth of any of the statements found within the lids of the King James' Bible may be properly called an infidel. Consequently the true infidel should accept the name rather as a compliment to his understanding than a term of reproach.

Let all infidels acknowledge their title with pride, remembering that it is no less a slander for the true infidel to be called a Christian than it is for the true Christian to be called an infidel.

SYRACUSE, Feb. 18, 1876.

Sanctuary of Superstition.

NATIONAL.—Our country is under the protection of the Almighty; it belongs to him. Italy for pictures, France for manners, Germany for scholarship, England for aristocracy, the United States for God.—T. De Witt Talmage.

SAFE.—There is one mountain peak that the wrath of God has been over, and that is Calvary. Take the cross, and there you are safe. Let pestilence, and plague, and death sweep over the city, and you are safe. Why? Because Christ has passed through the city, and all you have to do is to accept the finished work of salvation.—Dwight L. Moody.

HOW TO COME.—Do you ask how you may come? Come as you are:—

"If you tarry till you're better,
You will never come at all."

Come as a guilty sinner, who needs pardon and renewal. Come in faith, crying, "Lord, save me, or I perish." "Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." Look to Jesus; lay the whole weight of your soul upon him; depend on his atoning sacrifice—upon his precious blood.—"Christ the Way"; Presbyterian Publication Committee, Philadelphia.

CATHOLIC DOCTRINE FOR CHILDREN.—Listen, now listen, to the tremendous and horrible uproar of millions, and millions, and millions of tormented creatures mad with the fury of hell. Oh, the screams of fear, the groanings of horror, the yells of rage, the cries of pain, the shouts of agony, the shrieks of despair from millions on millions. There you hear them roaring like lions, hissing like serpents, howling like dogs, and walling like dragons. There you hear gnashing of teeth, and the fearful blasphemies of the devils. Above all, you hear the roaring of the thunders of God's anger, which shakes hell to its foundations.—"The Sight of Hell": one of a series of "Books for Children and Young Persons," by Rev. Father Furness, C. SS. R.

DR. CULLIS WORKING A MIRACLE.—A well-known Foxborough lady, intelligent, truthful, and of undoubted piety, says that she went to the Consumptives' Home, Grove Hall, after suffering for two years from lung and spinal ailments, and considered beyond recovery. Assuring Dr. Cullis that she had faith, she knelt down, he dipped his finger in oil and put it upon her forehead, knelt in front of her and made a short prayer, asking the Lord to heal her of whatever disease she had. He then rubbed his finger across her forehead, saying, "I anoint you with oil in the name of the Lord. Amen." She felt a change immediately, drew a long breath without any trouble—something she had not been able to do before for several years,—her lungs felt perfectly clear, and since that time she has gained in health and strength, and considers herself well. It is a strange story.—Boston Daily Advertiser.

PRAYER VS. THE EVIDENCE.—Charles K. Landis slept in a hotel last night, and started for Vineland this morning, accompanied by his sister and some friends. The verdict of acquittal, on the ground of insanity, is not regarded as satisfactory by the majority of people here. In the morning the jury stood nine to three, the minority desiring to convict of manslaughter. They declared positively that they could not agree, but some hours afterward they were unanimous. The verdict was entirely due to the power of prayer. One of the three dissenting conducted the service, and they prayed fervently until they were all of one mind. Then the constable in the adjoining room heard them singing the Doxology, and feeling sure that this outpouring of thankfulness could have been but one meaning, he rushed to the bell-rope and aroused all Bridgeton without further inquiry. Yet there are certain dissatisfied persons in Cumberland County who assert that the jury did not agree at all, but that the minority stretched a point in order to spend Sunday with their families.—Philadelphia Evening Express, Feb. 7.

SUFFERINGS OF RELIGIOUS ENTHUSIASTS.—A melancholy account is given by the Melbourne Argus of the fate which has befallen a band of German emigrants who arrived in the colony of Victoria last April. They were induced to leave their native place, a small village in Silesia called Hainau, in consequence of the prophecies of an epileptic woman named Marie Heller, who predicted a terrible war in Europe, and declared Australia to be the only safe place in the world. On reaching the colony they took up land on the Hill Plains, in the north-eastern district, living together, and having all their property in common. They soon expended their small capital, and became destitute. They were assisted for a time with food by a settler in the district, but they quarrelled with him because he suggested that they should leave their camp and obtain work. Mrs. Heller, who was implicitly obeyed as being under direct inspiration from heaven, forbade anything of the kind, and the unfortunate people have been struggling on in a state of semi-starvation, having little to eat but flour and a few vegetables. Mrs. Heller also would not allow any assistance to be asked for in the shape of food or medical attendance. Eight of the emigrants have therefore died, and the condition of the remainder is represented as being pitiable. Their camp being far removed from any township, information of this state of affairs only lately reached the government of the colony, when an inspector was despatched to the spot, and provisions and a doctor have also been forwarded.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.	For 13 to 25 insertions, 8c per line.	For 26 to 51 insertions, 6c per line.	For 52 to 100 insertions, 5c per line.
13	25	51	100
26	51	100	100
52	100	100	100

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers. Yours truly,

HENRY S. STERBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place,
Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,
has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.

WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.

WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.

Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.

REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.

DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of our country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 20 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Abbott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Beaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 20 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 20 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Bonneschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 20 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1873 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
T. W. HIGGINSON,
W. J. POTTER,
W. H. SPENCER,
F. W. NEWMAN,
CHAS. VOYSEY,
A. W. STEVENS,
F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, coarseness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets. Concord Days. Records of a School. A new edition.	1.50
ALCOOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols. Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories. An Old-Fashioned Girl. Little Men. My Boys, &c. Shawl-Straps. Work; A Story of Experience.	3.00
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism. New Poems. Literature and Dogma.	2.00
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine. Edelweiss. German Tales.	1.50
BACON'S Essays.	1.50
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution. Physics and Politics.	2.25
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy. Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.	1.75
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems. The Rising Faith.	2.00
BASTIAN (W. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary. The World-Priest. The Tall Student.	2.25
BUEHNER'S Force and Matter.	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 5 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 2 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.	2.00
CHERVANTES' Don Quixote.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside. Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience. Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.	1.00
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions. Common-Sense in Religion.	3.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays. The Religious Demands of the Age.	3.00
COONWAY (MONOURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.	1.75
COBBELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Mason, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Otisanship. Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I. "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies"	1.50

The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor"	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.	1.40
Journal of Researches.	1.25
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.	1.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.	1.00
Comprising—Adam Bede. Romola. The Mill on the Floss. Felix Holt. Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols. Middlemarch. 2 vols. Wit and Wisdom of The Spanish Gypsy. How Lisa Loved the King.	1.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series. Essays. Second Series. Miscellaneous. Representative Men. English Traits. Conduct of Life. Poems. With Portrait. May-day and Other Pieces. Essays. Blue and Gold. Poems. Blue and Gold. Prose Works. 2 vols. Society and Solitude.	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Quercet the Younger. The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.	1.50
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.	2.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity. Child's Book of Religion. Life of Theodore Parker.	1.50
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol. Elective Affinities. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols. Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.00
GREGG'S (W. B.) Enigmas of Life. Literary and Social Judgments. Creed of Christendom.	2.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France. Thoughts about Art. The Unknown River. The Intellectual Life. Chapters on Animals.	1.50
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.	1.50
HAMILTON'S Lectures. 1. Metaphysical Lectures. 2. Logical Lectures.	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol. Twice-Told Tales. Mosses from an Old Manse. The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance. The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image. The Marble Faun. The English Note-Books. The American Note-Books. The French and Italian Note-Books. Our Old Home, and Septimus Felton.	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers. Malbone. An Oldport Romance. Army Life in a Black Regiment. Atlantic Essays. Oldport Days.	1.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey. Suburban Sketches. Venetian Life. Italian Journeys. A Chance Acquaintance.	2.00
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.	10.00
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses. Bits of Travel.	1.25
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature. On the Origin of Species. More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism. A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrated Animals. Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.	1.25
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems. The Monitions of the Unseen. Songs of Seven.	2.25
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-Ug. Studies for Stories. Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series. A Sister's Bye-Hours. Moses the Fairy. A Story. Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.	1.25
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. 1. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.	1.50
No. 2. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagshot.	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.	1.50
V. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols. History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings. Confucius and Chinese Classics.	4.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols. Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O). What is Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols. Prose Works. Portrait.	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. E.) Poems. 1 vol. The Biglow Papers. First Series. The Biglow Papers. Second Series. Among my Books. My Study Windows.	4.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols. Elements of Geology.	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE). The Vicar's Daughter.	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife. Lectures and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848. Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.	3.00
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol. The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each. The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.	2.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each. The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each. The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Lands.	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire. Rousseau, 2 vols.	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series. The Same. Second Series. Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities. Three vols. Price per volume.	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle. Ekkoes from Kentucky.	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy. Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed. The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations. Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy. Theism, Doctrinal and Practical. The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.	1.75
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion. Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols. Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols. Critical and Miscellaneous Writings. Historic American—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham. The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Misdemeanor of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence. The Two Christmas Celebrations.—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.	1.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART.) The Gates Ajar. The Truist Book. Men, Women, and Ghosts. Hedged In. The Silent Partner. What to Wear?	1.50
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds, studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates. Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects. Natural Phenomena: A Series of Papers on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts. The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.	2.00
ROSEMAN'S Life of Jesus.	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.	2.50
SCHLEIER (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S. 2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe. 3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations. 4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.	51.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.	1.50
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical. First Principles. Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Discussions of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers. Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed. The Principles of Biology. 2 vols. The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols. Philosophy of Style. Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition. Sociology.	1.50
SPINOZA (BENEDIKT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus. Life, Correspondence and Ethics.	.35
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER). Pink and White Tyranny. Uncle Tom's Cabin.	1.00
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New. New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols. The Class-Room Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fluke.	7.00
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol. Vanity Fair. The Newcomes. Adventures of Philip. Pendennis. The Virginians. Esmond, and Lord the Widower. Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 3 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.	1.50
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods. Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait. The Maine Woods. Cape Cod. Letters. A Week in Canada. A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.	2.00
TYLOR (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind. Primitive Culture. 2 vols.	2.50
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer. Fragments of Science for Unscientific People. Light and Electricity. Hours of Exercise in the Alps. Heat as a Mode of Motion. On Sound. Radiant Heat. Forms of Water. Lectures on Light. Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.	2.00
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures. Modern Painters and their Paintings.	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each. Vols III IV and VI, each. The Voyage Appeal. Voysey's Defence at York.	1.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden. Saunterings. Back-Log Studies.	1.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion. Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life. Essays and Reviews. Character and Characteristic Men. The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth. Success and its Conditions. Washington and the Revolution.	1.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life. We Girls: A Home Story. Real Folks. The Other Girls. Fancies. A volume of Poems.	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols. Child Life.	4.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III. LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV. THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Appendix to the Fifth Proposition. Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I. 1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II. 1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge.....4.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

PINE GROVE MINERAL SPRING WATER.

S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer of Massachusetts, gave a certificate of analysis of this Mineral Water, which contains more than twice as much iron as any other, at Boston, May 26, 1875. Dr. Hayes says: "This water should be classed as an Alkaline Chalybeate, and it is remarkable as containing an organic Salt of Iron (the Cremate), with Sulphate of Iron and Silicate of Soda, and the other constituents of recognized medicinal value. I think that some of this water might be charged with carbonic acid gas to good advantage."

Its effects are alterative—antacid—diuretic—tonic. Alkaline Chalybeate waters have been recommended for hundreds of years by experienced physicians, and it is well known that better and more permanent results have been accomplished, in many cases, than by alkaline and iron pharmaceutical preparations.

Send for Circulars to the Proprietor,

CARL H. HORSCH, M.D.,
Dover, New Hampshire.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper....25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid.....2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPH-

ER AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

TRACTS.

No. I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton.

No. II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

No. III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. New and enlarged edition, with index and text of important citations.

No. IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published. (Soon ready.)

Of No. I., single copy, mailed, 5 cents; ten for 30 cents; one hundred for $1.50.

Of Nos. II., III., IV., single copy, mailed, 10 cents; ten for 60 cents; one hundred for $3.00.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, a volume made up chiefly of essays and addresses given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. "One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTORY. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. 424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50.

Send to Office of THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents. Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES, and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for property made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,
757 Washington St., Boston.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The Summer Term will begin Monday, April 12, when NEW PUPILS of either sex will be received.

For particulars address
NATH'L T. ALLEN,
WEST NEWTON, MASS.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

THE THEOLOGICAL WORKS

—OF—

THOMAS PAINE.

Complete in one volume, and containing the "Age of Reason," the "Discourse to the Society of Theophilanthropists," the "Examination of Passages of the New Testament," the "Thoughts on a Future State," the "Reply to the Bishop of Llandaff," etc., etc. Price, $2.00. Sent by mail on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DR. J. EDWARD BRUCE

Is prepared to lecture before Lyceums, and other societies desiring his services. He offers the following list of Lectures:—

1. The Education Question, considered as the Coming Crisis in American Politics.
2. Christian versus Chromo-Civilization.
3. The Place of Spiritual Phenomena in a Right Philosophy of Man.
4. The Origin and Development of the Spiritual Element in Man.
5. Christianity and Free Religion.
6. The Religious Outlook.
7. Supernatural Selection.
8. English Labor and English Laborers as I saw Them.

Address
J. EDWARD BRUCE, M.D.
NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.

BY
GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of TWO DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized,

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal League will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance, having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity. The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC RHEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 23, 1876.

WHOLE No. 326.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

Therefore, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

tion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

MR. GLADSTONE, in a recently published letter, says that he "believes in the authority of the Lord's Day as a religious institution."

CARDINAL McCLOSKEY's private secretary is said to have denied the purchase of the Le Grand Lockwood mansion at Norwalk, Conn., for a Catholic College.

AT UNION HALL, New Jersey, the Bible has been voted out of the public schools, and then voted back again. Nothing but permanent guarantees incorporated in the United States Constitution will protect efficiently the great principle of secular public education.

PUBLIC HEARINGS were given by a Committee of the Massachusetts Legislature on the subject of church taxation, March 8 and 14. The advocates of church taxation were represented by Eliza Wright, R. H. Ranney, F. E. Abbot, C. E. Pratt, R. P. Halliwell, and others.

SAYS THE New York Tribune: "Signs of a formidable third-party sentiment are apparent in all directions. Anything but first-class nominations by both the 'great parties' will develop a new organization with a suddenness that will astonish the 'workers.' The people are about mad enough to take politics into their own hands."

MR. FISH, of Dennis, a member of the Massachusetts Legislature, wants the members to pay individually for their chaplain's services, and some time ago introduced an order to that effect. But the Legislature prefers to make the State pay the bill. In fact, it is very doubtful whether they would want a chaplain at all on any other terms.

REV. DR. BRIDGMAN, a Baptist clergyman of Troy, N. Y., has made a forcible argument for church taxation in a letter to the chairman of a committee of the New York Assembly. This letter is a partial offset to the general protest of the Albany clergymen against such taxation—Rev. Mr. Young (Unitarian) being the principal dissenter from the protest.

REV. REuben THOMAS, of Brookline, in this State, earnestly and even passionately protests against opening the Centennial exhibition on Sundays. The Orthodox clergy will probably be a unit in this matter; and their influence will probably decide the matter at last, simply because the liberals, being unorganized, have no means of making their rights respected.

A GREAT "General Presbyterian Council" is to be held in London, on July 4, 1876. It will consist of about three hundred members, of whom about a third will represent the United Kingdom, a third the United States, a sixth the colonies of England, and a sixth the Continent. About twenty thousand Presbyterian congregations will thus be united in one great organization.

EVERY ONE capable of appreciating the high personal character and distinguished public services of Carl Schurz will sympathize deeply with him in his double bereavement, losing his wife and his father within a month. Such slight balm as may come to his sore heart through the knowledge of the universal esteem, gratitude, and sympathetic sorrow of all good citizens will surely be his.

A MR. DEVLIN has been lecturing against Romanism in several cities and towns of New England, and been mobbed more than once in consequence. We suspect that he may have been intemperate and needlessly offensive to excite such opposition as this; but that is no excuse whatever for the mobs. The rights of the free platform should be protected at all hazards, and some other protection than mob law should be resorted to against abuse of those rights. That ignorant Catholics should attempt in this bad way to defend their Church reveals their own dangerous character as members of the community, and not at all the goodness of the cause they have at heart.

DO NOT forget the Centennial Congress of Liberals. It will be the ideal event of the year, putting into living voice the great thought which created this mighty Republic of the West—the thought of a vast commonwealth founded solely on the Natural Rights of Man. Money is wanted, and wanted immediately, as explained on our last page. Shall it not be forthcoming? Shall not the children prove themselves worthy of the fathers, by ripening to full fruition the magnificent ideal so magnificently planted one hundred years ago? Shall they not now unite in the grand affirmation of a State absolutely independent of the Church—a State "dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal"? The Centennial Celebration will be lean and poor, if it only glorifies the past; let it glorify the present by pledging the future to civil and religious liberty!

THE WASHINGTON Star tells the following good story of our probable minister to England: "While Mr. Dana was dining with several members of Congress and others in Washington a few years ago, some allusion was made to his book, Two Years Before the Mast. It is said that Mr. Dana immediately becomes 'enthused' whenever any allusion to his nautical experience is made, and delights in launching out into an interesting sketch of it. He did so in this instance, and was listened to with great attention and interest. At the conclusion of his story, some staid and elderly member of Congress, innocently and with no intention of giving offence, inquired, 'Mr. Dana, where can I see a copy of that book? I never heard of it before.' Mr. Dana gazed at the inquirer as if thunderstruck at his ignorance of the existence of his production, and reddening with indignation, replied, 'At any library in the land, sir. At any bookstore, sir.' The topic of conversation was changed as soon as possible."

THE MEETING of those interested in securing the Paine bust for Independence Hall, at Philadelphia, announced last week, was held in this city on Monday evening, March 20, in the Paine Memorial building. It was not very large, but was very earnest. Mr. Horace Seaver was elected chairman; Rev. J. M. L. Babcock introduced the address or appeal which was adopted as the "sense of the meeting," and will be found on a subsequent page of this issue; Mr. R. H. Ranney was appointed Treasurer, and Messrs. Morse, Bradford, Foster, Colby, and Verity were appointed a canvassing Committee; a collection was taken up and over sixty dollars were raised on the spot; and the meeting dispersed after several good speeches, with a very cheerful and confident expectation that the liberals of the country will not let so good a movement die for lack of support. Mr. Morse's bust of Paine, already executed in plaster, is so excellent and spirited that a better one could scarcely be desired; and all that is wanted for a triumphant success in placing a noble, permanent testimonial to Thomas Paine in the historic hall of the Centennial Year is promptness and liberality on the part of his grateful countrymen. The only doubt is whether the "Christian" city of Philadelphia will accept the offering; but refusal will accomplish even more than acceptance towards vindicating the name of a true patriot and great friend of man from the slanderous aspersions which have too long obscured it.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; F. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINCENNE, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NED.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OMAHA, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MOH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OCEOLA, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BISMARCK, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUSTIN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBRO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunrad, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vanx, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zuning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

Spiritual Creation.

A FOURTH LETTER FROM HENRY JAMES.

MY DEAR MR. ABBOT:—

We are clearly agreed on one point, which is—that our conscious life is an unassailable fact. But we differ (to all appearance so irreconcilably, that there is no sense in protracting the discussion of it) upon another point, which is—the physiology of this fact. You hold that our conscious life is indissolubly tethered to a certain reality in our bosoms called selfhood, and grows out of it: so that, if we should forfeit this selfhood, or it should turn out unreal, we should lose life or consciousness.

I contend, on the other hand, that this selfhood is a purely fallacious quantity, a purely supposititious substance, without the slightest reality in the nature of things, save to our sensuous imagination; and that our conscious life, accordingly, is explicable solely by the truth of our spiritual creation, which means the indwelling of all Divine power in our nature, permitting us for wise ends to appear as if we lived of ourselves, although the truth is exactly contrary.

Thus I have no shadow of a quarrel with our conscious or phenomenal life, but on the contrary rejoice in it as an unspeakable Divine boon, whereby men are brought to the knowledge of God's goodness, and wisdom, and power in a way more effectual than they could ever have otherwise found out. My only quarrel is with a certain explication which you and other men put upon this fact of conscious life, when you represent it as grounded in a substance inherent in every man, which is called selfhood, and which constitutes his ontologic capital, or vital stock in trade. You, and all men until they have been better instructed, take for granted that our conscious life is rooted in this illusory substance, this "essence of individuality," as you describe it,—that we are and exist by it alone; so that practically, if it were not for religious form's sake, we might forget the once renowned creative name altogether. If my Creator, in giving me phenomenal life or consciousness, vitalizes what I call my selfhood—that is, transfers his vital substance or any portion of it to me, so that I ever after, on the basis of such transferred substance, am and exist with like veritable vitality in myself—then obviously my Creator confesses himself by that creative act functus officio; becomes as superfluous to me as a fifth wheel to a coach; and it is only for his past services that I keep up my courteous homage to his shrunken dimensions. So cross and clumsy a conception of creation as this would clearly justify us in describing it as an effort of the Creator to throw off his own eternal responsibility to his creature, by setting the latter adrift upon a shoreless and bottomless sea with nothing between him and utter spiritual night but the creaking raft of his warring and implacable lusts to maintain him in a crazy show of life.

Let us have done, then, by all means, with this fruitless controversy. Our true intellectual disagreement, besides, is not fairly represented by this discussion, but lies very much deeper. It consists in the conception we severally cherish in regard to the proper object of men's worship, or the creative being and activity. I have all along hoped for, and even incidentally hinted, a speedy shifting of our discussion to this larger territory; but it is only now at the close of your comment upon my third letter, that you give me a quasi encouragement to follow up my own prompting.

Your idea is not only that man's being and existence are constituted by selfhood, but that the infinite Divine being and existence are similarly constituted; and hence you conceive my denial of the reality of selfhood in man to be a virtual denial of the Divine existence. You make it abundantly clear, in fact, that you conceive God and man both alike to be self-constituted and self-existent beings; and logically regard, therefore, any affront offered to the being of one party as an implied affront to the being of the other. In short you betray a purely pagan, delusory, or superstitious notion of the Divine name as a being of strictly ontological attributes, existing on his own hook, as we say, or on his own independent basis, and essentially out of relation therefore to human nature.

[We take the liberty to disclaim, with entire respect and good humor, this account of our own belief.—ED.]

Now I am afraid I shall seriously shock, if not impair, your friendly appreciation of my intelligence, if I say to you that I reject this notion with hearty dislike. But I should be recreant to my highest instincts of truth if I failed to do so, if I did not further say, in fact, that I not merely reject the notion of a self-constituted and self-existent deity—that is, a deity out of essential relation, not to you and me indeed, but to your and my nature,—but hate and abhor it as well. I have an unfeigned regard and respect for those who hold the notion; but the notion itself seems to me simply a thing to be abominated, as alike heartless and irrational, or, what to my mind is the same thing, unchristian and superstitious. I am sure that I am very incapable of feeling irreverence for anything that really exists, but there is almost no indignity I could not offer to this cheap and otiose deity of rationalistic culture, by way of expressing my loathing of his nature, and my disdain of his authority. You say: "If there be any truth or beauty in the idea of an infinite Divine Self," etc. If indeed: but this is just what I deny in toto, that there either is or can be any truth or beauty in such an idea, especially in the light of that Divine-NATURAL day-dawn which is even now inwardly flooding the common mind.

No doubt you may, if you please, call such a Self "Divine" till all is blue: but I can only say in that case that what you voluntarily worship as Divine, I spontaneously execrate as diabolic. For this is the exact truth to my conscience: your conception of God is exactly my conception of Devil, bating, of course, the misapplication of the term "infinite" to diabolic existence. The idea of the Divine being as an "infinite Self" is indeed inseparable from the Deistic doctrine, and is what makes it not merely infinitely preposterous to my intellect, but infinitely nauseating to my heart. The eternal praise of Christianity, in my opinion, will be that it has forever freed men's intellect from the bondage of this baleful, unmanly superstition—the superstition of a Deity essentially remote from the conditions of human nature—in teaching us that God has neither being nor existence apart from the feeblest and most worthless of human kind, and bidding us cheerfully relegate every contrary Divine pretension—every pretension to idle, luxurious, independent, or even voluntary Divine force in whatsoever claimant of our religious homage—to the owls and bats, or whatever other denizens of the dusk may deem it worthy of their perspicacious recognition and regard.

But now you will ask me to declare my own notion of the Divine name. My notion is, then, that it is infinite Love, hence essentially creative, or amounting practically to an eternal spiritual society, fellowship, or equality of the creative and created natures: so that God cannot conceivably exist in himself, but only in others created from himself. It is obvious that a good many things need to be said in illustration of this idea, and with your leave I will try to say some of the most pressing.

What you will first expect me to say, doubtless, is what I mean by infinite love. I will answer this question negatively at first, by asking another, which is: What do we mean by finite love? We mean by finite love a love to others grounded in, and limited by, a due regard to self; or, as philosophers phrase it, we mean the love of an inward subject to an outward object. More briefly still we may say: finite love is in substance self-love, because self is of primary account in it, and the neighbor of secondary.

Now, obviously, infinite love cannot conform to this finite feeble pattern. That is to say, it is not (being infinite) grounded in nor limited by a due regard to self; for by the hypothesis of creation the Creator realizes himself—finds his own proper life or being,—only in the creature, so that there can never be the least possible oppugnancy to creative thought between itself and others; between what is creative and what is created. Just as little can infinite love be of a relative character, as the love of an inward subject to an outward object: for what outward object, pray, exists to the creative regard, and capable of attracting it? And where there is no object of love, there is a fortiori no subject, for subject exists by object, not object by subject. Finally, infinite love cannot be in substance self-love, or a love in which self or subject is primary, and others or object secondary: for infinite love, being creative, must utterly fuse self and neighbor, subject and object, in its own essential unity, making either the other interchangeable.

We call love infinite, then, when it admits of no qualification or drawback ab intra, or in a subjective aspect, as determined by regard to self. And we may pronounce it absolute as well, since it admits of no qualification or drawback ab extra, or in an objective aspect, as determined by regard to others. But love which is both infinite and absolute—provided it be love at all, and not some shallow sentimental counterfeit under that sacred name—is necessarily creative, must find its life in communicating itself (that is, freely making over its infinite potencies and felicities) to whatsoever is not itself; which can only be, of course, subjects created from itself, into which therefore it may eternally inflow and indwell as in its very self.

But here surges up at once what seems on its face a grave philosophic difficulty. For it is evident that this infinite or creative love must be altogether spiritual or living, and can only communicate itself therefore to spiritual or living subjects. Now where are such subjects to come from? We all know that spirit or life is character, and that character cannot be arbitrarily conferred, much less outwardly imposed, upon its subject. We all know that the subject must grow up or be educated to the experience of spiritual character very slowly, or against all manner of opposition from his inherited temperament. We know, in short, that men come to the experience of spirit or life only by a redemptive process, only through an intimate previous subjection to what is not at all spirit and life, but nature and death.

Our grave philosophic doubt vanishes, then, as soon as it is confronted. For we at once see that spiritual creation involves, in order to its own functioning, a subordinate sphere of natural making or redemption as well, by which the creature, through an experience of the endless and manifold evil wrapped up in self, may at last freely incline away from it to the infinite Divine goodness and truth revealed in SOCIETY.

Observe well just here that human life, or created existence, does, through the very perfection of its creative source, involve an evil element, an element of conscious imperfection, by the gradual casting out of which it at last becomes definitely constituted in social form and order. And now we have only got to inquire how this evil element actually becomes purged out of our historic consciousness, and human life consequently put upon a permanent Divine basis.

The method which the Divine Providence follows in the evolution of our natural form becomes perfectly clear, when we reflect that the Divine end in humanity is to unite us spiritually with his infinitude and eternity, by reproducing himself in our natural lineaments. Thus the secret of the method consists in his inwardly vivifying the human, finite, or created element in consciousness, the element of individuality represented by man, with a free, infinite, or uncreated element, the element of universality represented by woman, until the mind spontaneously expands at last out of liminary into universal dimensions, and confesses society, not self, to be the true Divine end of human destiny. What is the initial step, and what the successive stages, by which this gradual Divine vivification or spiritualization of the human mind takes place?

Without doubt the initial step is marriage, by which the mind begins to be educated out of its aboriginal poverty, or savage egotism, to the extent at least of being willing to associate one of the opposite sex with one's material fortunes and destiny. The next step is the family institution, consequent upon marriage, by which the mind becomes still further lifted out of its deadly aboriginal isolation in being made willing to admit one's lawful progeny also to one's intimate society, fellowship, equality. The next step to the family in the development of our race-consciousness is the tribe, or union of many families, entitling each of these related families to the fellowship or equality of all the rest. After the tribal unity has run its course, the commune or township follows, made up of many tribes, and still further carrying out the principle of a unitary life in man; and to the commune succeeds the city or union of many communes; and to that again the nation, which is the union of many concordant cities; and the nation in its turn gives place to the empire or union of many independent nationalities; while nought remains to succeed to the empire but a strictly transitional régime called the republic, whose anointed mission is to announce the decease of all hereditary, traditional, or consecrated institutions and usages of government among men, and so prepare the way for God's spiritual resurrection in our nature, or a free, spontaneous, and therefore permanent, order of human life.

I do not pretend to say that the republic is at once understood in the whole positive scope of its philosophic mission. But I think all thoughtful men recognize its proper negative force, as a mere transition-point in human affairs. It marks the transition which the human mind is undergoing from an outward to an inward, from a literal to a spiritual form and order. But it does not itself constitute the form and order which it prophesies, nor even clearly indicate what the inward revolution will amount to when it comes. All the historic changes I have recounted—from the domestic root through the municipal and national stem up to the imperial flower and republican fruit—are changes, you will observe, only in the outward structure and texture of human life, approximating it more and more to the eventual revelation of its inward or social substance. But they none of them amount to the least realization of the social form. In the latest as in the earliest form, the two constitutive social elements, self and the neighbor, the individual and the universal, the private and the public, interest, man and woman in short, are quite as little married, in any worthy or spiritual sense of the word, as if that contingency had never been contemplated. The private or individual element remains, in all forms alike, firmly exalted above the public or universal element. In fact, there is not the least recognition, nor indeed suspicion, on the part of the rulers of the republic any more than on the part of the patriarchs, that human life is socially constituted, or is destined to undergo an ultimate race-enfranchisement. On the contrary, all the above-named changes proceed upon the drowsy, fixed idea, that human life is in substance civic and political, allowing only a moral form, and authenticating therefore at most—not a marriage—but a legalized concubinage of its male and female, or private and public, factors. If, indeed, men could have foreseen their divine destiny—if they could have known beforehand that society was the sole divine form of human nature, and its evolution, consequently, the total meaning of human history,—they would long since have recognized marriage as the symbol of our natural or social apotheosis, and have exalted it accordingly out of a legal into a spiritual honor and reverence, by giving it the free, spontaneous, imperishable footing it invincibly craves.

No, it is only as the republic becomes quickened and permeated by the democratic virus, that its true disorganizing mission is avouched, and men begin everywhere to perceive that, unless there be a rigidly formative divine purpose and meaning under the chaos of our existing religious, civic, and political disintegration, human life will be sure ere long to go over irrecoverably to the bad.

I have run through this résumé of the Divine spirit or purpose in history thus briefly, because no other course would be consistent with your space; and it only remains now to state with greater brevity even, what appears to be the immediate practical burden of the great creative truth.

Well then, if society constitutes the eternal spiritual form of human nature—that is, if our nature come to true divine form and order only in the most intimate and exquisite marriage-fusion or unity of all men with each and each with all,—evidently human nature declares itself the only recognizable, because the only living, or spiritual and adequate, temple of the divine inhabitation; and we are at once authorized to chase the unrevealed God of the Free Religionist, the unknown and unknowable deity of Sir William Hamilton, Herbert Spencer, et hoc genus omne, from out the purloins of the human mind as so much worthless or indeed pestilent rubbish, and recognize as true God-Man alone, that is, God and man forever blent in the unity of a common nature. For God stands now fully revealed to us under the mask of our infinitely warring and discordant personalities, humbled, insulted, outraged, crucified out of the semblance of humanity, to be sure, by our lusts of self and the world; but only that so in the fullness of time he may show himself to us in his true infinitude, as the maker of good out of evil, the redeemer of life out of death.

Then, again, if as we have seen the dogma of God's independent or self-constituted being and existence confess itself the dominant falsity of the human mind, and the truth of his natural or adventitious humanity declare itself the sole commanding verity of human history, we must see very clearly that our nature at once takes on a living Divine reality, a spiritual Divine dignity and sanctity, which will ere long consecrate every phenomenal person of that nature to every other person's formal sympathy, respect, and reverence. If an infinite Divine substance inwardly or naturally inform our outward personalities, how shall we help attaining in the end to a style of manners at once so broadly human, tender, and robust, as to make angelic fellowship pale, tame, and niggardly in the comparison? Now the first obvious fruit of this spiritual divinization of our nature or kind will be, that the two phenomenal factors of that nature, or its private and public, its individual and universal, elements, will promptly disavow their unrighteous estrangement, and consent, nay, determine, to ordain exact and equal justice between man and man: so that practically no privileged person shall in the future be tolerated in the material realm of life, or the sphere of those necessities which are common to mankind; but every man, woman, and child by virtue of their social genesis be guaranteed an exactly equal formal recognition with all other men, in having all their bodily and mental wants, such as food, clothing, shelter, and education, perfectly supplied and satisfied.

But now another consideration of the profoundest significance. If this marriage of the phenomenal factors in human nature, which constitutes society, and which results in the establishment of perfect justice between man and man, so that all men alike will be delivered, both from the base tyranny of necessity or the degrading incitations of material poverty, and the coarse and cruel lusts that are infallibly bred of such poverty, why, then it follows that all we, male and female representatives of the human and divine, of the private and public, of the individual and universal, conjugates of that interior marriage, stand ourselves formally pledged to marriage, not only as the fountain of our natural or race honor, but as the basis of all the spiritual or individual culture that will ever befit us as human or immortal forms of life. What is least in humanity is one with what is greatest, and, if marriage be the form of the whole, it must be the form of the particulars as well.

I do not hesitate to say, then, that the most vital and ennobling effect of the creative truth will be the speedy spiritualization of the marriage-tie among men, as a tie of nature absolutely, and one of personal convention only provisionally. All the debasing ideas which defile our existing conception of marriage are due to our vicious habit of regarding it as a mere legalized concubinage of the sexes. Marriage, however, has not necessarily anything to do with concubinage, either licensed or unlicensed. Legalized concubinage may doubtless have been incidental to the idea of marriage, as the condition of its proper development, since all of our ideas have their root in our sensible experience. But it is no more the essence of the marriage-idea than the foundation is the essence of the house, the husk the essence of the wheat, the egg the essence of the chick, the body the essence of the soul. It seems the essence of marriage, no doubt, to many an infirm imagination, to many an inexperienced dreamer; but let us hope for the honor of human nature that that fallacious notion seldom survives actual knowledge. No; marriage is not the least a voluntary tie between any particular man and particular woman, which they may take on or put off at pleasure, with or without legal permission. It is concubinage alone which confesses itself a voluntary bond between the parties, and therefore invites and tolerates legalization. For concubinage, being an essentially animal or infra-human commerce of man and woman, can only claim, at best, a legal or provisional right to subsist as marriage among men; and every violation of such permitted right, accordingly, is stigmatized as adultery. Adultery is an offence committed against a vicious social order among men, an imperfect social State, and is engendered by it exclusively; so that, when society comes or is acknowledged as the normal state of man, adultery will disappear as the fog of the marsh disappears before the morning sun.

Marriage is the strictly natural distinction of every man as man, and of every woman as woman, and therefore neither craves nor allows any extra-natural sanctions, such as are furnished by mere law or custom. So that when A and B demand a civic or religious authorization to live together as husband and wife, what they really demand is permission to cohabit without any risk of disfranchisement to their prospective offspring. There can be no better proof that our existing marriage bond is practically a mere lawful concubinage, than is furnished by the fact of its violation being foreseen by the statutes which enact it, as quite possible on the part of either party, and appropriate penalties provided. But who can conceive of marriage contemplating violation, and enforcing its own integrity by penalties? No taint of adultery can ever by possibility attach to marriage, because marriage is the fundamental law of human nature, and not at all a tie of human convention: a law energized by the creative perfection, and no more liable to infraction by any subject of it, than the law of gravitation is liable to be infringed by a pebble. Our existing conjugality, accordingly, is not marriage except in name, because it disallows an inward, free, or spontaneous tenure, and admits only a legally enforced or outward one. It is simply, as I have said, a legalized concubinage of the sexes, its whole intention being to legitimate a man's offspring so strictly to himself alone as to exempt our skulking and pusillanimous Church and State from all obligation of providing for those to whom, nevertheless, they owe all their own subsistence.

Put marriage, then, in honor, as the ineffaceable Divine badge of human nature itself, and not the least an appanage of any ridiculous persons of that nature, and we have the foundation laid in human experience for the broadest possible realization of our spiritual creation, or our race-destiny: to my conviction the only possible foundation.

I am as ever, yours truly,
HENRY JAMES.
CAMBRIDGE, Feb. 21.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL QUESTION

AS VIEWED BY AN AMERICAN CITIZEN OF THE SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, FREQUENTLY CALLED QUAKERS.

BY BENJAMIN HALLOWELL.

I have read the discourses upon this subject by the Bishop of Rochester, New York, as published in THE INDEX of Feb. 24 and March 2, with close attention and profound interest. The fairness with which he stated his propositions, he being evidently desirous to do justice to the views of those whose opinions or beliefs differed from his, and the manifest sincerity that the sentiments he expressed were the deep-seated convictions of his own heart and understanding, viewed from the stand-point he occupied, were exceedingly gratifying to me. With his beliefs, his arguments appear to me to be incontrovertible, and his conclusions logical and inevitable. Therefore, as I cannot agree with his conclusions, I am brought to an examination of the correctness of his beliefs or assumptions.

The Bishop says that the "Catholic Christian's authority" is "the Church, which is commissioned to teach all divine truths with infallible certainty." Again he says: "On the natural, and on the [super-natural] law, divinely revealed and presented to him by God's chosen agent, the Church, does the Catholic form his conscience."

Now the Friends believe that "the authority which is commissioned to teach all divine truths with infallible certainty" and "the law divinely revealed and presented," is the Spirit of God, graciously manifested to every rational soul, authoritatively demanding obedience to its dictates, and, with this demand, conferring power to obey it, which neither the Pope nor the Church can possibly do.

If the Bishop would substitute the Spirit of God for Pope or Church, as the authority and aid of all instrumental good in the human family, one towards another, the Friends would unite with him in nearly all he says. This spirit of God, monitor, or witness for God in the soul of man, is the basis of the religious element in man's constitution, and is the great means by which the race are influenced for good. It is the Good Angel referred to by Moses (Exodus, xxxiii., 20-22), who had experienced the teachings of this Spirit, and had learned to know it was the voice of God, and could therefore say, "This saith the Lord": "Behold, I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the house which I have prepared for thee. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions; for my name is in him. But if thou wilt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I command thee, then will I be an enemy to thy [spiritual] enemies, and an adversary to thy [spiritual] adversaries."

Inasmuch as very little has been published in THE INDEX specifically in regard to the views of the Friends, I wish to take the liberty to express something further in regard to them according to my understanding of them, and particularly in their application to the subject under consideration,—the question of the common schools.

Augustus Jones, of Lynn, Mass., not long since, in a discourse on "The Principles, Methods, and History of the Society of Friends," says: "There is nothing in church history more attractive than the steps by which George Fox, unaided by human learning, solves for himself the problem presented to us all—'Given self to find God.'"

This is the great problem which every individual must solve in order to know peace.

The blessed Jesus says: "The light of the body is the eye" (Matt. vi., 22). So the soul is the light of the spirit. Now the sun may exist, and the eye may exist, and the body not be enlightened. There needs a communication between them. But when the light streams down from the sun, it renders that body, and all others upon which the light falls, luminous and visible.

In like manner the "Father of Lights" may exist, and the soul may exist, and the spiritual body not be enlightened for want of a communication between them. But the streams of spiritual light from the Good Father, the "breath of life" received by the soul, enlighteneth the whole spiritual body. As the outward light is of the same nature as the sun from which it proceeds, so the streams of spiritual light which the soul receives—love, truth, justice, mercy, purity, and holiness,—and all the communicable attributes of Deity, must be of the same nature as the Father, and these are the Spirit of God in Man; and when man is obedient to their dictates, he is led by the Spirit of God; and, as these increase more and more in brightness by continued obedience, so the faithful soul continually advances until it becomes the enlightened.

There is, therefore, God the Creator, man the creature, and the Spirit of God in man, the Mediator, Redeemer, Guide, Help, Light, and Strength, whose office it is, and to which end it is continually striving, to bring the creature into harmony with the Creator, crying Abba, Father, that thus they may be one, man's will being merged in the Divine will, when there is but one will, and that the will of God. In such soul God reigns, and, where he reigns there is heaven, and there is peace and joy.

There is no conceivable object in the creation of man but man's happiness. Deity needed nothing—had no wants for himself to supply. He never gave life but for enjoyment. He never created but to bless. And the happier man is, the more completely is his purpose fulfilled, and the more is he glorified.

The spirit of God in man, causing him to feel love, peace, and joy when he submits to its teachings, and producing unrest, discomfort, darkness, distress, and misery, darker and deeper, as there is greater and greater departure from the right way, is the great means by which God teaches and instructs the human family, and has taught and instructed them in all ages. And it has been by a close observation of these spiritual influences, through the long series of years, perhaps hundreds of thousands, that man has been upon the earth, that men in different parts of the world have accumulated those advanced truths that are called revelations or prophecies.

For a long period human language was regarded as a divine gift, or a special revelation from Heaven, it having been thought that human powers were unequal to the accomplishment of so great a matter.*

But it is now conceded by all those who are competent to judge, that language is the product of human intelligence, industry, and invention, long continued, by the use of powers with which man has been divinely furnished. It is the same with the Scriptures. The powers of the human soul, or heart and understanding, which are both illuminated by the same glorious effluence from God, and act harmoniously to the same end, are abundantly competent to their production. They are all the work of man, written by men under the influence of the Spirit of God in man, for the improvement of man through the enlightening influence of this same spirit. The same elevated truths and ideas were taught in different parts of the world, years before the "Christian epoch," by Mann, Minos, Brahma, Moses, Zoroaster, Hillel, and persons in all the great centres of civilization and enlightenment in the world, showing to a demonstration that the same Spirit of God in man was teaching the same truths to all mankind, as they became prepared to receive them.

These individuals of advanced enlightenment, or prophets, as they were called, were the embodiments of the deepest and noblest sentiments and convictions of the age in which they individually lived. They must not be considered as having received any special revelation from God. By no means. God is a Spirit; and he speaks to man, not in a voice of words, but by the language of spiritual impression upon the soul, conveying the truth to be taught unmistakably, as man is prepared to receive it, by the illuminations of His spirit in the soul, the recipient organ, or "eye" of spiritual communication; and these truths are more elevated and pure as man is more obedient and devoted, and thus brought nearer to Him, so that a constant advance is known.

*See Edinburgh Encyclopedia, Vol. XI., article "Language," page 718, American Edition.

Outward objects were never revealed to man in any other way than they now are by the light of the outward sun. So spiritual truths have always been revealed in the same manner they are at present. God is unchangeable.

As the outward sun is the primary source of all the forces and motions in the organic world, vegetable and animal, so is this great spiritual centre that we call God the source of all the movements and powers in the spiritual world, and of every blessing, favor, and benefit that devolves on humanity, physically, intellectually, or spiritually.

To return to the public schools; any system for them that will be permanent must be one that will bear the examination of reason under the highest enlightenment; and nothing short of what is dictated by the Spirit of God, and in harmony with his teachings, can do this.

Assistance to human beings can come only from human instruments acting under the influence of the Spirit of God. Hence all truly qualified teachers must be God-like, guided, assisted, and influenced by God's Spirit, causing their lives to be pure, gentle, kind, industrious, faithful, and efficient.

Truth is more in harmony with man's nature than error, and is always a more powerful auxiliary for human improvement; and therefore the pursuit of truth, and a knowledge of the true, the beautiful, and the good, in every department of Science and Nature, should be encouraged and promoted among the scholars of the public schools as a basis of future pursuits and investigations.

It is impossible to put God into the public schools by any book, exercise, or other means. He must be in the hearts of the teachers, scholars, school-commissioners, and all persons connected with them. Then will these schools rise to their full usefulness and efficiency.

It is even more impossible to keep God out of the public schools. His Spirit is in every child there, striving to keep the child good, true, and faithful. We may easily convince ourselves of this fact. When any child does wrong, as telling an untruth, or taking something not his own, and is detected in the fault by the good and kind teacher, how soon the blush of shame comes to his cheek, and his countenance becomes changed and fallen by the condemnation of God's Spirit, or the good angel in his heart, for the course he had pursued, this suffering being designed to keep him from pursuing a similar course on a future occasion.

I may here say, too, it is also impossible, by any enactment, to put God into the "American Constitution." The letters or symbols by which His name is represented may be placed there, connected with a statement of all the offices that it is desired He shall perform; but this will not place Him there. God (I speak it reverently) is ineffable. He cannot be represented in language. He must be in the life of the nation, in the hearts of the people, and particularly in the hearts of the rulers of the people,—the heads of the government. Then shall we have a righteous nation!

SANDY SPRING, Maryland.

POLITICAL REFORM.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE NEW YORK UNION LEAGUE CLUB.

The Union League Club, claiming to represent, and believing that they truly express, the sentiments of the Republican voters of the city of New York, declare as follows:—

First—That in view of the recent and repeated exposures of corruption and fraud in the administration of public affairs, the welfare of the Republican party, as well as of the country, demands a searching and thorough investigation of the condition and conduct of every branch of the public service, to the end that all corrupt practices may be brought to light, and that all who have abused and betrayed their public trusts, whatever may be their station, may be exposed and punished.

Second—That the exclusive management and control of the local affairs of the party in the State, and particularly in the city of New York, by an organized machinery of office-holders, which suppresses and ignores the real voice of the voters of the party, is an intolerable grievance to which we refuse any longer to submit.

Third—That we demand that the independent and disinterested Republicans of the city and State shall be fairly represented in the selection of delegates about to be chosen to the State and national conventions which are charged with the great duty of naming the candidates of the party for President and Vice-President of the United States.

Fourth—That the purpose, which has been openly avowed and threatened to be put in practical operation, of sending to the national convention at Cincinnati a delegation from the State of New York made up at a State convention, and pledged or committed beforehand to the support of particular candidates, is a gross violation of the first principles of republican institutions, and an outrage upon the rights and wishes of the great majority of the party. We insist that the representation of the State of New York in that convention shall be committed to a delegation wholly unpacked and unpledged, who shall be untrammelled and free to choose from among all the candidates who may be brought before the convention, and unless this can be conceded to us we refuse to be bound by its action.

Fifth—That desiring, as we most earnestly do, the success of the Republican party in the next Presidential election, and believing that the best interests of the country require the election by that party of a President from its ranks, we desire, promptly and explicitly, to avow our conviction that success is not possible unless the candidate of the Republican party be a man who is not only identified with its great principles, and possessed by a proud appreciation of its past services, and who will be recognized by the common judgment of the country as fitted by ability and experience in public affairs for the responsibilities of his high office, but also a man who has had no connection, direct or indirect, with the errors and abuses which have brought reproach upon the fair name of the country and the party, who is above any suspicion of sympathy or association with those who have been guilty of those abuses, and whose name and career shall be in themselves a guarantee of a complete renovation of the public service, of a thorough purging of official abuses, and of an administration of the government upon principles of honesty, economy, intelligence, and fidelity to public trusts. In our judgment, and we believe in that of all unbiased and reflective men, the exigencies of the party, as well as the country, at this time demand a President who shall be deservedly recognized as a reformer as well as a Republican.

ARCHBISHOP BAYLEY'S LENTEN PASTORAL.

THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOL SYSTEM THE BULWARK OF THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Archbishop Bayley's pastoral letter for Lent, 1876, just issued, touches on the "mixed marriage" and "religion in schools" questions. He refers in the beginning to the seniority of the archdiocese of Baltimore in this country, and the inspiring memories clinging about it; to the past simplicity, when people did not so much crowd into the cities, but pursued a quiet, rural life, and thinks that resting too much under these influences and ideas has been one of the great dangers of the present, when "evil has become aggressive"; when there is developed "an excessive love of money and outward show; a want of moderation and simplicity in everything; a haste and hurry in daily life which precludes all steady reflection and self-examination; bad manners, bad customs, bad books, bad newspapers, so that we live in a vitiated atmosphere, and are surrounded by moral malaria on every side." The archbishop says:—

"It has, consequently, become absolutely necessary for all of us, priests and people, fully to recognize this epidemic character of the evil influences of our days, so as to protect ourselves against them, and do all that we can to protect others. The most favorable sign in our regard is that God, in his goodness, seems about to come to our help, in permitting a spirit of injustice and persecution to be stirred up against us and our religion. It is hard to speak against anything which savors of kindness and charity; but there can be no doubt that constant and familiar intercourse with those who are living in religious error, or have no religion at all, is calculated to produce a spirit of indifference, and make us insensible to the value of religious truth. Your over-charitable people, who think all religions equally good, generally end by having no religion at all. We cannot be Catholics, and at the same time make a religion to suit ourselves."

In regard to the subject of marriage, and the jealous care the Catholic Church has always exercised over that foundation of everything in the Church, the archbishop says:—

"In our days there are large numbers of her children who disregard these laws as if they did not exist. There can be no more certain test of weak and declining faith than the frequency of what are called 'mixed marriages.' Wherever they become common Catholicity must necessarily assume a very diluted character, and faith have little of energy and robustness about it."

On the subject of education the archbishop urges "open-handed liberality to provide good Christian schools for poor children." He says:—

"Formerly our common schools gave a simple, plain education, sufficient to fit those who received it for the ordinary occupations of life, and parents found time to look after their children, to keep them from bad company, teach them their prayers, and see that they attended to their religious duties. And as they were comparatively few in number the priests were able to know them personally, and watch over their conduct in life. But now, from a variety of causes which I have no time to dwell upon, our poor children, who have become very numerous, are generally very badly cared for. Their parents neglect, or are unfitted, to take proper care of them. Those of them who attend the public schools of course receive no religious instruction, and are brought very slightly under any wholesome discipline. Our Sunday-schools, useful as they may be in themselves, can do very little to supply these deficiencies. All experience shows us that the only possible method by which we can hope to make up for the want of parental watchfulness, preserve our children to their religion, and make them good citizens, is by providing good parochial Christian schools. To form a real Catholic parish a school-house has become as necessary as a church. Your clergy are making every exertion to gather the poor children of their flocks under the wing of the Church, to provide schools, and good schools, for them, and every one of us should cooperate with them and aid them, from the widow's mite to the rich man's pound."

"Religious teaching is as necessary to anything that deserves the name of education, as oxygen is to the air we breathe. Without it it may be seriously doubted whether a good deal of what is now called education does not do more harm than good. It is ridiculous to speak of sharpening up a quick intellect with a corrupt heart and depraved will under it, as if you were necessarily preparing such a person to be a good citizen and a useful member of society. To say nothing of our political combinations, our penitentiaries and State prisons are full of these 'well-educated people.'"

In regard to St. Mary's Industrial School, which the letter commends as admirably conducted, the archbishop says: "Even if the State and city authorities took a wise interest in our endeavors to make these destitute children well-behaved and useful members of society, and were willing to assist us, I would prefer, if I could only prevail upon you to be of the same opinion, that we should do it ourselves. It is in our power, and without any very great sacrifices, to take care of all our poor, and sick, and helpless people, without assistance from any one. Some of us may think, perhaps, that an open persecution has become impossible in these days of liberality and popular right, when 'civil and religious liberty' is one of the boasted glories of the age, when there is so much tenderness in the human heart that they are unwilling to hang even the greatest criminals. But we have studied the history of the world and the human heart to little purpose, if we allow ourselves to be deluded by any such dreams as these."

The letter goes on to discuss the destructive persecution now waged in Germany as sufficient to dispel any illusion that might be entertained, and says:—

"What would we think in this country, if a law were made by the State depriving all the Catholic bishops and clergy of all sources of income, and then imposing a penalty of severe imprisonment upon every one who should give them the least assistance? And yet this is but one of the minor incidents in the present German legislation against the Church. Our American newspapers, which, if you were to believe their own account of themselves, are always boiling over with indignation at the slightest appearance of injustice and iniquity, have yet to write their first word of protest against these open violations of all the principles upon which our government is founded, and of which we claim to be the especial patrons and protectors over the whole face of the earth."

"Here we have no endowments for the support of religion left us by the piety of our forefathers, and are obliged to depend on contributions for the support of churches, schools, and institutions of charity. Rich endowments, however, tend to paralyze the charity of those who come after them, and excite the rapacity of spoilers. Most of the persecutions of the Church in our day come from her wealth, not merely because she was despoiled of her means of doing good, but as they who injure you always hate you, persecution naturally follows on spoliation. There can be no doubt that it would be a wise policy on the part of the State to assist denominational charities. The poor, and destitute, and sick, who become dependent on the State for support and nursing, can be taken care of much better, and at much less cost by denominational charity. England not only helps Catholic schools, but she has Catholic chaplains in her training-ships and prisons."

"But there is no need of discussing the justice or injustice, the advantages or disadvantages, of different systems; one thing is certain: that the secular irreligious system is becoming day by day the favorite one in our country. All sectarianism, which by a curious perversion of words means Catholicism, is to be carefully excluded from any share in the public distribution. We must take care of the children and the poor ourselves, and the sooner the work is done the better for them and for our own souls."—Baltimore Sun, Feb. 25.

A BRACE OF BACKSLIDERS.

Mr. Hammond, the revivalist, has been most unfortunate in a pair of his Harrisburg neophytes,—William Dunlap, a converted bar-tender, and Harry Tons, a converted actor. Mr. Dunlap forged an order for clothing, and then made addresses in the ill-gotten raiment. Mr. Tons forged the name of Mr. Hammond himself to a check, and thus feloniously obtained $150 from a bank. Great things were expected of Mr. Tons, who was accustomed to tell a long and varied experience, and to represent that after so much bad conduct, to say nothing of bad acting, his experience of religion was little short of the specially miraculous. Perhaps a greater miracle would have been Mr. Tons' endurance to the end. Both gentlemen are now like Paul and Silas in one respect,—they are both in jail. We are far from regarding this dreadful downfall as at all discreditable to Mr. Hammond. The country is full of recent "converts." The "revivals" of the winter have been numerous; the religious feeling everywhere has been remarkable; thousands have made a profession of repentance, and only time can show how many were in earnest, or had good reason for believing themselves to be regenerated. This is a convenient world for breaking down in, nor is desperate failure confined to the churches. A man in Wall Street, for instance, may have a first-rate reputation for commercial honesty; his word better, if anything, than his bond; his name may be synonymous with solvency, and gild the edges of any paper upon the back of which it is written; his association may lend solidity to bank directions, dignity to boards, credit to corporations, and even probability to dubious speculations; orphans trust him, and widows lean upon him, and reporters "interview" him when there is a smell of "a crisis" in the air. Some morning he is missed in the "customed street, nor yet beside the curbstone, nor at his domicile, nor anywhere up town is he. Awful disclosures ensue: the heap of his debts is like Pelion on Ossa, of his assets like an ant-hill; the howls of his creditors are loud and painful; he has gone to Nova Zembla, he has gone to Timbuctoo, he has gone at any rate away from New York. Do we cease to believe that commercial integrity is possible? Buying, selling, discounting, bartering, trading, still go on. Honesty remains the rule. Otherwise business would be impossible.

If Messrs. Moody and Sankey and Hammond ask to have the mass of their converts judged in the same way, it is only reasonable. Certain sheep, apparently white, may mysteriously change color. It is natural that rogues should utilize revivals; and the breed of hypocrites is perpetual. We do not need statistics to prove that the great majority of those professing religion usually prove to be true and faithful; we all know it from our own observation and experience. It will not do to generalize lamentably over a lonesome paragraph in a newspaper about some clergyman who has gone awry, or some professor and confessor who has proved to be a loose-tongued liar; and yet such flabby deduction is oftenest in the mouths of garrulous commentators. One swallow makes for them a summer of sin; one sporadic case establishes an epidemic; while a couple of scandalous coincidences render them pessimists forever.—New York Tribune.

"ROBINSON CRUSOE'S MONEY."

The Hon. David A. Wells' story, with a dozen illustrations by Nast, will be published to-morrow by Harper & Brothers. It is a narrative which takes up De Foe's story at the point of the arrival of the English sailors on the island, when the inhabitants began to need a currency. They first used cowrie, collected with considerable labor about the island. This currency was increased, and business took a fine start, when some enterprising fellows found heaps of cowrie on a neighboring island.

"Finally, the secret of the whole matter gradually leaked out. Other people besides the original three shrewd fellows found out where the supply of cowries came from, and made haste to visit the remote island, provide themselves with money, and put it in circulation. But the more money that was issued, the more was needed to supply the wants of trade, until, at last, it took a four-horse wagon-load of cowries to buy a bushel of wheat. Then the bubble burst. Stock companies all failed. Trade became utterly stagnant. The man whom Robinson Crusoe had made Secretary of the Island Treasury thought he could help matters by issuing a few more cowries; but it was no use. . . . The shrewd and idle fellows who had first found the cheap supply of cowries had taken very good care to keep the substantial valuable things—houses, lots, ploughs, grain, etc.—which they had received in exchange. They had, in fact, grown rich by robbing the rest of the community. The community, however, were too courteous to call them thieves, and in conversation they were usually referred to as shrewd financiers, and as men ahead of their time. The concluding act of this curious island experience was, that the formerly so highly prized money became depreciated to such an extent as to possess value only as a material for making lime. The people, accordingly, by burning, made lime out of it, and then, in order to make things outwardly cheerful, used the lime as whitewash."

Soon they discovered gold, and introduced it as currency, but not without objection. In the next generation Robinson Crusoe and the other sufferers by the cowrie experiment having died, paper currency and inflation came into fashion. Some of the most popular books which were published about this time on the island had the following suggestive titles: A National Debt a National Blessing; Don't Pay as You Go, a Sure Way to Get Rich; Pulling at Your Boot-Straps the Best Way to Rise in the World, and the like. This experiment was popular, and the new principles of trade were generally adopted by enterprising men. But the great triumph of "representative money" was when the foot-and-mouth disease attacked the cattle, and there was no milk to be had. There was an immense public meeting to demand that the "Lactical Fluid Association" at once issue more milk tickets.

"That night the babies were all supplied with milk-tickets in the place of milk. Milk-tickets hot, milk-tickets cold, milk-tickets sweetened, milk-tickets plain, milk-tickets with their backs printed green, and interchangeable with milk-tickets drawing cream skimmed from other milk-tickets. But, strange to say, the babies, one and all, with that same sort of instinctive perversity which induces children of a larger growth to refuse to accept shams for reality, and be grateful in addition, refused to take to milk-tickets. The uproar of the night preceding was as nothing to the disturbances of the night following, and morning dawned upon an unrefreshed and troubled population. As soon as the necessary arrangements could be made another meeting assembled; but the meeting this time was composed of babies, backed by their mammas and nurses. There was no theory in their sentiments; and though young in years, one and all felt that they had lived long enough to know what their fathers apparently did not know; namely, the difference between milk and paper. The resolutions voted were brief, but to the point, and were, substantially, as follows:—

"First, that the exigencies of the times demanded more milk, and not more milk-tickets; second, that the way to get more milk was to have more cows; third, that the way to get more cows was to go to work and raise them, or raise something else equally valuable, and then with this something else buy cows; fourth, that there are certain eternal verities against which it is useless for either babies or men to contend. A committee was appointed to procure a mill of the gods to grind up those who disbelieved in the last resolution, and the meeting then adjourned."—N. Y. Tribune, March 8.

TO THE LIBERAL-MINDED PEOPLE OF AMERICA.

The following is the address referred to on our first page, as adopted by the Paine bust meeting last Monday evening:—

A proposition has been made to place in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, a bust of Thomas Paine. The first practical step was taken by the Liberal League of San Francisco. At one of its meetings the idea was suggested and at once acted upon. A subscription was started, and a request sent to the Liberal League of Philadelphia that it should appoint a committee to receive subscriptions and take in charge the general business of procuring and placing in Independence Hall a bust in marble at the earliest possible period. Such a committee has been appointed, consisting of Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary; D. Y. Kilgore, R. Wallin, and Miss Mary Pratt. Subscriptions have been made in various parts of the country, and it is anticipated that the needful work will be pushed forward rapidly. The movement has already been too long delayed, and there is no time to be lost. The whole cost will not exceed twelve hundred dollars. This comparatively small sum can and should be raised within ten days. A free offering quickly made will accomplish the work.

Fellow Liberals, but one word by way of exhortation. Notwithstanding the faithful efforts of those who have labored to vindicate his reputation, for a century the name of Thomas Paine has rested in obloquy. Bigotry and superstition have done their worst. The time is propitious to inaugurate a return to justice. The heroes of the Revolution are summoned to the front to receive the honors of this Centennial year. It will be a deep disgrace to the Liberal cause if the time passes and the memory of Paine is not vindicated. His great services in behalf of American liberty cannot be questioned. Nor are they, though they have been studiously kept from the knowledge of the people. There is no record of a more unselfish devotion to truth than his life affords. Had he listened to the advice of protecting friendship to withhold his pen from its attack on religious authority and ecclesiastical tyranny, no name would have passed into history more revered and honored. But to his mind, liberty included freedom of thought—the right to think—which the Bible-worship of the Christian Church everywhere invaded. His courage was no less conspicuous here than in the battle for civil freedom. But how different the result to his present fame the shameful story of his long persecution alone can tell. But why multiply words? It is unnecessary. It is time to act. We are assured that the responses to this appeal will be numerous and effectual. Let no one hesitate to send an offering, however small. Let all contribute according to their means; but remember that whatever is done, it is necessary that it should be done quickly!

Contributions may be sent directly to Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, 405 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, or to the editors of the Investigator, THE INDEX, the Banner of Light, and the New Age, Boston. Notice will be given as soon as the necessary amount is subscribed.

It will be best to send all contributions directly to Mrs. Kilgore, at Philadelphia, thus saving trouble and decreasing the danger of miscarriage in the mails.

WE HAVE received very beautiful photographs of a bust of Thomas Paine, moulded by Mr. S. H. Morse, of Boston. The friends of Paine consider it a most faithful likeness. The artist copied after the celebrated painting of him, and has succeeded admirably in his work. Any of the admirers of Paine, or others, desiring to do so, can see this photograph at our office; and after looking upon it their admiration of this much-abused man will be materially quickened, we assure you,—so grand and noble is the profile of the old hero. Efforts will be made soon to procure a copy of this bust, to be placed in an appropriate place in this city. Mr. Morse intends also to send a copy to the Centennial this summer.—Pacific Liberal.

RELIGION AND LUCK.—The appeal court of Paris has just decided an extraordinary lawsuit. A certain notary of Pontoise had two daughters, described as charming girls and heiresses. The elder married, and shortly afterward her mother's brain became affected. The Scours de Bon Secours nursed her by turns, with the younger daughter's aid. On the day the latter came of age she left her father's house, with the sister in attendance, whilst all were asleep. The flight had been prepared with extreme cunning, and was quite successful. For five days the father could get no news, nor could the prefect of police, the procureur-general, or anybody else. At length a letter announced that the missing girl was at the convent of Troyes. An appeal to the superior had no effect; and M. Brossard, a very old man, devotedly attached to the girl, was prostrate with grief. His son-in-law went to Troyes with his wife, and demanded Mlle. Brossard. The bishop indignantly ordered her release, and the convent obeyed; but they opened the gates at daylight to liberate her in the presence of witnesses, and she vanished once more upon reaching the street. From this time nothing could be heard of her for three months. In spite of all the civil and ecclesiastical authorities. At length the Bishop of Troyes vowed that whilst he lived such a novice should never be admitted to religion, and this resolve, which upset all the conspiracy, proved effectual. Mlle. Brossard returned home for a while, but fled again. Worn out, her father suffered her to go, but died with a warning on his lips that the convent wanted the girl's fortune, not herself, and now it appears in fact that she has long since alienated every farthing. The trial arose upon certain letters which passed during this long struggle between different members of the family, the bishop, the prefect of police, and others. M. Brossard's heirs claim them as family documents, but the court has decided that Sister Marie, of the Incarnation, alone is concerned in them, and to her they should belong.—London Telegraph.

THE aboriginal man in geology, and in the dim lights of Darwin's microscope, is not an engaging figure. We are very glad that he ate his fishes, and snails, and marrow-bones, out of his sight and hearing, and that his doleful experiences were got through with so very long ago. They combed his mane, they pared his nails, cut off his tail, set him on end, sent him to school, and made him pay taxes, before he could begin to write his sad story for the compassion or the repudiation of his descendants, who are all but unanimous to disown him. We must take him as we find him,—pretty well on in his education, and in all our knowledge of him, an interesting creature, with a will, an invention, an imagination, a conscience, and an inextinguishable hope.—R. W. Emerson.

Poetry.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

KOSSUTH AND DEAK.

"One star differeth from another star in glory."

"Forgotten in Hungary," he may be—
For the time that is passing now.
To Deak they give the glory,
And wreath alone his brow?

One star differeth from another;
To each its appointed way:
One soul shows the eternal,
And one the passing day.

'Tis well they bless this modern Spartan,
Whose homely way and true
Gave Hungary her old-time freedom,
The Hapsburg pledged anew.

His simple tact and sturdy honor
Conducts the people on,
And they pronounce, when life is over,
The fitting words, "Well done."

And in the farthest future
Let men retell his fame,
How he, all titles else refusing,
Spoke in the people's name.

In that far time of Justice,—
When all eyes are illumed
Beholding the wrapt vision
One hero-soul consumed;

When freedom full and perfect
Spreads o'er the Continent,
And Europe shares the glory
The lonely exile lent,—

Then, see his name emblazoned,
Whose constant soul refused
By the poor time's convenience
To be despoiled or used!

O star that shines forever,
Repeating but one story,
The nations winding upward,
On mountain shall adore thee!

Withdrawn to height ideal,
Thy lustre set in bine,
Thy rays shall fall as blessing
To make all men as true!

SIDNEY H. MORSE.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 18.

Geo. S. Bowen, $3.45; Peter B. Brigham, $13.15; R. Friable, $3.20; A. Hoyt, $3.20; E. Prussing, $4.40; J. H. Lull, $13.20; New England News Co., $8.64; Henry Lantz, $1; Geo. E. Francis, $5; L. Adams, $2; American News Co., $6.70; J. C. Rued, $1.50; I. W. Grafton, $3.20; Mrs. P. Phillips, $3; B. M. Smith, $1.50; B. B. Griswold, $3.20; S. B. Ziegler, $3.25; J. Casson, $1; L. F. Gardner, 25 cents; Cash, $5; E. M. Marshall, $1.74; Joseph Brown, 10 cents; E. H. Bearse, 25 cents; T. M. Hart, 25 cents; H. C. Lockwood, 60 cents; L. G. Jones, 35 cents; Cash, $1.55; Julius K. Rose, $5; H. C. Neville, $1.25; David A. Lydiard, $3.50; W. H. Jenkins, $3.10; J. H. Carter, $1; C. Churchill, $10; J. S. Crum, $3.20; O. F. Williston, $3.20; E. A. Spring, $1; C. Whitaker, $3.25; C. Palletier, $3.20; E. Fezandie, 3.20; James Eddy, $3; J. Westwater, $3.20; E. C. Hart, $3.20; E. Dillon, $2; R. B. Hunter, $5; I. Liebmann, $3.20; Thos. H. Harrison, $3.20; L. T. Ives, $6.40; S. Shepardon, $3.20; G. Engler, $2.20; J. C. Street, $4.01; D. P. Wilcox, $3.50; T. Archibald, $8.85; T. Bush, $2; Jos. S. Hill, $16; H. F. Hyde, $1.50; R. Humphrey, $3.20; Chas. H. Webb, $3.20; E. S. Miller, $1.75; F. Rinehart, 10 cents; C. F. Hardon, 10 cents; T. B. Skinner, 25 cents; W. J. Phillips, 50 cents; C. F. Gard, 50 cents; Lee & Shepard, $3.60; Mrs. Kimball, $1.25.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 23, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

THE INDEX accepts every result of science and sound learning, without seeking to harmonize it with the Bible. It recognizes no authority but that of reason and right. It believes in Truth, Freedom, Progress, Equal Rights, and Brotherly Love.

The transition from Christianity to Free Religion, through which the civilized world is now passing, but which it very little understands, is even more momentous in itself and in its consequences than the great transition of the Roman Empire from Paganism to Christianity. THE INDEX aims to make the character of this vast change intelligible in at least its leading features, and offers an opportunity for discussions on this subject which find no fitting place in other papers.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHERRY, Rev. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York.....	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.....	4.00
" 13.	" E. Whitcher, Boston.....	5.00
" 13.	" J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.....	1.00

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

HARVARD COLLEGE has seven hundred and sixteen undergraduates, an increase of ten per cent. as compared with last year. The average age of entering is now eighteen years and five months.

A CORRESPONDENT of the New York Tribune thus pays a deserved tribute to the character of the new Secretary of War: "The country is agreeably surprised at the selection of so good a man as Judge Taft for Secretary of War. He was elected Judge of the Superior Court of Cincinnati, and held the office for the term of five years. He was then reelected for a second term of five years unanimously. This was a remarkable and unusual compliment in a city about equally divided in politics. Where there is a large political majority, a small minority frequently indorses a candidate for judge because it would do no good to run an opposing candidate. Before the expiration of the second term of Judge Taft his two sons began the practice of law in that city, which would have brought them before him arguing cases. Rather than permit such a practice he resigned his office, so as to allow his sons a free field, and without permitting a chance for favoritism or nepotism. Such an example in these times is extremely refreshing. Judge Taft has great candor and simplicity of character, without any hypocrisy or double dealing. He has never been debauched by going through the slough of politics, but, like Mr. Lincoln, won his fame and high character by an honorable practice of the profession of law."

WE REGRET exceedingly that the great increase of labor involved in the editorship of the new Langham Magazine threatens to deprive THE INDEX of its regular "London Letters" from the Rev. Mr. Voysey, who writes in a note accompanying his letter of this week: "It is of no use my fighting with fate. I fear very much this will be my last letter to THE INDEX, but I will at least promise you to write whenever I can. The burdens of the Langham Magazine are growing heavier day by day, and I dread getting behindhand. You will, I feel sure, understand the position, and give me credit for the best wishes and intentions towards a paper in which I have been so long and so happily interested." It would be selfish to cherish other than feelings of pleasure at Mr. Voysey's enlarged opportunities in the service of that rational religion to which he has already contributed so much; but it is impossible not to be very sorry that THE INDEX must forego the pleasure of publishing once a fortnight his earnest and inspiring words. For his able coöperation and staunch friendship we tender him our most grateful thanks, hoping that THE INDEX will still receive frequently, even if irregularly, a word of continued sympathy and encouragement from one who has so deservedly made himself hosts of friends among the rationalists of America.

MR. JAMES' FOURTH LETTER.

Every conscious human being necessarily couples with each feeling, thought, locomotion, action, the recognition of himself as that which feels, thinks, moves, acts. There is no such thing as feeling in general, thought in general, locomotion in general, action in general; it is always—"I feel, I think, I move, I act." This is the very bottom fact of all consciousness, so far as we human beings know anything about it. All the phenomena of our inner and outer life alike connect themselves indissolubly with this running accompaniment of the I; the moment this accompaniment begins, consciousness begins, and the moment it ceases, consciousness ceases. Without stepping at all outside of the mere phenomena of our existence,—without being guilty of the briefest possible excursion into the realms of "ontology" or metaphysics,—this fundamental fact of the I confronts us at every instant as the central and ever-present reality of our own being, so far as our own being is really made known to us at all. It is the omnipresence and prime necessity of this I in all consciousness which led the philosopher Kant, who denied the possibility of all knowledge of "things in themselves," to declare: "The 'I think' must accompany all my representations, for otherwise something would be represented in me which could not be thought; in other words, the representation would either be impossible, or at least be, in relation to me, nothing." By self, or selfhood, we understand nothing but this permanent element of all consciousness as such, this constant and persistent I which we cannot get rid of without straightway ceasing to be conscious at all.

When Mr. James, at the beginning of his fourth letter on a previous page, says: "We are clearly agreed on one point, which is that our conscious life is an unassailable fact,"—he concedes absolutely all that we have ever claimed of the "selfhood"; for we have only insisted on the I as an essential constituent of consciousness, and he does not even try to show that consciousness is possible without it. He has "no shadow of a quarrel with our conscious or phenomenal life." Very well: it is only as the central fact of this conscious or phenomenal life that we insist on the recognition of the selfhood at all, and Mr. James simply fails to understand us when he imagines that we insist on it as an ontologically "self-existent substance." On that point we profess no knowledge. It is he, and not we, who broaches an ontological theory on the subject, by maintaining that, ontologically considered, self is an illusion and God the only reality. How could any one hold that our selfhood is self-existent who believes, as we do, that millions of ages elapsed before the world was fitted to produce any human self—before either the individual or society came into being at all? That which begins to be must have its cause outside of itself—cannot be self-existent. Mr. James will wholly fail to establish any real "difference" between us on the point of selfhood, until he shows that phenomenal consciousness is possible without it. Selfhood we regard as a phenomenal reality, while he regards it as an ontological non-reality; there is no necessary conflict between these opinions, and there can be none until one of us denies the proposition of the other. This being so, not one of Mr. James' criticisms has in fact touched the definition of religion which he originally undertook to rectify, and which simply contemplates the phenomenal perfection of a phenomenal self. It is no correction or even modification of our definition to declare that there is no such thing as an ontological selfhood, whether human or Divine. We never said that there was, so far as we remember; that is an issue of philosophy which is still in debate, and we are content to regard it as one of the world's great open questions.

But Mr. James now passes to the consideration of a very different class of problems from any involved in the definition he set out with considering: namely, creation, the ontological nature of the Creator, etc. This is a field of inquiry in which very probably our paths will not lie in the same direction. Our methods evidently differ, and undoubtedly our results will differ likewise. Mr. James adopts the theological method, and explains the universe in the light of the assumption that the Creator is "infinite Love" devoid of any ontological selfhood or self-existence. We should adopt the scientific method, and begin at the other end of the problem; we should interrogate the universe itself, and confine our conclusions to the extent of its answers. If any one has a curiosity to learn what these conclusions are, he will find them in the Index Tract on "The God of Science." According to our view, whoever starts with an assumption of any kind about the Divine nature, as a principle by which to solve the problem of existence, is obliged to show a rational ground for it,—that is, to prove that his assumption is really the last step in a long prior process of generalization from the phenomenal facts of the universe. To plead "faith" as the only ground of such an assumption is to give up the whole problem, rationally considered; discussion is cut off at once, unless there is agreement here as to method. Being a rationalist, we cannot accept "faith" or "intuition" or "authority" as a substitute for reason. If we were not convinced that reason, applied scientifically in a large, calm, and comprehensive way to the facts of the universe as known to us, led to theism as the true philosophy, we should not be a theist at all. Hence we are unable to go with Mr. James in his deductions from the postulate that the Creator is "infinite Love," because we cannot start in the clouds to reason our way down to the earth. Our fundamental difference is one of method; he adopts the method of faith, and we adopt that of reason.

To be sure, we might point out that "infinite Love" without an infinite selfhood is a hollow and meaningless abstraction, a mere phrase with no corresponding reality that can be grasped by the human mind. Love as we know it is a phenomenal manifestation of a phenomenal self; in any other sense, the word love is an empty algebraic symbol, signifying nothing that is real. To personify, vaguely and loosely, the social affection that binds together "an eternal spiritual society or fellowship," and to treat this personification as a "Creator" of whom all ontological selfhood is denied and no phenomenal selfhood is affirmed, is to us a merely bewildering procedure. Such a Deity commands even less reverence than the one for which Mr. James so pungently expresses his own utter lack of reverence. We cannot worship a mere figure of speech, which is all that we can discover in the "Creator" described by Mr. James. But we do not suppose he has told us all his thought, and therefore we draw no inference concerning it except so far as set forth in this letter. Believing as we do in the eternity and self-existence of the universe, of which God is the internal unity and organic life, and overcome with its magnificence and majesty, we are content to worship in our own way, and accord sincere respect to our neighbor's way. The relative test of both our ways, however, must be the degree of their influence in promoting the individual's effort to perfect himself and the society which includes him. We have and can have no quarrel with any religion which aims to create a nobler society by fostering the freedom, equal rights, and mutual good-will of the individuals who compose it.

EDUCATION IN VIRGINIA.

We are very glad to receive from Richmond, Va., a Circular of the Virginia Educational and Historical Association, together with the "Proceedings" of its Convention held last August, and the address of J. H. Cromwell.

This society appears to be formed among the colored people of Richmond, and its objects are as follows:—

"The objects of this Association shall be to promote the cause of education, and to aid in the higher instruction of such meritorious youth who, by their perseverance, their talents, and general worth, give promise of usefulness to the State and country; it shall aim to encourage the growth and development of mechanical and scientific ideas by the dissemination of useful knowledge, and by the collection of statistics relative to the material interests of the colored race in this State incite it to higher and higher achievements."

There is no word in this or in any other clause of the By-Laws excluding the whites either from membership or from any other benefit of the Association; but some existing facts in regard to the colored schools are recognized as a basis for special effort in regard to them.

Whether the speakers were white or colored does not appear. I recognize some names as those of leading colored men, while Mr. Manly, the white Superintendent of Education, under the Freedmen's Bureau, was evidently present, and gave his testimony to the equal capacity of colored youth for education.

The subjects for discussion were very pertinent and practical: "How shall we educate the colored youth, so as to make them self-reliant and useful?" "The difficulties under which the colored youth labor in obtaining an education in the Virginia." "Compulsory Education."

"WHEREAS, The number of colored schools, to the colored school population of the State, is less than the number of white schools to the white school population of Virginia, it is the sense of this convention that the Board of Education of Virginia should increase, if possible, the number of colored schools of the State.

"Resolved, That a committee of five be appointed to collect such matter of history as reflects credit on us as a race, and that this committee commence at once.

"WHEREAS, There seems to be a spirit of indifference on the part of our people as to the necessity of giving their boys trades; and

"WHEREAS, The mechanic should be considered the bone and sinew of our State and country; therefore

"Resolved, That this Convention call the attention of the people, through its members, to the great advantage in skilled labor.

"The President then introduced Rev. W. H. Brooks, who proceeded to address the Convention on the subject 'Should the elements of moral science be taught in primary schools?'

"The speaker advanced the idea that children should be fully prepared to comprehend every subject taught them; therefore this science could not be profitably taught in primary schools.

"The next speaker introduced was R. M. Manly, Esq., whose address was on the subject, 'Should male and female teachers receive equal compensation?' The speaker addressed the Convention briefly on this subject, taking the view that it should be ability which decides the teacher's compensation."

These topics certainly show much thought on the subject of education. The discussion of them convinces us that the seed sown by the various educational enterprises in Virginia has fallen on good ground, and that a race of citizens is growing up who will take the interests of education under their care, and secure to the colored children equality of education and of rights.

The address of Mr. Cromwell is full of good sense and practical suggestion, and treats the subject of education in a broad and liberal manner. One of his concluding paragraphs shows a jealous sensitiveness in regard to the rights of colored people, which is valuable in securing a vigilant care of their interests, but which, we hope, will not be carried so far as it has been in some instances, where a preference has been given to colored teachers over white, though not so well fitted to teach. The best teachers, white or black, should be the choice for the schools. The paragraphs alluded to are as follows, and we highly approve the demand for a colored normal school until public opinion is sufficiently advanced to admit all to the same school:—

"Fourth. That the white Southern teachers, as a rule, are, by reason of many beliefs in which they have been schooled, not the best teachers for colored schools.

"Fifth. That the large and increasing demand for colored teachers suggests the maintenance of efficient normal schools, which, besides giving the instruction common to such institutions, should not fail to give proper impressions as to the special work its graduates have to do."

We hail the action of this Association as a most promising sign of progress in Virginia, and wish it Godspeed with all our hearts. The Circular asks for contributions to the library, which may be sent to Mr. J. Gordon Baugh, 212 West Duval Street, Richmond, Va., Librarian of the Virginia Educational and Historical Association. E. D. C.

LONDON LETTER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Sir,—The devil is in great trouble over here. Mr. Jenkins, like a second St. George, has trampled on the Great Dragon and given him a mortal wound. Your readers know the story of his impious denial, not only of "everlasting fire," but of "the devil and his angels" for whom this lively furnace was specially "prepared." This terribly daring impiety was met by prompt and active punishment at the hands of his parish priest, the Rev. Flavell Cook, who straightway cut him off from the means of salvation, and denied him the privilege of Holy Communion.

Thus injured and outraged by Peter, Mr. Jenkins betook himself to Gallo, who did not drive him from the judgment seat, but told him his was a hard case, and that Peter must restore to him his "means of salvation," and pay the heavy costs of all the proceedings. Peter, backed up by a goodly following of clergymen and ladies, refuses to do the bidding of Gallo, and resigns his living rather than administer the bread and wine of the sacrament to the heretical Mr. Jenkins.

This is very praiseworthy in the parish priest, and is a fresh proof that he is an honest, though possibly a misguided, man. He will pay his thousands of pounds sterling, and sacrifice £500 a year till he gets another living where there is no Jenkins. His supporters will crow over and around him till he is covered with glory, and possibly then we shall hear no more of him. But the law is not so easily disposed of, and precedents are respected in England as little short of Divine precepts. No clergyman now will have the right of dictating to the laity what they shall believe, or of forcing their own beliefs on the acceptance of parishioners at the peril of excommunication. There is no doubt that this is a great blow to sacerdotal pretensions, and is a step in the right direction in State control of the Church."

But to me the whole affair wears a more serious aspect than even this interference of the law to prevent ecclesiastical inquisitorial tyranny. Practically it comes to this: that a man may renounce the very foundations of Christianity and yet not be deprived of membership with the Church of England; may actually impugn either the veracity of Christ himself, or of the Gospel records, and yet not be visited with any social or ecclesiastical penalty; and, if he chooses to present himself, he cannot be denied the Holy Communion.

Mr. Jenkins very likely does not see what is involved in his denial of everlasting fire, and of the devil and his angels. He is not quite wide-awake to discern the full import of his monstrous heresy. That heresy, I maintain, is tantamount to saying that, if the words and actions of Christ are correctly reported in the Gospels, then Christ was in error on the subjects of hell and the devils; or, that if the words and actions of Christ are not correctly reported, then the New Testament is not trustworthy or even true. There is no escape from this dilemma. Strange to say, not Mr. Jenkins only, but the vast number of Christian laymen, who are rejoicing over his victory, are, or appear to be, wholly unconscious of the tremendous issues involved in their relinquishment of hell and the devil.

If Christ was in error on these points, how could he be Almighty God? If the Gospels on these points are false, how can they be depended on when they present him as Divine? On what subject are they to be trusted at all?

I infer that the next result of this freedom given to the laity to deny hell and the devil without being turned out of the Church, or being denied the sacraments, will be to spread these denials rapidly and deeply. Then, as they spread, their bearings will be understood, their immense importance will be perceived, and the next generation will be found minus the whole fabric of Christian dogma which rested on the belief in hell and the devil, and which will have been entirely withdrawn. The extinction of the devil destroys the story of the fall and ruin of mankind; turns the whole of Paradise Lost into an unbelievable myth; and renders Paradise Regained a superfluity and an anachronism.

We read how Christ, shortly before his passion, exclaimed: "I behold Satan as lightning fall from heaven!" What pregnancy would these words have possessed had they been uttered at the close of the trial "Jenkins vs. Cook"? When Christ uttered them, the devil was rising to his highest lustre, and a long and brilliant day has he had over the world ever since, till Jenkins and others arose to banish him into outer darkness.

What a reign and what a harvest of tears, and groans, and blood has that Prince of this world enjoyed!

More than half the wars; all the persecutions; the millions whose lives were scared with perpetual horror of his infernal power; the myriad victims of sorcery and witchcraft, and the poor wizards and witches who were tortured, in turn, to a bitter death; mad-houses more than half filled with panic-stricken souls; earth and ocean stained with the gore of suicides,—all these, and a hundred other trophies, does the poor devil carry with him into exile, to console him for his downfall and disgrace!

"Watchman! what of the night?" we may ask each other across the broad seas; and for answer each may truly say, "I beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven!"

Poor Lucifer! will no one shed a parting tear over the fallen star, will no one sing a dirge over the grave of this son of the morning? I trow not. I think the world will rejoice and breathe more freely, and speak and act more kindly now the devil is dead. The world will rub its eyes, and wonder what nightmare has fevered its childish slumbers; the dawn, with its chill but bracing air, will nerve us all to braver struggles and more manly activity; and when fear is cast out, there will be room in the heart for that sweet spirit by which all our life here is made holy and happy, and all the future made bright with visions of universal bliss.

I am very truly yours,

CHARLES VOYSEY.

CAMDEN HOUSE, Dulwich, Feb. 26, 1876.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY E. C.

The opposition of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations to the confirmation of Mr. Dana as Minister to England furnishes a good illustration of the condition of mind of the average Congressman, and also of the motives by which many of our leading politicians are animated. Two reasons are given for this opposition,—the one a pretence, the other a verity. Some years ago, Mr. William B. Lawrence published an edition of Wheaton's International Law. Mr. Lawrence's work was so displeasing to the heirs of Mr. Wheaton that they employed Mr. Dana to edit a rival edition. Mr. Lawrence thereupon got up a silly charge of plagiarism against Mr. Dana, and carried the affair into the courts, where it was virtually dropped, and has never therefore been legally settled. It is safe to presume that the majority of the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations had never heard of this charge of literary piracy until they were informed of it by Mr. Lawrence in person, who kindly took the trouble to go to Washington for that purpose. It would be a matter of some public interest, moreover, if we could know how many members of the Committee had read either edition of Wheaton prior to this appearance of Mr. Lawrence. Be this as it may, however, the charge serves as a convenient cover for the second reason of the opposition to Mr. Dana, which is, that he has not always been faithful to the Republican party. This charge of unfaithfulness to party is brought principally by General Butler (who has also hurried to Washington), and means that Mr. Dana once had the presumption to run against General Butler as a candidate for Congress, and at other times (in connection with the Louisiana troubles, for instance) has exhibited considerable unwillingness to believe in the political infallibility of professional wire-pullers and caucus-managers. Without doubt there are few men in the country who unite as many of the requirements of a good foreign minister as may be found in Mr. Dana, and the Republicans could not take many steps more likely to inflame existing discontent than the rejection of his nomination. If the Democrats, on the other hand, or any considerable portion of them, could have the good sense to vote for his appointment, they might gain a portion of that éclat which they have been vainly striving for ever since they obtained control of the House of Representatives.

The result of the New Hampshire election, so unexpectedly favorable to the Republicans—for 3,000 is a large majority in that State,—cannot be interpreted as an approval of the present administration, but may be accepted as evidence of a wide-spread belief that if the Republicans have done badly, the Democrats have given no reason for the belief that they would do even as well, if restored to power. When the present House of Representatives was chosen, many persons were inclined to accept the positive prophecy of the New York World that the Democrats would carry the country at the next Presidential election; but present appearances certainly are not favorable to the fulfilment of the prophecy, and this, too, in spite of the fact that the Republican party, as a party, is less loved to-day than it was a year ago. The entire lack of any settled policy on the part of the leading Democratic managers has been painfully apparent during the past few months, and is destructive of any desire to see them in power, however the Republican leaders may be disliked. This fact furnishes a sufficient answer to those placid gentlemen of the "I-told-you-so" school of philosophy, who, in view of Republican corruption, are writing letters to the newspapers (to the Tribune especially) asking people to admire them because they did not vote for Grant at the last election. The thought of Horace Greeley as President—with his great gullibility, his extraordinary talent for selecting the wrong man for the right place, his hatred of civil-service reform, and his proneness to be led by the nose; becoming President, moreover, through the sale of his convictions to those who were willing to use him as a ladder to power; and remaining President, under the guardianship of Randall, and Hendricks, and Wood, and Hill—is enough to conjure up a picture which makes the present distressing condition of our politics pleasing by contrast. We may be dancing at present in a pretty hot political frying-pan, but it is some little consolation, nevertheless, to reflect that we are not actually roasting in the fire.

Mr. George H. Pendleton, a prominent Democratic politician, and mentioned frequently of late as a possible candidate for the Presidency, has been found guilty of one of those acts, which, although not legally criminal, are morally, nevertheless, on a level with Belknap's sales of post-traderships. Mr. Pendleton is President of the Kentucky Central Railroad, a position which he secured because administrator of an estate which owned three-fifths of the road. According to his own testimony before the Committee on War Expenditures, he, as President of the road, made a bargain with himself as attorney of the road, to prosecute an old claim against the government for $148,000. He proceeded to Washington, and, by influencing the nature of which is not fully explained, secured a rehearing of the claim—which had once been decided against the road by one of Mr. Belknap's predecessors,—and was paid finally the full amount claimed. He then charged the road $80,000 for his services (paying a clerk some $10,000, or more) and how much of the balance of the claim found its way into the treasury of the road is still an unsettled point. Mr. Pendleton evidently took advantage of his official position to make money out of the estate of which he was administrator and out of the railroad of which he was President. The interesting tale is commended to the perusal of the people of Massachusetts during the pending investigations into the railroad history of Messrs. Chapin, Kimball, Briggs & Co.

The Democratic caucus of Congressmen last week decided to introduce into the House a bill repealing the Resumption Act of the last Congress making Jan. 1, 1879, the date of the resumption of specie payments by government. The Resumption Act, as we understand it, was a positive promise that government should begin at a certain date the payment of its dishonored notes, and any attempt to repeal the Act, therefore, would be as dishonorable as an attempt to repudiate the payment of our bonds, the issue of which has been authorized by Congressional acts of various dates. Government has promised, exactly as any business man might promise, to begin the payment of its notes Jan. 1, 1879, and the plain duty of Congress is now to provide the money necessary to enable the Treasurer to begin payment at the date assigned. Fortunately the Senate may be depended upon to put a stop to any legislation of the kind proposed by the Democratic caucus, even if the bill could be got through the House, which, however, hardly seems probable. If this action of the caucus furnishes any indication of the kind of financial legislation likely to be furnished by the Democrats in case they should get into power, we may be pardoned for believing that we should prefer to take care of a few more bribe-takers rather than to allow them any opportunity for much greater mischief.

The Senate has passed a bill reducing the salary of the President to $25,000 per annum. As common decency would forbid General Grant to sign a bill which would deprive his successor of that which he was so anxious to obtain for himself, we do not suppose that this particular bill will become a law just now, and need not therefore be considered at present; but the "pleasure" policy of cutting down official salaries, upon which Congress seems to have entered, and in which it is imitated by State Legislatures and by City Governments, is a sad mistake as regards good government as well as economy. Instead of being too large, the salaries of national officers, with but few exceptions, are not nearly large enough. Our Judiciary is miserably underpaid; the same is true of the members of the Cabinet, of most of our consuls, of many of our foreign ministers, and of a multitude of revenue and other officers occupying positions of great responsibility in various parts of the country. We have no right to expect a lawyer, for instance, to be willing to sit upon a judicial bench for $5,000 per year, when in the practice of his profession he can readily earn from $10,000 to $20,000 per year; nor can we expect to retain in public service at a salary of $2,000, the man to whom merchants, and railroads, and financial companies would gladly give $10,000. Ability and moral excellence have a positive market value, which government must pay if it wishes to be well served; otherwise its offices will be filled by inferior men, who, knowing that their position is precarious, will make use of their opportunity for personal advantage. A reduction of salaries is not a measure of economy, but is a direct premium upon dishonesty and bad workmanship.

Besides the above-mentioned bill to reduce the salary of the President, the Senate has passed during the week only one other public bill of any importance, a bill to further the administration of justice in Colorado. The House adopted the report of the Conference Committee on a bill to provide for the payment of interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia; and concurred with the Senate amendments to the Pension Appropriation Bill. Both Houses passed a number of private bills. The Senate was in session only a portion of the week, awaiting, it is reported, the action of the House, which is certainly getting on very slowly with needed legislation, the attention of the members being occupied apparently by the work of the various investigating committees, to the exclusion of regular business.

At a business meeting of the Church of the Pilgrims, held on the evening following the remarkable sermon of Dr. Storrs—a brief abstract of which we gave last week,—a series of resolutions was presented and adopted virtually withdrawing the fellowship of the Church from all Congregational churches which accept the decisions of the Advisory Council. The Church of Dr. Badington is expected to take analogous action, and other churches in various parts of the country may take similar steps. In fact, present appearances indicate a schism in the Congregational body, and the Beecher affair now threatens to become of interest in ecclesiastical history.

Harvard College is threatened with an epidemic of athleticism, caught, we presume, from some professional wrestlers who have been exhibiting recently in Boston. One young man, while wrestling in the College Gymnasium, has had his neck twisted, and has been sent home; and President Elliot has issued an edict forbidding wrestling within the walls of the Gymnasium. Some newspapers are beginning to write articles on "Harvard College Muscle"; and in one of these articles we learn that "Reeves got in a number of face-hits thick and fast upon the mug of James"; that "Morgan got in one heavily upon the proboscis of Cunningham, drawing the first blood"; that "Hall was in perfect condition, without an ounce of superfluous flesh"; but that Seymour, nevertheless, got in "a powerful lunge that alighted upon Hall's bread-basket, sending him backward tottering," etc. This prize-ring language is what we should expect in articles referring to John Morrissey or "the Benicia Boy"; but, at the risk of being charged with unnecessary squeamishness, we confess that we do not like to read the above phrases in connection with the names of Harvard College students. We have a strong belief in the value of a good muscular development, and appreciate, we trust, the necessity of "physical sports"; but we prefer, nevertheless, to enjoy the company of students who retain a few ounces of "superfluous flesh," and we have strong doubts of the physiological excellence of a blow upon the "bread-basket" which sends a student "backward tottering."

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE DESANT.

LONDON, Feb. 25, 1876.

We are in great trouble about the devil. We have been possessed of him for so long,—he has walked to and fro among us so constantly,—and now, in sternest verity, we have found true that passage of Holy Writ which says: "Resist the devil and he will flee from you." We have resisted, and he has fled. No more may we meditate upon his pristine glory; no more may we draw warnings from "the pride by which Satan fell"; no more may we muse over his strange appearances among our forefathers, or marvel over the metamorphoses he undergoes between Genesis and Revelation. Her most Sacred Majesty, Head of the Church, Defender of the Faith, hath declared by means of the Judicial Committee of her Privy Council that Mr. Jenkins may disbelieve in the personality of Satan, and may yet be a worthy partaker of the body and blood of Christ. This question of the devil has been a very "burning question" in ecclesiastical circles. It is now some time since the Rev. Flavel S. Cook, of Clifton, felt moved by the spirit to forbid a parishioner, one Mr. Jenkins, from coming to the Lord's table,—for Mr. Cook had preached a sermon against Rationalism, and Mr. Jenkins had written thereof disapprovingly unto Mr. Cook, and hence the accusation that Mr. Jenkins himself was not sound in the faith. Mr. Jenkins had also issued a book of selections from the Bible for domestic use, in which appeared no reference to the devil, and in which were omitted likewise many passages which did not, in Mr. Jenkins' carnal mind, tend to the promotion either of religion or of decency. It was too much. Mr. Cook warned Mr. Jenkins that, if he presented himself to receive the sacrament, he would be passed over; Mr. Jenkins did present himself, and was passed.

Both parties rush to the Bishop with their respective complaints. The Bishop listens to both, corresponds with both, and acts throughout with much lack of straightforwardness. Mr. Jenkins appeals to the law, and will fight his way to the altar through the courts of the State. The fray begins, and the Bishop's court goes against Mr. Jenkins; he appeals to the Court of Arches, and the court goes against him. The devil is almost safe; he is affirmed as one of the pillars of the Church; belief in him is necessary to eternal salvation, since without the body and blood of Christ is no salvation, and without the devil no Christ. Mr. Jenkins appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; if this goes against him also, the devil will fairly have driven him out of the Church. The arguments on both sides are skillfully arrayed; can Mr. Jenkins rightly be treated as "an open and notorious evil liver" because he denies the personality of the devil? There is silence in heaven after the pleaders' voices are stilled; the judges reserve judgment. Who can tell what passed in that solemn interval? Did they resort to spells and incantations? Did they try to "raise the devil"? Did they, reckless of expense, telegraph to America for a verbatim report of Moncure D. Conway's lecture on the devil? None can say; the mysteries of judgment none may pry into. The Church watched and prayed; the Rationalists waited calmly, sure that, in either case, the decision must work for good. If the devil was affirmed, the whole Broad Church party would rebel; if the devil was denied, the High and Low would go into hysterics. The fateful day came; the judgment was pronounced. Mr. Jenkins might claim the sacrament; Mr. Cook might not refuse it; belief in the personality of the devil was not necessary to salvation!

American friends, the devil is dead. He has been dead a long time in fact; he is now dead in law, legally defunct. At Clifton, great were the searchings of heart. What would Mr. Cook do? What would Mr. Jenkins do? Mr. Cook preached a sermon which talked of "higher law," and as there are no decisions obtainable of higher law, the courts being too far off, and their jurisdiction doubtful, every man decides the higher law for himself, and it is generally synonymous with his own opinions. Petitioning began; a petition to Mr. Jenkins, numerous signed, to pray him to go elsewhere than to the parish church, lest by going there he should drive Mr. Cook away, for Mr. Cook had declared that give the sacrament to the insulter of his diabolical majesty he would not. No wonder Mr. Cook was obstinate, for are not the clergy significantly called, in Italy, i neri, the black, or the children of darkness, i. e., of prince of darkness, i. e., of the devil? Should not, then, the clergy fight for the honor of Satan, since without him the threats of the Church must lose all their terrors?

But Mr. Jenkins has been obstinate; the sacrament he will have, and to the parish church he will go; and we learn, in the papers of Feb. 23, that "Mr. Cook has resigned his living, and, in announcing the fact, he says he bows to the law of the land by resigning the living he has held." In reference to the allusion to the law of the Church, he remarks that there is a "law of much higher authority." Mr. Cook has concluded by forwarding his resignation to the Bishop; and Mr. Jenkins aims a last blow at him by requesting the Bishop not to accept the resignation until Mr. Cook has paid all the costs of the trial and of the appeal. Behold how these Christians love one another!

The other "great ecclesiastical case" is still in suspense. It is a millinery case, the very vital interests concerned being the number of candles, pictures, and garments legal in a church belonging to the Establishment. Mr. Riddale, of Folkestone, the attacked cleric, is a gentleman who delights in arraying himself in "garments like the sun," nominally to the glory of God and to the edification of the poor fisher-folk who form his parishioners,—really, one imagines, for his own delectation, and for the admiration of the young and fashionable ladies who crowd his church during the Folkestone season, and think it all "so sweetly pretty." Mr. Riddale has been duly condemned and admonished; but, supported by a powerful and wealthy body, yclept the Church Union, he has lodged notice of appeal to the Privy Council, and prays that the sentence may be suspended until after the final decision. At the same time he naively declares that the law, being a lay affair, cannot be binding on his clerical conscience. This being so, one marvels why he appeals to it; if it declares itself on his side, one may presume that he intends to abide by it, while, if it be against him, he will refuse his obedience. As, however, while he loses the game, others pay the stakes, it is natural, although scarcely fair, that he should amuse himself by playing with the law, and by gaining the cheap notoriety of martyrdom without any fear of the suffering. Christians now-a-days, instead of being "martyrs by the pang without the palm," prefer being martyrs by the palm without the pang.

We radicals have just been clapping our hands over two radical electioneering contests: the first, at Burnley, sends Mr. Rylands back to the House of Commons, where his influence for economy is sorely needed; the other gives to Mr. Jacob Bright his former seat at Manchester, in spite of the bitter and unscrupulous antagonism of the Church party. These two elections are specially noteworthy as regards religious equality, for both Mr. Rylands and Mr. Bright will vote for Church Disestablishment and for secular education. The dissenting element in Manchester was, as a whole, strongly favorable to Mr. Bright, and (surely the funniest electioneering advertisement ever issued, especially as Mr. Bright's religious views are believed to be very radical in your American sense of the word) there appeared in a Manchester paper the following notice:—

"Verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in My name, He will give it you. All liberals who believe in the efficacy of prayer should ask the Father earnestly and constantly to make Jacob Bright our representative in Parliament. Without me ye can do nothing."

But if prayer be a useful agent in an electoral contest, surely Mr. Powell, the conservative, ought to have won, for he might have enlisted all the churches in Manchester on his side. And suppose an earnest Tory and an earnest radical both prayed steadfastly for their respective candidates, would it cause a tie? Even that would hardly do, as both candidates could not sit, and how could God avoid breaking his word either to the one or to the other? Further, would not this be a case of undue influence exercised on the voters, and are not spirituous and spiritual inducements equally against the law? There is no end to the complications that may hereafter arise, if Heaven is to be made a partner in election contests on earth; we shall have special prayers issued from the rival committee-rooms, and a new bitterness imported into the strife; nay, we may even cause "war in heaven," if the sympathies of the angels are enlisted on either side, and Michael in orange scowls at Gabriel in blue.

As this letter has been dealing with legal decisions, I ought not to omit one judgment which has caused a wall to arise from many clerical breasts. This is the decision in favor of the Rev. Henry Keet, Wesleyan minister. Mr. Keet, desirous of putting up a tombstone in memory of his daughter, inscribed himself on the monument as the "Rev. Henry Keet, Wesleyan minister," and the Vicar of Owston Ferry, legal owner of the church-yard where lay buried the child, refused to allow the stone to be erected, because of the title "Rev." being thereon applied to a schismatic. The matter was referred to the Bishop of Lincoln, one of the most narrow-minded and pompous of our prelates, and he approved the Vicar's action. Mr. Keet persisted, and was defeated in the Bishop's Court, was defeated in the Arches' Court, and appealed to the Privy Council, which decided in his favor. Indignant clergymen forthwith arose, and repudiated the "desecrated title"; one gave notice, through a local newspaper, that he would open no letter addressed to him as "Rev."; others wrote to the Guardian office that hereafter their newspapers must not be directed to the Rev. ——. Some proposed to add P.P. to the name; others to call themselves Rector Brown, or Vicar Smith; others to use the territorial designation, and address the incumbent of Coventry as Richard Coventry. Finally, it is urged that application should be made to Parliament to decide upon some title which shall be wholly appropriated to their use! Can folly go further? And what must be the state of mind of those who can be thus disturbed about a petty title? Is it any wonder that English folk, who are free from the trammels of a State creed, should earnestly agitate to sever State and Church, and to leave the Church to manage her own business in her own way, when so much valuable time and so many costly officials are necessary to discuss Church matters, and, while our courts are over-weighted with really important affairs, and cases are so delayed that the slowness of justice becomes injustice, these courts have been occupied for so many previous days, at the public cost, in deciding on the title of "Rev.," on millinery, and on the devil?

Communications.

NEW YORK LETTER.

NEW YORK, March 2, 1876.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I have been to hear Moody and Sankey. It was the noon meeting for prayer. The hall of the Hippodrome was crowded. It was a sight to see such a densely-packed mass of faces. Immediately upon the opening of the doors, half an hour before the time for the services, the hall was filled. Every thing seemed to be completely organized. There were many assistant laborers, men and women, officiating in different apartments. A body of police was on guard near the doors, which were closed after the crowd was in. In the lobbies were stands for the sale of the Moody and Sankey Song Book. Just outside were stands for the sale of their photographs; and, in the midst of the street, was a man with long, unkempt hair, crying out the sale of papers containing "all the doings of the meetings." A trained choir sat upon the platform. Soon after the crowd was seated, a man stepped upon the platform, and gave out a hymn to be sung, in which all were requested to join. This singing was kept up until the time for the regular service. All the machinery seemed to be in perfect order, and the whole proceedings went on with mechanical smoothness.

Moody came forward at the proper time in a bustling, business-like manner, and gave out another hymn. He seemed to feel the whole weight upon himself of keeping things going, and the policy seemed to be to keep perfect control of the audience all through, making one movement so overlap another as to leave no time for self-collection. His eyes were constantly turning this way and that, and he stepped about the platform, speaking to one and another. Much of the time was spent in singing, and much in silent prayer, by his direction for objects specified. There were, I should think, a hundred or more requests for prayer read, for all sorts of things, far and near—one that "God would come down into Ticonderoga"; another from a lady, that "several young men whom she knew might be converted"; and one for an "infidel who might be present." The earnest prayer in answer to these multitudinous and diverse requests, after specifying a few cases, summarized the whole by requesting that God in his omniscience would answer each, though "our own memory was not retentive enough to present each one separately"; and it was to be inferred that, by the same infinite attribute, the Almighty would be able to recognize those "several young men" the lady referred to. One young man offered an agonized prayer to God in behalf of "his great name," that it might not be dishonored in the sight of the people, by his not answering their prayers; "for what, O Lord, will become of thy great name?"

Sankey did not sing.—the only time, some one said, that he had not. The subject of Moody's address was prayer, and the conditions necessary to its efficacy, one of which was the forgiveness of enemies. In illustration, he related the story of two young ladies, living on opposite sides of a street, who wanted to be converted, and with each of whom, separately, at the same time, he and his wife were laboring. They each longed "to give themselves to Christ," and it seemed mysterious what was in the way. At length it was found they had a hatred for each other; they "could not forgive each other"; they "never would." But, by dint of perseverance, the animosity was subdued, and at the same moment, each started to go to the other with words of pardon. They met in the middle of the street, threw their arms around each other's necks, forgave each other, and were converted!

M. Lambert Sauveur, of the School of Modern Languages in Boston, has recently given a course of French lectures here upon French Literature. At the same time he presented his new system of teaching languages. A specimen of his method was given at one of his lectures. Several young ladies, unacquainted with French, seated on the platform with M. Sauveur, resigned themselves to his experiment, before the audience. As a preliminary, he simply explained to them that he should endeavor to signify by action and gesture the meaning of the words and sentences he should make use of, and should wish them, in repeating what he said, to show by action that they understood the meaning. He then proceeded to say in French, "I get up," "I sit down," etc., suiting the action to the word. Soon the pupils understood to say, "Je me lève," rising, and "Je m'assieds," sitting down. A finger was shown, and the French word given, which was understood and repeated. Then the fingers were counted, the pupils soon being able to number them correctly in French. Afterwards, some fresh-cut flowers, rolled up in many separate pieces of paper, were presented. M. Sauveur unrolling one, and, holding it up, giving the word for paper; then the expressions for "I unroll," "I roll it," etc., always suiting the action to the word. When the flowers were at length disclosed, one was presented to each young lady with the appropriate words, she learning to use the proper expression in accepting it, and all without the use of an English word. At the close of the exercise, which lasted, perhaps, three-fourths of an hour, the girls were able to use correctly many French expressions.

M. Sauveur's aim is entirely to arrest the attention. He pursues the above method for four or five lessons, with new pupils, and then puts into their hands the first of a graduated series of four books which he has prepared, in which the same system is carried out, but which they are not allowed to have when they come to the class. Thus the ear is first taught, then the eye; the principles of grammar not being formally introduced till late in the course. The fourth book, in the form of dialogue like the rest, is a grammar, but one altogether unique. At the same time that it teaches the rules of the language, it introduces the reader to the best French literature.

This method of instruction requires great ingenuity and aptness of illustration on the part of the teacher, and its success must depend upon personal qualifications. It certainly has claims to attention, as being a more pleasant, more rapid, and more effectual way of gaining command of an unknown tongue than that in common use. A prominent object of M. Sauveur is to form classes for training teachers in his method, and to aid in carrying it forward by the circulation of his books. A. H.

THE ANCIENT LEGEND OF THE GOD OF LOVE.

The God portrayed to the liberal and cultured mind of the present day finds no counterpart in the ancient legend of the Old Testament, and only glimmers through the life and teachings of Jesus in the New, like sunlight through a rift in the morning cloud.

The boundless love which commended the turning of one cheek when the other was smitten, went out in sympathy to the two outcasts on either side of the cross, and prayed for the redemption of those who persecuted him, can bear no fitting relation to the author of the great deluge,—that terrible exhibition of the wrath of an angry Father against his children.

The absurdity of such a proposition strikes me so forcibly that I cannot but marvel at the learned disquisitions of the day in behalf of the retention of the Bible in the public schools, as an instructor in filial love and an exalted morality.

I can only think for a moment of an all-wise and omnipresent Father allowing his children to people the earth for generations, and then putting them out of existence as unceremoniously as a schoolboy would rub out a half-solved problem on his slate, to begin over again with more patience, until perfection should be reached. I could smile at their credulity, did I not see so many spectacled teachers sitting gravely at their desks, ready with their rods to chasten the unbeliever!

Again, if the second edition of man was a typographical improvement of the first, the degree is thrown into speculation by the Moody and Sankey evangelists, and their theories of eternal damnation. They would teach us that we are all victims to a second great experiment in setting up a world, and ready for another washing out in case the "perfect" God should make a failure of it! Really, man is something better than a potter's clay, or why bother his head with learned arguments on the immortality of the soul?

The spirit of inquiry they cannot suppress, and it will go to the heart of the ancient legend. If I concede that God did blunder at the outset, and find it necessary to the success of his plan to drown out the men because they were irredeemably wicked, what had the sins of Adam and Eve to do with the birds of the air, the beasts of the field, the insects, the flowers,—all the rest of creation? Yet they were deluged along with sinful man. All the beautiful handiwork of a just and merciful God beaten down in his wrath against his naughty children, Adam and Eve,—the innocent spectators, involved in the general wreck and ruin without any assignable cause!

This is the ancient legend our wise men treasure up in the holy of holies, for the enlightenment of the youth of our generation, to inspire sentiments of justice, and a reverence for an Almighty God. The Hebrew characterization occupies the letter of the religious lessons of the present day; but, thanks to the freedom of expression, the taskmasters are losing their prestige of authority, the fetters of the mind are unloosing, and the graven image of an imperfect God is giving way to a clearer and nobler conception.

EMERSON BENTLEY.

BRASHEAR, Lk., Feb. 8, 1876.

UNBELIEF THE "FATHER OF ALL SINS."

NEW YORK, Feb. 16, 1876.

EDITOR INDEX:

Dear Sir,—I wish those who, nominally or professedly Orthodox, have friends or relations who are Liberals, would consider the following from the New York Tribune of this date. Reporting the evening services conducted by Mr. D. L. Moody, Feb. 15, it says:—

"He urged with his full power that Christ died for our sins, and, turning to the group of clergymen on the stage, he said, 'Dr. Taylor, have we any other hope?' 'No,' was the reply. The text of the sermon was Romans III., 10: 'There is none righteous, no, not one.' A man who has broken one of the commandments, said Mr. Moody, was guilty of violating the whole of God's law. A man may say he is not a liar, nor a thief, nor a Sabbath-breaker, nor an adulterer; but, if you don't believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, that is the father of all sins."

I would ask any devout church-member, the next time he or she meets a friend who is morally good, but believes in liberal ideas, to remember that Mr. Moody thinks such worse than liars, or thieves, or Sabbath-breakers, or adulterers, for the sin of unbelief is the "father of all sins." If Mr. Moody's authority on such points is doubted, why is it that all Orthodox people openly or nominally indorse him? Surely more evil than good will result from such teaching as the above.

Yours truly,

"A."

Sanctuary of Superstition.

THE SOUL BEFORE SATAN.—The devils carry away the soul which has just come into hell. They bear it through the flames. Now they set it down in front of the great chained monster, to be judged by him who has no mercy. O, that horrible face of the devil! O, the fright, the shivering, the freezing, the deadly horror of that soul at the first sight of the great devil. Now the devil opens his mouth. He gives out the tremendous sentence on the soul. All hear the sentence, and hell rings with shouts of spiteful joy and mockeries at the unfortunate soul.—"The Sight of Hell": one of a series of "Books for Children and Young Persons," by Rev. Father Furness, C.S.S.R.

CAST OFF.—How dreadful if in that last day of the last dispensation—the one that now is—these words should be addressed to you, when you cry, "Open, open, Lord;" "I have called and ye refused. Because I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded, but ye have set at naught all my counsel, and would none of my reproof, I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh. When your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you; then shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me."—John Cumming, in "The Christian," Nov., 1875.

THE JUDGMENT.—Reader, the day of separation will come. "The Judge standeth before the door." He shall soon call us to his presence. He shall come in his glory, and all his holy angels with him. He shall sit upon the throne of his glory. Before him shall be gathered all nations. He shall separate them as the shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats. Some—the saved—shall take the right hand; the lost shall stand upon the left. Great and awful day! One company shall come at his bidding to inherit a kingdom, and honor, and glory. They are saved. The others shall depart—ah! God save us from their destiny! They are lost. Lost amid the agonies of "the second death,"—lost amid the fierceness of the "eternal fire."—"Leaflets for Letters": Christian Publication Society, Boston.

A NEW CURE FOR CHEWING.—A brother entered into this rest by simply obeying the voice of the Spirit. He was in a meeting, and the Spirit said, "Get up and say, 'The blood of Christ cleanseth me from all sin.'" He trembled very greatly, and said, "I can't say that; nobody would believe me if I did; I will give my experience, but I can't say that." Again the Holy Spirit told him to say it, and still he trembled and thought he could not; the third time the Holy Spirit told him that, if he would obey, He would be responsible for the idol which he knew would present itself on Monday, which was tobacco. He said then, "I will do it," and arose and said it; in twenty minutes after, such a power came upon him, he had no desire for his idol, and had been sweetly saved ever since that hour.—Christian Standard.

THE STOCK DEBT PAID.—The following epitaph is copied from a tombstone in Gillingham churchyard, Norfolk, Eng., upon a performer who belonged to the Norwich company of comedians, and in 1777, and two or three seasons after, was engaged by Mr. Coleman at the Haymarket, London: "Sacred to the Memory of Thomas Jackson, Comedian, who was engaged December 21st, 1841, to play a comic cast of characters in this great theatre, the WORLD, for many of which he was prompted by Nature to excel. The season being closed, his benefit over, the charges all paid, and his accounts closed, he made his exit in the tragedy of DEATH, March 17th, 1798, in full assurance of being called once more to rehearsal, where he hopes to find his forfeits all cleared, his cast of parts bettered, and his situation made agreeable by Him who paid the great stock debt for the love he bore the Performers in general."

GOD SHUT THE DOOR.—So the door of the ark is shut. They mock on. They are not alarmed. They laugh on; but God gives them seven days' grace. After all is done to that ark, there is no sign of a coming storm. I can imagine one night, as they retired as usual, the sun goes down behind the mountains, and they will never see it again. That night I can see the mothers putting their children to bed, as usual. Perhaps some of them were mocking and laughing at the thought that Noah was shut up in that old ark. . . . Instead of one flash of lightning after another, it is one blinding sheet of lightning. The earth is beginning to roll and rock. The foundations of the deep are breaking up. The great sea breaks its borders and leaps over its walls. The great rivers begin to swell. Those living in the lowlands begin to escape to the mountains and to flee up on the hillsides. Undoubtedly the great men of that day said: "We have had great floods like this before. We have had storms like this. It will soon be over." But some of them said: "Noah told us it was to last forty days and forty nights." And they say: "If this lasts forty days and forty nights, what shall become of us?" I seem to see them under the ark. They leave their palaces, they leave their homes now. They come to that ark. Hear them cry! Hear them pound on that ark! "Noah! Noah! Noah! Let us in!" There comes a voice from within: "God has shut the door. I cannot open it." Ah! God shut that door. It had been open one hundred and twenty years.—Dwight L. Moody, at Philadelphia, Dec. 26, 1875.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1873.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:
Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.
 Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 REV. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Abbott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1865 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF
 LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including
 O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." Mr. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extracts. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX, A Weekly Journal DEVOTED TO FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:
 FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS;

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

	Price.
ALLOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALLOTT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
How I Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	2.00
Edelweiss.....	1.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	5.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	3.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 3 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	2.25
BROOKS (CHARLES T.). Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUCHNER'S Force and Matter.....	2.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	5.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Sartor Resartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Post-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Billy Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religious Common-Sense in Religion.....	3.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	5.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.20
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
COORELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Liebig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	3.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched: a Volume of Miscellaneous. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50
The Life of Dr. Marie Zakrawska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	2.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 3 vols., illustrated.....	5.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	1.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUBRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Poets. A Study.....	2.50
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 3 vols., each.....	1.00
Adam Bede.....	1.00
Romola.....	1.00
The Mill on the Floss.....	1.00
Felix Holt.....	1.00
Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life. The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellaneous.....	2.00
Representative Man.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portraits.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P., Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stieler. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARRAR'S Critical History of Free Thought, in reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	1.50
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers. Cosmic Philosophy.....	2.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.) Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	2.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 6 vols.....	8.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOTHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.) A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	5.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAUTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	1.50
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	1.50
The American Note-Books.....	1.50
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	1.50
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	1.50
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malbone, an Old-Fashioned Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	2.00
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELLS'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	2.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Days.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.50
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Off the Skel-lings.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mopea the Fairy; A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERBOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water. In Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50
III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treatise of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Astronautics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Friendly Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A. Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versatilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.50
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols.....	3.00
Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	6.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWIS (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL, D.O.). What's Judaism? or, a Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.50
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.) Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man., Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	3.50
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lecture and Annual Reports on Education. Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1848.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.) The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	1.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.0
Three Essays on Religion.....	2.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras. Songs of the Sun Land.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.) On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROP. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Bouscasson, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	2.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workshop. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography, and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.00
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NASSBY (PETROLEUM V.) Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkros from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.) A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	3.50
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. C. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Demonstration of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnapping; with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations—A.D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.50
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART). The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trotty Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hed in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.35
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 16 Plates and 24 Woodcuts. Scenery.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Secondary and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	1.50
The Expanse of Heaven.....	1.50
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	1.50
SCHERLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	5.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS:
1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Arnold Geddes, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best papers.....	2.50
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	3.00
SPINOZA (BENEDIKT DE). Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.50
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	0.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STEAUS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.00
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.50
TAINES'S (H. A.) History of English Literature. 4 vols.....	7.50
The Classic Room. Taine. History of English Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	3.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 6 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Fendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Emmond, and Lovel the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market.....
1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c.....
2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c.....
3. Snobs, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c.....
4. Four Georges, Humors, &c.....
5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.50
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.50
Fragment of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.50
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	3.50
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES). The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I. and V., each.....	3.50
Vol. II. IV. and VI., each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.50
Banisterings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	1.50
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 2 vols.....	5.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.50
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.50

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PAMPHLET.

FIRST MEMOIR.

CHAPTER I.
METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.
PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.
LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.
THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE. Demonstration. Axiom.

Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it demands something for nothing.

Second Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition.
Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition.
Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.
PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DEMONSTRATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.
1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.

2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.

3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.
1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.

2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.

3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.
LETTER TO M. BLANQUET ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges.....$3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gift edge.....6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Winwood Reade.....$3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothingham.....1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By Edward Clodd......75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man. By Frederika MacDonald.....1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By Joseph E. Peck......75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:
THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas of Christianity. By George Reber. 12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-paid.....2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER AND REFORMER. By Charles Sotheran. Post-paid.....1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DRINK PINE GROVE

MINERAL SPRING WATER!

The best Alkaline Chalybeate found in twenty-eight years' practice of medicine, and diligent search for the best remedies for disease. It contains alkaline matter and iron in such proportions as to promote the circulation in the portal veins, regulate the secretions, remedy constipation, and give a good appetite. The iron reproduces the red globules in the blood, and invigorates the nervous system. No experienced physician and no well-informed person can deny the good effects of the ingredients.

For Invalids, arrangements have been made with the proprietor of the New Hampshire House, and with several farmers near the Springs, for good and cheap board.

AGENCIES:

WM. H. VICKERY, Apothecary, Dover, N.H.
Z. FOSTER CAMPBELL, Apothecary, Manchester, N.H.
SULLIVAN & LOTZ, Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
SCRIPTURE & PARKER, 31 and 33 Court Square, Boston.

For Circulars, Agencies, and Information, address

Office Pine Grove Mineral Springs, DOVER, N.H.

FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION.

TRACTS.

No. I. TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY, by James Parton.

No. II. THE BIBLE AND SCIENCE, by John Weiss.

No. III. THE SYMPATHY OF RELIGIONS, by T. W. Higginson. New and enlarged edition, with index and text of important citations.

No. IV. TRANSCENDENTALISM, by Theodore Parker. Never before published. (Soon ready.)

Of No. I., single copy, mailed, 5 cents; ten for 30 cents; one hundred for $1.50.

Of Nos. II., III., IV., single copy, mailed, 10 cents; ten for 60 cents; one hundred for $3.00.

Freedom and Fellowship in Religion, a volume made up chiefly of essays and addresses given on the platform of the Free Religious Association. "One purpose of this volume is to give an answer to the question, What is the meaning of the Free Religious Association?"

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

I. INTRODUCTION. THE RELIGIOUS OUTLOOK. By O. B. F.

II. THE NATURE OF RELIGION. By David A. Wasson.

III. THE UNITY AND UNIVERSALITY OF THE RELIGIOUS IDEAS. By Samuel Longfellow.

IV. FREEDOM IN RELIGION. By Samuel Johnson.

V. RELIGION AND SCIENCE. By John Weiss.

VI. CHRISTIANITY AND ITS DEFINITIONS. By William J. Potter.

VII. THE GENIUS OF CHRISTIANITY AND FREE RELIGION. By Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

VIII. THE SOUL OF PROTESTANTISM. By O. B. Frothingham.

IX. LIBERTY AND THE CHURCH IN AMERICA. By John W. Chadwick.

X. THE WORD PHILANTHROPY. By Thomas Wentworth Higginson.

XI. RELIGION AS SOCIAL FORCE. By Edward D. Cheney.

XII. VOICES FROM THE FREE PLATFORM. 424 pp. 12mo. Price (reduced) $1.50.

Sent to Office of THE FREE RELIGIOUS ASSOCIATION, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 cents.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order.

Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISHER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES, and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,
787 Washington St., Boston.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,
PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,
139 Eighth St., New York.

THE INDEX

IN ENGLAND.

THE INDEX will be forwarded free by post to any part of the United Kingdom on receipt of an annual subscription of Fifteen Shillings. For Half Year, Eight Shillings. Remittances should be made by International P.O. Order payable to Francis Ellingwood Abbot.

Address THE INDEX,
1 Tremont Place, Boston, U.S.A.

DR. J. EDWARD BRUCE

Is prepared to lecture before Lyceums, and other societies desiring his services. He offers the following list of Lectures:—

1. The Education Question, considered as the Coming Crisis in American Politics.
2. Christian versus Chrono-Civilization.
3. The Place of Spiritual Phenomena in a Right Philosophy of Man.
4. The Origin and Development of the Spiritual Element in Man.
5. Christianity and Free Religion.
6. The Religious Outlook.
7. Supernatural Selection.
8. English Labor and English Laborers as I saw Them.

Address

J. EDWARD BRUCE, M.D.
NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and its Advocates.
BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.
THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of Two DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized.

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, {
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876,—further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,
Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,
DAMON Y. KILGORE,
ALEXANDER LOOS,
ISAAC REEN,
BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,
H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, MARCH 30, 1876.

WHOLE NO. 327.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fasts shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
- Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

ion. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

THE SUBSCRIPTIONS (paid or pledged) for the Paine bust amount already to about two hundred dollars in all. Of this sum fifty dollars were subscribed by members of the society at Florence, Massachusetts.

THE PROSPECTUS of a paper to be called the American Socialist, and edited by John H. Noyes, William A. Hinds, and F. Wayland Smith on behalf of the Oneida Community, has been issued. The first number was to be issued on March 23.

IT IS REPORTED by a cable despatch that the Vatican has sent to Madrid a protest against the religious toleration sanctioned by clauses of the new Spanish Constitution. The government is expected to send back to the Pope an "energetic reply." The more "energy" the better in such cases.

IT IS CAUSE for congratulation that the Centennial Commissioners have decided that they are not authorized to grant any space within the limits of the Exhibition grounds for the erection of a building in which religious services may be conducted. They have referred the matter back to the Council of the Philadelphia branch of the Evangelical Association, which, with what we must characterize as low ecclesiastical cunning, had requested this very improper favor. Now that the United States have appropriated $1,500,000 to the Exhibition, it would have been outrageous to permit such abuse of public grounds for church purposes.

GEORGE WILLIAM CURTIS made a Thermopylæ of the Republican State Convention at Syracuse. The Spartan Leonidas did not make a better fight against the king of Persia than did Mr. Curtis against the Xerxes of our day—Political Corruption. The Convention "presents" Roscoe Conkling for President, and has thereby imperilled the cause of good government beyond forgiveness. Look to the handwriting on the wall, you honest Republicans who have no private purse to fill by fawning on party leaders: your party is doomed, if you fail to make your voices heard. It is not too late yet, but it will soon be too late, if you do not repudiate the Conklingites and their sympathizers.

THE JOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE of the Massachusetts Legislature on the taxation of church property reported, on March 22, an act to amend the fifth section of the second chapter of the General Statutes so that houses of religious worship shall be exempted from taxation only to the amount of $12,000. Inasmuch as the proposed reform can rest only on the principle that it is unjust and unrighteous to tax the whole public indirectly for the support of the churches, this reported act leaves the inherent wrong of the practice of exemption totally unreformed; and we hope it will not become a law. It is better to wait till the principle at stake shall be recognized, and not commit the folly of supposing that justice can be secured by merely halving the injustice.

MR. E. H. HEYWOOD, editor of the Princeton Word, is the latest victim of Catholic sophistry on the school question. Bishop McQuaid swallowed him as easily as a trout snaps up a fly. "It is a burning shame," exclaims Mr. Heywood, "that Roman Catholic Bishop McQuaid should have to come all the way from Rochester to Boston to teach" us "the A B C of human liberty." Very well: if Mr. Heywood retains this amiable and unsuspecting credulity, the Bishop will gently lead him through the whole alphabet to the X Y Z of Roman Catholic bondage. Meanwhile THE INDEX will do its best to keep the editor of the Word out of the fire; for we do not know anybody whom the Bishop, if he had the power, would sooner see grilled on a gridiron than Mr. Heywood.

THE CONGRESS OF LIBERALS will be held: shall it not be held in a manner worthy of its idea? Of all the Centennial gatherings of the year, what other will mean so much? Others commemorate the past—this is to consecrate the future. There is no standing still in the life of men or of nations; progress or retrogression is the equal fate of all. Not to make the defences of religious liberty safe beyond a peradventure,—so safe as to discourage in advance every assault of its enemies,—is to invite attack; and the attack is already making. It is time for a definite, collective, emphatic, and impressive declaration of the principle of STATE SECULARIZATION—of the total liberation of the Republic from the dominion of the Church. Enough has been subscribed to insure the holding of a convention: now let enough be subscribed to make it the convention of 1876!

THE WELFARE of humanity is undoubtedly the highest object of individual human endeavor; but it is necessary to concentrate endeavor on specific ends, if results are really desired. To do this effectively, however, involves cooperation and organization and (horribile dictu) "parties." It is amusing to see with what a blind terror of "partisanship" some of our radical contemporaries are smitten, and how, in their zeal for impartiality and vast comprehensiveness, they insist on buttoning all mankind under their own waistcoats. Smiling with serene inanity on those who try to do one good thing at a time, they harness all reforms abreast, heroically go in for all human interests in a lump, and seem determined to "expand themselves to the circle of the universe." Now we remember with dismay that there is danger in this overdone expansiveness—this desperate self-puffing which mistakes itself for cosmopolitanism, and tries to be as big as the human race. The frog who tried to be as big as the ox did nothing but burst; and we are anxiously hunting for a skillful cooper to put an iron hoop or two around some imperilled reformers within our ken.

SUNDAY CONCERTS, not of a "sacred" character, yet perfectly "respectable," have been held for several months past, in Boston, at many of the best theatres and public halls—the Parker Memorial, we believe, being the first to initiate this very innocent and wholesome custom. But now, it seems, the Orthodox sentiment of Boston is bestirring itself to put down this "desecration of the Sabbath." The Boston Traveller of March 23 says: "At a meeting held in the Congregational Library, yesterday afternoon, a committee of five Christian laymen of several denominations was appointed to consider the enforcement of the Sabbath laws, and to report at a future meeting." A despatch from Toronto, of the same date, published in the New York Tribune, reports similar action in Canada: "The Evangelical Alliance intend to petition the Dominion Parliament to add a provision to the bill now before the House to the effect that no railway trains or engines be permitted to run between Saturday midnight and Sunday midnight, except in cases of necessity; that all locks on canals be closed during the same time; that no delivery be made at any post-office on Sundays, and that no mails be made up or despatched on the Sabbath. The Alliance has petitions containing this provision in circulation for signature." What does it all mean? Is there to be a revival of proscriptive Sabbatarianism? Are the wheels of progress to be reversed?

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VERMONT, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSWEGO, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATH, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BERLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 EAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Zünig, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—E. C. Spencer, President; E. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERVILLE, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

[For THE INDEX.]

American Morals and the Atonement.

BY JOHN WEISS.

What has the doctrine of the Atonement done to purify the morality of America? Is the doctrine itself essentially moral or immoral? What is the practical effect of the doctrine among those who represent belief in it? To answer these questions we must first review the doctrine itself, beginning with a brief statement of its origin.

As you know, the earliest feeling which mankind had of a relation to invisible powers was an alloy of dread and gratitude, and in the mingling of these emotions a per cent. of dread predominated. If you observe the average states of mind of savage tribes which are now existing, you will find a most ancient state of man surviving. If you are disposed to doubt this fact, it derives a rational support from those notices of history which relate to the primitive condition of man; that is, of genuine history, of authentic traditions subsequent to the legends of a Golden Age, a forfeited Paradise, and a Fall of Man. Thanks to modern research into the origin of language, religion, human customs and developments, we know that primitive man was flat upon the earth and could not fall. There has been a protracted effort of creative vitality to lift him to his feet, like that of Prospero to humanize Caliban, who said of it:—

"When thou cam'st here first,
 Thou strok'st me, and mad'st much of me,
 . . . would'st give me
 Water with berries in it, and teach me how
 To name the bigger light, and how the less,
 That burn by day and night."

And Prospero replied:—

"I pitied thee,
 Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
 One thing or other; when thou did'st not, savage,
 Know thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like
 A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes
 With words that made them known."

To which the brute answered:—

"You taught me language; and my profit on't
 Is, I know how to curse."

And this probably was the first accomplishment of the human race; the original flavor of it is still "hot i" the mouth." Invisible power was cursed or fawned upon, according to circumstances. Either way, there appeared to be in Nature an element that was mutable; at one time it catered to the stomach and the senses; at another it seemed to be in Prospero's vein:—

"Thou shalt have cramps,
 Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins
 Shall forth at vast of night that they may work
 All exercise on thee; thou shalt be pinch'd
 As thick as honeycombs, each pinch more stinging
 Than bees that made 'em."

So men learned to be politic; they grovelled, repressed their rage, and contrived methods to propitiate a master. What did those poverty-stricken communities possess with which to bribe and conciliate omnipotent power? Their own life-blood was the most precious commodity and personal estate; the rude affections which swam in its tide were spilled out to avert disaster or secure a blessing. Human sacrifices rubricated the first sombre liturgy of mankind. And the subsequent expositions and palliations of those dreadful texts are the various forms of the doctrine of Atonement.

As the manners of Caliban grew softer and his feelings of kinship more authoritative, he contrived to substitute the blood of rams, goats, and other treasures of the pasture, for sons and daughters; a transition which no doubt was protracted through many centuries. But it is compactly summed up in the legends of Abraham offering Isaac, and Agamemnon offering Iphigenia; in both cases a substitute was provided at the critical moment by a divine power. So the doctrine of substitution began to prevail and extend into all the ancient forms of propitiating a Most High. Among these, notice only the one which lies directly behind the Christian Doctrine of vicarious suffering. Once a year, in the month which corresponded to our September, the Jews gathered to assist at an Atonement for Sin. Blood was still the symbol of it,—the element which Moses forbade his people to partake of, because it held the life; "whatsoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people." The vital current was to be kept sacred for the purpose of sacrifice. Each person brought his trespass-offering to the priest who made atonement for him by sprinkling the blood upon the veil of the temple. At the close of the ceremonies, the consolidated trespasses were symbolically piled upon a goat and driven into the wilderness to perish. Then the people returned home to accumulate upon their own heads another twelvemonth of trespasses for another Atonement. The indignant language of the prophets apprizes us to what an extent the symbol became substituted for the reality in the popular mind. "To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord; I am full of the burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats. Bring no more vain oblations. Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow." This is the Lord's old stereotype plate, cast in a universal language, still sharply cut and fresh, from which successive ages issue their editions of protest against vicarious religion.

It is plain that Jesus, in the last moments of his life, did not contrive to appropriate the ancient Hebrew symbols of atonement as if they had been express anticipations of himself. The point is important to notice. The pretensions of modern theology turn upon language which, half a century after his death, were attributed to him by the men who compiled the New Testament. Matthew, Mark, and Luke have allusions to the blood; it was a Judaizing afterthought. In the Gospel of John the last scene of the Master's life contributes not a word about atoning blood. Why not? Because that Gospel was written by an Alexandrine Jew who was imbued with the sentiments of Platonism. Instead of turning the Last Supper into a symbol of the remission of sins by blood, John gives us that exquisite symbolical action of washing the disciples' feet, and makes the Master say: "I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you." The crowned heads of Catholic countries repeat this symbol every year. "In a clean ewer with a fair towel" they preside over the sprinkling of twelve poor persons' feet, and thus perform the most significant sacrament of a Church which has always welcomed the poor and neglected.

Other thoughts were in the mind of Jesus than those elaborate ones which subsequently identified him with scape-goats and the sprinkling of blood. It was the first day of the Passover, a feast which the Jew celebrated with reminiscences of gladness. If he ate bitter herbs with his unleavened bread, it was his Oriental way of recalling the bitterness of Egyptian captivity and the hardships of the wilderness. All the sentiments of that great commemoration were kindred to our own New England Thanksgiving, when we dress the feast with plenty to enjoy a grateful contrast with the bleak December, the granite coast, the scanty Indian corn, and the vast unknown wilderness that stretched between the Mayflower and the Republic.

The early Christians manifested a wiser sensibility than the later theologians, for they instituted the agape, or Love Feasts, in memory of the Last Supper, and thus delicately prolonged the sentiment of friendship and the last urgency of the Master to be remembered. Not a thought of blood entered these frequent festivals of the first Christians. That of itself alone is quite enough to discredit the bloody texts of the Evangelists and of the Judaizing Epistles. Old Jews might be caught by the sacrificial language used in Hebrews and elsewhere to convert them to Christ, but Christians at large had no such symbolic prejudices to be consulted and flattered. They were simply moved to prolong the Gospel of Fraternity and Love. By-and-by abuses crept into the frequent Love-Feasts; wealthy men used to consider it a merit to give costly entertainments and invite all the brethren,—as the Roman patricians nursed their popularity by furnishing gladiatorial shows to the populace. This also is a stereotype plate, cast in a universal language, unworn by the usage of centuries, upon which human nature prints its false invoices, expecting to smuggle through itself; namely, a dutiable thing without the duty. And the thing does get through the ports of earth, and pays enormous profits here. Perhaps at the final port of entry a sterner scrutiny awaits it. When Daniel Drew promised $200,000 to establish a Methodist college, he had a season of prayer in order to find out where the money was coming from. Fortified by addressing the Throne of Grace, he went down to Wall Street, and "in oneforenoon," said he, "I skinned those fellows out of just $200,000." It was highly meritorious, and more practically useful than that ambition of the rich Christians which led to the breaking up of Love Feasts and the establishment of a sacrament. This, at first, was merely symbolical; then the idea of commemoration was added, till at length the old texts having attained to great authority the Lord's Supper became a mystic presentation of the union of the divine and human natures, and finally an exhibition of the Atonement of a Divine Man. But when the idea of a sacrifice was first interpolated, the wealthy men who had been deprived of their opportunity to purchase merit by dining and wining poor Christians, began to make costly offerings to the Church, because at each celebration of the Supper the names of individual donors were pompously announced. Every offering was supposed to cancel the sins of the person who made it. So there was a lively competition in the business of procuring absolution for sins by donations to the Church. From this there was but a step to the purchasing of Indulgences, the abuse which first woke the thunders of Luther.

The doctrine of the Atonement was stated indistinctly and in fluctuating terms till the twelfth century. Then the Theory of Salvation from Original Sin by the Sacrifice of Christ assumed its first definite form. Previously Augustine had declared his opinion that God did not require blood in order to be reconciled with man; but that we are reconciled to God when we observe his love in sending his Son into the world. It was a method which related to our affections because it turned upon the assumption of human nature by the Creator of it. But now Anselm of Canterbury gave the doctrine the distinct meaning that an incarnate God suffered for the redemption of mankind. All sin required to be punished because it was contrary to the honor and justice of Deity. For all purposes of redemption good works are useless, because they are impossible to the heirs of Original Sin. As sin proceeded from one man, it was inherited by mankind as one Collective Man, therefore One Big Man, as big as all Mankind rolled into one, must offer the satisfaction that is impossible to single men. In men there can be no perfect obedience, but there was in the incarnate Son. Then St. Bernard modified this statement by giving his opinion that God did not require the death of his Son, in itself, as an act of suffering, but he recognized the perfect obedience in this death for sin, and accepted the will of Christ for the deed which is impossible to man.

But the Catholic Sacrament of the Eucharist dispensed with all these metaphysical evolutions, and transformed the bread and wine into the actual presence of the Atoning Savior, and made every distribution of the elements a gift of an actual Redeemer to the participants. This mythological transaction was stoutly repudiated by Luther and Calvin, who escaped from the debasing melodrama into views of the Atonement which were derived from the Hebraizing Scriptures; and the atoning blood became the central dogma of Protestantism. No matter how you state it, as, for instance, if you say with some of the early reformers that the sacrifice of Christ is not the cause of divine love toward sinful man but the effect of it, a contrivance of love to retain possession of a degraded race and to redeem it. Whichever way you juggle with the doctrine, the ugly fact remains that the redemption of mankind depends upon faith in an infinite sacrifice made by an infinite man. Private goodness and repentance pass for nothing, unless the federal debt is paid by the federal Head. Works are filthy rags unless they are continually redeemed by faith in a great sacrifice that was once made for all mankind. Virtue saves nobody who repudiates that doctrine, and vice can ruin nobody who accepts it because the acceptance buys the grace of God and cleanses the believer. It is easy to perceive what must ever be the practical effect of turning loose this spirit of Paganism and Hebraism amid the terrific competitions of the modern world. Simple societies can support their simple temptations. Superstition exhales in observances and emotional excesses; but when the reaction sets in the individual finds that the tether of his vice is short, and the end of it soon reached. But in our complicated civilization vice rages like an epidemic engendered by ill-drained doctrines of the past. When people understand that the foulness of their nature can be vicariously carried off to be disinfected by the grace of God, the outlets of their premises fall into neglect. How divine is that silent ordinance which cleanses the body and keeps every hidden organ pure by insensible transpiration through the skin! When the million pores are choked, some vice that wanted to escape is obliged to retreat and fall back upon some vital function. This occurs in the moral life whenever a man attaches sanitary value to an inward mental straining toward a doctrine of substituted health. It is as if one should imagine that the dangerous fluxes of his body are carried off by a course of metaphysics.

How then, you will ask, have all the various forms of sacrificial religion been illustrated by such suffering for conscience' sake, such martyrdoms in the arena of tyranny, such benevolences, such unselfish devotion to the welfare of mankind? Did the power which animated these good works of patience and charity emanate from a false doctrine? Will men and women let themselves be thrown to beasts, be crucified sooner than recant, be cast in prison rather than offer to idols, strip their lives of every grace and joy, go unclad and fasting to clothe and feed the destitute, impoverish their store to put the cup of water to thirsting lips, merely to minister to an imaginary Christ, a pretended ransom for many, a fraud of priests and theologians? The reply to this directs us toward the inexhaustible source of moral power which human nature lavishes upon all its creeds. It is no more strange that the Christian, inspired by faith in a Redeemer, should resist an empire which tried to force him to his knees, than that Leonidas, with the tradition of a liberating Hercules in his heart, should gird himself for the hopeless work of Thermopylae. The first monument to Miltiades who rolled up the Persian host at Marathon was a pile of armor called a trophy; Themistocles, excusing his own ambition, said that the trophy of Miltiades would not let him sleep. Miltiades was a brave, indomitable man, but he could not add a single cubit to his stature. His adoring countrymen piled his trophy up as high as they could reach. So the spoils of every contest magnify its hero to supernatural dimensions. The size fills every eye, but size transfers no inspiring flame to the soul. While the eye is looking at the magnified tradition, the heart detects the genuine form around which it is built; that is, another heart, self-sacrificing, at once altar and immolator, offering itself up for mankind, standing in the imminent breach, planting its sanguine color in the astonished faces of the enemy; a heart, willing enough by nature to ransom all men as fast as they are born; the perfect willingness fascinates men; it is so uncommon, so preciously strange, so senselessly peculiar; men strain their eyes with looking at the holy prodigal, till the tears are brought, through which his portrait looms too large for earth, and heaven itself is fastened down here to this planet, as if with tent-pegs, to make a screen to catch the lofty image. The human heart works this miracle of aggrandizing its lovers till they walk as gods. It is the old story, begun in the far East, migrating westward to improve various mythologies and set up an atoning Christ at last. The sons of God are always miraculously conceived in the lowly manger of the human heart.

It is also doubtless true that in ages of implicit faith in supernatural doctrine a great zest is imparted to enthusiasm. When the first Christians thought that the world might end before they died, so that the mortal eye would see the millennial Lord coming to take them up into the air, there was bred a fanaticism of carelessness, neglect of self, disregard of persecution and privation, a sublime contempt for all that man could do to them. This temper lasted long after the expected season passed and no apocalyptic heaven opened; it was transferred to the heirs. Even to-day this tradition of a Second Coming can mislead men into selling all they have, dissolving partnerships, and surrendering themselves to wait for the blessed appearance. When we observe from time to time a revival of an ancient temper like this, we see what it must have been like, and to what lengths it must have gone in its days of palmy sincerity.

So in the sincere days of every supernatural belief the imagination can inflame human virtue to great prowess. The mind and the heart are partners for life in all countries. But as a woman idealizes a man, so the heart overestimates the contents of the mind. A very fantastic and laughter-provoking husband the average mind has been, but the heart never finds it out. Superbly unconscious, absurdly content, lusting after no other partner, she keeps the family together, and brings up the children with memorable strokes of housekeeping.

But the valor of human goodness is by no means to be credited to the mental doctrine which is found in its company. It is a sex as independent as a woman's. If the doctrine serves to convey the sentiment of sacrifice, or to enforce it, it is owing to the generous assumption of the heart, just as every woman is infallibly bent upon regarding her husband as her heaven-born guardian and protector till he succeeds in destroying her illusion.

The mischief which a doctrine of vicarious sacrifice can do appears when it is emphasized against the natural goodness of the heart. Then Calvinism procures a decree of divorce against the faithful, long-tried helpmeet to whom so much of its profit and fame have been owing. She retires into the alimony of sentiment. She languishes in fruitless recollection of the hours of love. The ransoming spirit in Christ was her spouse; he now lives apart as a professional ransom, a commissioner of pardons issued to everybody who will make oath that virtue is unpardonable without his certificate. He has paid the price of all. He is the infinite pardon-broker who has settled on certain terms with the Infinite Justice. No justification nor salvation exists by righteousness alone.

Calvinism says: "Lord, I am willing to renounce all other hopes, refuges, and righteousness, and to rely upon thee only. Duties cannot justify me, tears cannot wash me, reformation cannot save me; nothing but thy righteousness can answer for me."

That is the key-note of American Calvinism frankly struck. The subtlest intellects of the creed attempt to modify the pitch of it, so that it can be assumed by a rationalizing civilization, in vain. As the sound of the trumpet suggested to a blind man the color of scarlet, so the Calvinistic tone, upon whatever instrument it is played, calls up the tint of substituted blood. Another person offers up his veins that the operation of transfusion may be performed upon us. Nobody was ever yet known to rally from that medical expedient which seems to give only a temporary filip to the invalid, and cheat him with false hopes.

The late Dr. Bushnell tried his wit upon the accommodation of the vicarious idea to the natural common-sense of men. By a series of admirable statements, logically conceived, he succeeded in reducing the popular idea to its vanishing point, and then administered to the moribund thing the extreme unction of all the sacrificial terms, swinging them like censers, lifting them up like the Catholic host, striving to call into the falling eyes a look of love for the old words which he had just bled to death. As Dr. Bartol has justly remarked: "To explain Calvinism as he has done is to explode it. Like iron conductors melted by the overwhelming thunderbolt that passes through them, all the old double and twisted wires of argument are dissolved by his white-heated wit, which they could not carry. No total depravity, arbitrary election, substitutional redemption, in the sound sense, is left." It is enough to recollect that he was put under the ban of heresy, to be convinced that Calvinism has nailed its red rag to the mast, whence whose would cannot haul it down.

The latest and sincerest statement of the virtue of the atoning blood is found in a discourse just delivered in the Hippodrome. Here are some leading sentences:—

"If you are sheltered by the blood of the Son of God, you are as safe as any man or woman on the face of the earth. That is not character; that is not deeds; it is the blood. God says, 'When I see the blood, I will pass over you.'"

"The old preacher, on his death-bed, pointed to a text of the blood, and declared he put his hope on that alone. It was not his preaching, it was not his good deeds,—away with them; works are all right in their place, but they do not save us; it was not what he had done, but what the blood had done. So it is not the strongest, nor those who have the best character, who are the safest, but those who are behind the blood."

"When Christ was down here, they said to Him, 'What shall we do?' Did He tell them to build colleges, teach in the Sabbath-school class, preach to the drunkard, feed the hungry, and clothe the naked? Ten thousand times, No! This is it; the work of God is to believe on Him."

It is of little consequence that Calvinism commends the practice of virtue, urges men to be pure, honest, lovely, and of good report, supports beneficial reforms, encourages revivals of religion. The whole moral effort is impaired by the vicarious doctrine which looms in the background, the phantom of a Redeemer, vast, impressive, throwing the little candles of our good deeds into shadow, and blurring with the same shadow the outlines of depravity. A federal depravity is supposed to be sopped up by that shadow, leaving individual vices to run round at large. There is a late twilight reigning that is created by a sun long set; vermin skulk, night-birds go mousing in the kindly gloom. Calvinism throws the whole stress of a man's faith upon the subjective doctrine of an Atonement made once for all to the divine justice. No wonder that human justice is incessantly employed in looking up the believers in that doctrine. Moral practice must be insensibly weakened by any afterthought like this of substituted righteousness. A noted Methodist preacher says: "A saint is like a lame wife, who cannot walk without the arm of her husband. Her arm gets crooked because it has so long relied on this support. So a true saint is known by this crook in the arm, this falch that leans on Christ." Yes, in this country, at least, the saints are known by a crook. The consequences of leaning on another man's righteousness were never more compactly stated. Let us not mortify and tire ourselves with the long record of Calvinistic villainies; crooked whiskey, crooked paper, crooked bribing and conniving, crooked bank-accounts, might show even a Methodist what it is to lean on Christ.

When a doctor perceives that his patient is in need of dieting, and recommends to him rigid abstinence, but at the same time holds forth to him a great specific, pleasant and easy to take, but quite essential to a cure, what is the average result? The patient swallows the specific, and goes on feeding and drinking as before. The medicine does not entice physical morality out of any organ; at no point of its passage through the body does it make the man in love with abstinence.

All doctrines which originate in the idea of sacrifice and expiation appeal strongly to emotion; its expression will be modified by the different temperaments of the races, but it is always so absorbing and exhausting that persons feel as if they had been working out salvation. It preoccupies the nature, taxes its sensibility to the utmost; ordinary life seems trivial, and is resumed with a sense of annoyance. Like novel-reading, which summons a crowd of passions and drains all the tears we have to spare, it leaves us dissatisfied with the privations of the day, and somewhat relaxed to meet its duties. And vast numbers of people have only a limited amount of nerve-power. They can only stand a few gills of fervor. The hands tremble so afterward that they are quite liable to slip into the wrong pocket. Melting views of Christ melt away the distinctions of weak minds. A colored sister happened to spy another in the act of appropriating a goose. The slight "irregularity" was not noticed at the time; but in the evening, when they were present at a powerful praise-meeting, and the thief had reached a high state of glory, shouting for the Lord, the sister could not resist the delicious opportunity. Bending over, she whispered, "How about dat goose?" Calm, but resolute, like a detected culprit who calls upon Massachusetts to remember his services, she turned: "Lor' bress your heart! Do you spose I'm gwine to let dat goose stan' 'tween me and my Jesus?"

Now Calvinism expressly claims that the doctrine of the Atonement is not only energetic for righteousness, but indispensable to procure it; a doctrine too vital to spindle into speculative belief. It has a twofold energy: to direct divine grace toward the believer in it, and to melt the believer's heart into emulation for the Redeemer's perfect obedience. If this be so, I call upon Calvinism to justify its pretension at the bar of facts. It is now busy in thousands of churches, in rinks and hippodromes, appealing to the soul's emotional sensibility, preaching a pilgrimage to the foot of the cross, counting the wounds that were inflicted for our sakes, catching the dripping blood in the cups of hymns, exhorting the country to wash its scarlet sins in the cleansing tide. I call upon this fervent Calvinism to explain why the vast multitude of the liberal thinkers, the unchurched, the unsectarian, the unorthodox souls in this country contribute the smallest per cent. to its popular vices of fraud, dishonesty, swindling, uncleanness; why the names of the most prominent sinners are high upon the rolls of churches of the Immaculate Conception, of the Redemption, the Incarnation, the Messiah; why it is that while the tenants of pews have their emotions fixed upon a single crucifixion, a thousand crucifixions of righteousness are daily perpetrated; why, when a traditional sentiment is kindled upon numerous altars of the Atonement, the souls of church-members are not purged by the fire? I call upon Calvinism to account for the prevalence of decorous and decent living among the Jews of this country, who furnish cases of crime so seldom as to confer an aspect of anomaly upon those which do occur. The Church will never forget that the Jews crucified their Lord, and were denationalized in consequence. Certainly among the blessings which have been dealt to Western nations an eminent one is the dispersion of the Jews. It has been bad for Jerusalem, I know; but I hope that they will never return there; for wherever they have carried their household God, the Psalm and the Prophecy have reworded the old hatred of idolatries and uncleanness. Driven out of Arabia into Italy and Spain, thence into Germany, Holland, England, they have gathered up treasures of learning and subtle thinking, of domestic purity and simplicity and the old hatred of tyrants, and with their habits of industry and thrift have enriched place after place to which they fled. Yet they are destitute of an atoning Savior. If it be true, as the theologians claim, that this indestructible race has been scattered in punishment for the crucifixion of a heaven-sent man, it has heaped coals of fire on the head of Providence by preventing a thousand crucifixions of heaven-sent genius in art, music, letters, and liberty. And here the chosen people are, bringing with them symphony and song, and lifting up a chant of goodness against the Orthodox Church which pretends to stigmatize them and to sail above the stigma a scroll of mockery,—"This is the King of the Jews." By their fruits ye shall know them.

And here, too, are one or two million Germans, who have come over here with both hands free and brain unshackled, to serve no creed, to be no party-slaves, animated with the hope of doing something to earn the title of American citizen, as Carl Schurz has done. Observe their unsophisticated ways, admire their harmless amusements and childlike abandonment to them. No sectarian taint is in their blood; they have no plety to speak of, they do not run in debt for meeting-houses, and are not eager to procure sittings in our pews. The great majority of them are cast loose here without a Redeemer; but they are well-acquainted with the element of sacrifice, and out of that nettle they have plucked the flower of probity. I call upon Calvinism to explain why the free-living, free-spoken, lager-drinking, unsectarian Germans contribute such a slight per cent. to the crimes which destroy confidence, uproot the tender plant of credit, poison the domestic air. Once a year in every German home there stands a Christmas tree; the American evergreen is not jealous of the custom, and graces it fragrantly. Look among the branches of that tree for gifts to America of tricks, dodges, confidence games, forgeries, recipes for overreaching. No doubt you may find some, but they are so insignificant in number, compared with the contributions of the sects to the season of Christmas, that you thank God the German does not sit much under the blessed influences of the Gospel.

I sometimes hear it said in extenuation that the Calvinists of every stripe constitute the more numerous body, and therefore naturally furnish the greater number of delinquents. This is a weak evasion of the vital point that Calvinism assumes to possess and to administer the sole, sovereign, indispensable specific for the prevention and cure of delinquency. The liberals of every stripe, the churchless, the creedless, the spiritualists, the neutrals, the half-hearted Orthodox, the Teutonic element, constitute a formidable and increasing crowd which practices virtue without the means of grace. How is it managed? That is the vital point of the great indictment; not that there is a merely natural rate of vice under the doctrine of the atonement, but that there is virtue of the highest style outside of it.

There is a favorite Orthodox text in Corinthians: "The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness." How is it then that those who really perish, who grow sear upon the tree of goodness, and come to the ground with such an audible rustling, sit so largely under that preaching? It has been the exclusive boast of Calvinists that "we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, the power of God and the wisdom of God." I call, then, upon Calvinism to explain why those who are not called, who are not covenanted, who refuse the means of grace, to whom the preaching of vicarious righteousness is foolishness indeed, have furnished, and continue to furnish, this country with the men and women who cannot be buried without the fertile eulogy irrigated by our tears, upon whose graves flowers in the form of crosses are aptly laid to mark the bodies that brimmed over with self-sacrifice and perfect obedience, whose broken alabaster sends a perfume round the world. The lives of heroes damage Calvinism more than the lives of its rascals and hypocrites, because the world imputes their righteousness to themselves and to their contempt for the notion that another man can be their substitute. When a republic follows Sumner to the tomb, the funeral march beats accent upon his freedom from doctrines that demoralize and vices that enslave; when the bells tolled in the early morning to apprise the country that Lincoln's heavenly part had been withdrawn to seek some native heaven, each stroke gave another dint to our heart's conviction that righteousness exalteth a nation; and we measured the height of the man, whose life was a ransom for many, by the depth of his indifference toward a sectarian atonement. And so we were content that the clear eye of Dr. Howe should be dimmed, his ears made deaf and his tongue speechless, because he had no religion to speak of, no doctrine to speak for him; but the blind received their sight, the deaf heard, and the poor, the insane, the idiotic, came to him, the heretic philanthropist, to be redeemed. Even Calvinism praised the life that was a cutting sarcasm on its pretension to a monopoly of divine grace. So, too, Charlotte Cushman left the mimic stage that lighted her so often the way to dusty death, and, with the brief candle of her sorrow in her hand, walked piously and with resolution toward the great reality, as innocent of being saved by blood as any child could be, her whole career a vital protest against the dishonorable stain, a loud dismissal of it,—"out, damned spot! out, I say!" And ere the crosses which her tender mates of the theatre sent to have her virtue lifted on them, have withered, I hear a whisper from a Calvinistic pulpit, a regret that she was not a Christian of the proper stripe, and that so much goodness, such industry, such unbending rectitude, such firmness and decision, went to make an actress! If dissembling be a prime quality of the actor's life, the Calvinistic Church is becoming fast a dangerous rival of the theatre, and might supply successive relays of actors to the stage instead of to the goal. The turpitude that is suspected to exist behind the scenes is not yet black enough to welcome as comrades these graduates of an atoning God. These vicarious moralists who hurry past the theatre as if it were the gate of hell, are rapidly buying up seats in the pit of our moral detestation.

What a crushing indictment do these incessant disclosures frame against the doctrine of the popular religion that Christ died for our sins! Will that perfect man assume the rascalities of preachers and church-members? Is he at this moment engaged in making intercession for them with God because he satisfied justice once for all by letting Jews hang him on a cross? If the divine justice has been satisfied, why do we unearth and prosecute these rogues? Shall mortal man be more just than God? Their atonement has been made, their faith has been pledged to it, their doctrinal redemption has been sealed. From the prison, the scaffold, the limbo of our disgust and wrath, they ought to pass, confident of hearing, "Come, ye blessed of my father!"

The glory of Calvinism was exhaled from its struggle with principalities and powers, and hovers over some memorable passages of the past. The Catholic and the Anglican churches crushed the Calvinist into a salutary minority. All the non-conforming souls, all the oppressed, all premature dreamers of a republic, naturally sought shelter under the wings of a protesting religion; they were freely spread; there Calvinism brooded over the little ones of a new era, and kept their hearts warm all night till day appeared. What could be more aristocratic than her doctrine that a certain number of souls are predestined to be saved? The system of caste in the ancient Brahmanism is not more aristocratic than a doctrine of the elect; it promises, in fact, that heaven shall be an oligarchy of predestined saints. In strict logic, Calvinism sets up an odious monopoly of souls. But few men are capable of being strictly logical; and none care to be where family and kindred are involved. So that a theology which was the most aristocratic in theory has been the most republican in practice, because it was forced into the attitude of protecting the lowly, and of advocating human rights. Its bearing was so much of a threat that the Old World could not tolerate its presence; it fled, to be a herald crying in our wilderness. Here it invented and stoutly defended municipal usage, congregational discipline. The parish and the town-meeting trained the people for liberty. Calvinism was a shield between natural principles of justice and arbitrary doctrines of discipline in Church and State. It stood up for the morals which were native to human liberty. If it had not done so, we should not be at liberty to-day to observe how those natural morals which once made Calvinism so illustrious, and a terror to tyrants, have shrunk "into the lean and slippered Pantaloon" of a decrepit doctrine. The great exigency of a struggle for life or death has passed away. It was not waged by doctrine, but by the ethics which are native to the heart. Even in the austere days of Winthrop, Dudley, and their colleagues of the soul, when the Antinomian and the Quaker felt the feel of Calvinistic dogma, there was an instinct that the Church and the Colony must stand or fall together. Schism in the one threatened the life of the other. Unity of doctrine was defended that municipal rights might be preserved. Eddies of opinion rocked the nest too violently; a half-fledged Massachusetts was all but spilled out and ruined. Since then Calvinism, in the April of 1688, bravely resisted the usurpation of Andros, and, in the April of 1775, finished the work of the preceding century. But when the anti-slavery agitation came we saw clearly that her morals had decayed. It was because her historical function had been fulfilled. She had given life and religious sanction to a great republic, employing in the effort every generous impulse of the natural heart. When she achieved success, these impulses were put upon the retired list. Righteousness, that "cheap defence of nations," was dismantled, and Calvinism reduced herself to a peace establishment. Then her aristocratic tendency appeared, unmodified, unchecked. She became a great comfort to tyrants. Bishops, presidents of universities, leading clergymen, Orthodox politicians, furnished the slave-holder with a patriarchal Bible. The republican texts were printed in small type: "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free, and be not entangled again" (as you were in the Old World) "in the yoke of bondage"; "Do unto others as you would have them do to you"; "God hath made of one blood all people"; "The doctrine that cometh from above is first pure, then peaceable." The oligarchic texts were printed clear to every eye-sight: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's,"—if any be left let God have them; "Servants, be obedient to them that are your masters according to the flesh"; "Be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates." Calvinism gathered all the broken fetters which were the spoil of her warfare, and melted them down into fresh ones for the slave. Her foundry was still hot enough for that, but the fuel that the heart once supplied was all raked out of it. St. Paul himself sent back a fugitive slave. A great point was made of this by the Church which had run away from oppression. Her abandonment of natural morality during the anti-slavery epoch was the turn of the tide; it has not since rallied. So deep is the ebb that the whole coast of the country is covered with decayed and stranded reputations which used to float upon her spring-tide. Her doctrines are still at anchor in the offing, the lines of her model rest proudly on the water, but the temptations of a new epoch have riddled her from stem to stern. The teredo honeycombs her hull. Her doctrines, no longer inspired with a generous flame of hatred of tyrants, can no longer attract the natural ardor of hearts. A long and sickening record of profligate circumstances proves her to be unequal to the liberation of souls from the clutches of gain and passion; all the more incompetent because her doctrine of a substitution for sin flatters a tempted period into a morbid taste for sinning. The Orthodox rascal is vastly more logical than the Church which repudiates his inference. His Church has spent a thousand years in teaching him that he is justified by faith.

What is the remedy? No question was ever fitted with a plainer answer. Calvinism herself contributes an illustrious experience to the country's hope of becoming redeemed by substitution of the natural morals and piety for every doctrine which weakens private responsibility and supports sacrificial refuges for lies. No form of theology is strictly logical. The only irrefutable syllogism is morality.

TAXATION OF CHURCH PROPERTY.

ARGUMENT BEFORE THE JOINT SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF THE MASSACHUSETTS LEGISLATURE, AT A PUBLIC HEARING, BOSTON, MARCH 14, 1876.

BY R. P. HALLOWELL.

MR. CHAIRMAN, AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMITTEE:—

In the month of July, 1874, in compliance with a resolve of the General Court, the Governor and Council appointed a Commission to inquire into the expediency of revising and amending the laws of the State relating to taxation and the exemptions therefrom. The report of that Commission was duly made. A majority of the Commissioners reported unequivocally in the favor of the entire exemption of church property from taxation. It may reasonably be taken for granted that whatever can be said, or certainly the best that can be said, in the interest of exemption, is to be found within the covers of that report. The high character of the Commission, of which Professor Seelye of Amherst College, and now a member of Congress, was a prominent member, and the reputation of the President of Harvard College, whose essay upon the subject forms a part of the report, may well make it the text-book of exemptionists. We who petition for church taxation cannot do better, perhaps, than to examine the argument as stated by these Commissioners. I propose, therefore, to call your attention to what, as I read it, may be regarded as the main and leading argument presented.

Religion, we are told (page 166), is "the foundation of national prosperity"; and again (page 161), "the State uses religion, and favors its advancement, because it is a means of civilization." "State favor may more properly be granted to institutions of religion than to any other, since all the prosperity of any State—its culture, its freedom from crime, its social order—will rest ultimately upon the religion of its subjects, and will be perfect in exactly the degree that this religion is perfect and completely prevalent."

Religion is the root of civilization, and therefore churches must be fostered by the State. That is the argument of the Commission. Now whether or not "religion is the foundation of national prosperity," depends upon what is meant by religion. If the term is a synonym for culture, virtue, morality, and piety, the proposition might be granted. But such is not the definition accepted by the great body of churches now exempted from taxation, and for which the Commissioners plead. Such a definition is repudiated by nine-tenths of them. The Roman Catholic will tell you that his religion implies primarily the absolute authority of his Church, with an infallible Pope at its head. The great majority of Protestant Christians will tell you that a confession of faith in some theological creed, and a belief in the divine inspiration of the Bible, are the first requisites, the essential elements, of a religious life. Without this faith and without this belief, whatever else a man may be, he is not religious. He may have acquired all the culture that a life of study can give; he may be distinguished for his learning, his virtue, his morality, and his piety; the object and aim of his life may be to promote "civilization," to secure "social order," and to increase "national prosperity,"—but he cannot be a church-member; he is not recognized as a religious man by the church organization. Theodore Parker was emphatically such a man, and there was not a church in the Commonwealth that would admit him into fellowship. Churches were to be found, however, wherein men prayed to God to make an end of Mr. Parker's life, because he exposed the superstition and denounced the bigotry of the churches. Church religion claims to include virtue and morality as subordinate elements, but it means and professes to mean, primarily and essentially, theological creeds, doctrines, and dogmas,—and this is what it has always stood for in the Christian world, from the time that Christianity gained State ascendancy over other systems of religion, in the Roman Empire, down to the present moment.

That churches have a monopoly of virtue, of morality, of piety, or of virtuous, moral, or devout men and women, some zealots may be bold enough to claim; but no one of ordinary intelligence and culture will admit it. That they enjoy a monopoly of theological religion, that this is the key-stone of the arch of almost every religious sect, no one will deny. Church religion, by confession of the Church, is theological religion; and this is the religion that puts in its claim for State patronage and favor, upon the plea that it is the foundation of State prosperity.

Test this plea by an appeal to history, and it cannot stand a moment. On the contrary, it is my profound conviction, that Church religion has ever been and now is an obstacle, a hindrance—I had almost said a curse—to civilization. The religious wars of Europe—often conducted with all the cruelty that human ingenuity could devise,—wars, not for the promotion of piety, virtue, and morality, but for the triumph of Church religion in the State; the Spanish Inquisition; the horrible massacre of St. Bartholomew; the banishment of the Huguenots from France; the conflict between Catholicism and Protestantism in England; the persecution of dissenters in the Massachusetts Colonies,—these, with similar facts to be found on nearly every page of history, go far to confirm this view of the question. I do not propose to ignore the service to civilization performed by the Christian Church, Catholic and Protestant, in past ages. I desire to recognize it; but, after making full acknowledgment, I do maintain that civilization would be far in advance of where it now is, had the world remained in entire ignorance of the theological differences that gave birth to religious sects,—to sects that have sought either to impose their religion upon the State, or to secure the patronage of the State, by prolonged and cruel wars, by imprisonment, banishment, and persecution, and by Church tithes; or, to use more modern phraseology, by Church exemption from taxation.

Such, Mr. Chairman, harsh as it may appear to you, is my estimate of the value of Church religion to the State, and in the light of history it is a fair and proper estimate.

But let us assume, sir, that I am altogether wrong, and that the Commissioners are altogether right. Let us assume that Church religion is the foundation of national prosperity; that it is to be recognized not only as one of the forces that enter into civilization, but as the basis of them all,—does it follow therefore that churches are proper objects of State favor and patronage? The Commissioners answer, Yes, and appeal to the history of this Commonwealth to sustain them. I answer, No, with all the emphasis and conviction of which I am capable; and I appeal to the same history to vindicate my answer.

The Commissioners quote some laws and resolves passed by the founders of this State, and thereby demonstrate very clearly that in the early days the Church was fostered and favored by legislation. The founders laid down the principle upon which to-day churches are exempted from taxation.

We agree as to that fact. They sought to establish a theocratic commonwealth. First, a true Church; second a righteous State. They sought to secure religious liberty solely within the limitations of Puritanism. They granted civil liberty where it was supposed to promote Church interests; they denied it wherever it was supposed to conflict with Church interests. And now, gentlemen, permit me to call your attention to the laws by which the Puritan fathers attempted to maintain their theocracy, to vindicate their belief that Church religion is the prime necessity of the State, and must be sustained by State patronage and favor.

The Massachusetts and Plymouth Colony Court Records show that Roman Catholic priests were forbidden to come within the jurisdiction of the Colony. The Quakers, denounced by the law as "accursed heretics," were fined, imprisoned, publicly whipped, branded with hot irons, and horribly tortured by the mutilation of their bodies. Persons above sixteen years of age, professing Christianity, might be punished for denying the inspiration of any of the books of the Bible. Any one denying the immortality of the soul was liable to banishment. Penalties were inflicted for failure to attend church-gatherings. Church-members alone were allowed to vote. The people were taxed to maintain church and minister. Minister and church were exempt from tax for the commonwealth; the minister in part, the church altogether.

Such, gentlemen, was the character of our Puritan laws. They were the natural and logical result of an honest effort—I might add of a theologically religious effort—to apply in the fulness of its meaning the proposition, that as “religion is the foundation of national prosperity,” therefore the churches are proper “objects of State favor and patronage.” Such was their character, and such, moreover, is to some extent the character of all legislation of which we have knowledge that has sought to engraft the Church upon the State. Often cruel and barbarous, it has always been unjust and oppressive. We may grant or deny the claim raised for Church religion by the Commissioners. We may accept or reject President Eliot’s theory that the State “needs” the churches; but the proposition that the separation of Church and State is a necessity under a free government, and that their entire independence is essential to the progress of civilization,—this proposition is one which, with solemn warning, history teaches us to accept; and it is one which the American people have accepted. Our Puritan Fathers experimented with the theocratic principle, and failed. Their experiment and failure teach us that any bond between State and Church, beyond that which guarantees protection to the churches in common with other corporations, is dangerous, if not fatal, to religious liberty.

We are to-day experimenting with the republican principle, and shall succeed or fail as we are faithful or false to it. Lord Macaulay, in his History of England, remarks that “in logic none but idiots admit the premises and deny the legitimate conclusion; but in practice we see that great and enlightened communities often persist, generation after generation, in asserting principles, and refusing to act on those principles.” So it is with us. Generations have passed away since we declared for a republic. We long ago repudiated theocracy; but the practices that grew out of it have been perpetuated with the pertinacity which has ever marked the history of religious bigotry and superstition. Our statute-books are still marred by theocratic and anti-republican laws. Great progress has been made, but reformatory work is still in order. Roman Catholics and Quakers walk the streets of Boston without fear of molestation; men express their opinion of the Bible and the doctrine of immortality, and are not punished. Every one is protected in his right to perform public worship when and where it may please him, or to omit such performance altogether. Church membership is no longer the voter’s qualification, and there is no direct tax imposed for the support of clergymen. So much has been gained; so far we have been true to our republican professions. We no longer pay church-tithes, directly as such; but, by exemption of church property from taxation, church-tithes are levied upon every tax-payer in the Commonwealth. So long as this exemption continues, we are false to our republican professions. President Eliot avows very distinctly (page 371) that the State exempts the churches simply because exemption is the “cheapest” method of supporting them. He apparently believes that the direct tax was abolished from motives of financial economy. If then it can be proven that the church-tithe system will save a few dollars for the treasury, the State is ready to return to it! Are you, Mr. Chairman, ready to indorse that proposition? Are the people of this Commonwealth ready to indorse it? Carry the proposition to the polls, and overwhelming majorities will declare that church-tithes were abolished, not from motives of financial economy, but in conformity with republican principles; and that an attempt to renew them would be an assault upon religious liberty. This, I assert, would be the verdict of the people, and it would be a righteous and true verdict.

President Eliot makes little or no distinction between churches and educational institutions in his argument for exemption. Here again I am sure he differs from the majority of his fellow-citizens. The State orders the establishment of public schools, enacts laws for their government, levies taxes for their support, pays the teachers out of the public funds, and compels attendance where children are not otherwise educated. Now if theological religion was, in the mind of the people, “the foundation of national prosperity”; if the people regarded it as essential as secular education; if, with President Eliot, they placed churches and schools on the same list of State necessities,—then we should soon see established in every city and town churches supported by direct taxation, ministers paid from the public funds, and pews filled by compulsion. The American States now do more directly for the promotion of secular education than any other civilized nation, Germany excepted; and by President Eliot’s own confession (page 375) they “do less for the institutions of religion directly than any civilized nation.” And yet we are asked to believe that the American people value religious institutions as they value educational institutions, and; to quote the language of the Commissioners, that “State favor more properly be granted to them” than to any other institutions! And an appeal to our history is made to sustain the proposition! It will do so only when we read it backwards. The American people, and especially the people of Massachusetts, have steadily but surely drifted away from the old Puritan moorings, and every day show less inclination to tolerate the Church assumption of a claim to State support.

I have quoted Lord Macaulay’s remark upon the inconsistencies of great and enlightened communities. I know of no more marked illustration of this inconsistency than is to be found in the attitude of this community towards the churches. The great majority of churches declare that the primary object of their existence is the salvation of souls, and that all the virtues combined cannot save a man from eternal damnation. To secure salvation, it is necessary to believe in certain dogmas of the Christian Church; as a logical necessity, therefore, it is the primary duty of the churches to convert the unbeliever and to strengthen the faith of the converted. What these dogmas are depends upon the sect which announces them. Why is the Church divided into sects? Is it because men differ on questions of morals? On the contrary, we have a system of ethics common to our civilization, and practically accepted by Catholic and Protestant, Orthodox and Heterodox alike. For the promotion of social welfare we can and do work together harmoniously; but the moment religious welfare is in question, we split into opposing sects,—each sect has its special faith, and all else is heresy.

The existence of the sect is due to the paramount importance attached to the special faith. We have in Massachusetts nearly two thousand churches, by their own confession, established in the interest of sectarianism. They support nearly as many ministers, whose primary duty is to preach theological religion. They maintain thirteen hundred Sunday-schools in which teachers are busy sowing sectarian seeds, in the shape of theological dogmas, in the minds of children. That these children learn something of morals is admitted; but that they are instructed primarily and almost exclusively in the mysteries of theological religion cannot be denied. If you doubt the statement, read the catalogue of tracts published by the Young Men’s Christian Association, and examine the shelves of the Sunday School Union book-stores.

Now what is the attitude of the State toward these institutions? It meets them at the threshold of the public school and says: “No trespassing here. You cannot enter. The public school is for the commonwealth. You are for the propagation of theological religion. The State knows nothing of theological religion; has no place for Baptist or Quaker, Protestant or Catholic, Christian or Infidel. The State sees only a citizen of the Commonwealth.” And thus it rebukes the pretensions of the sects to public favor. Yet, curiously enough, after the citizen has entered the school, but before instruction is given, by order of the State the Bible must be read; and thus we are guilty of a glaring inconsistency. As if, however, to repair the error, to atone for the apparent concession made, and to turn it into stern rebuke of Church pretensions, it is ordered that the reading shall be “without written note or oral comment.”

These facts sufficiently indicate the attitude of the State toward the Church, as viewed from one standpoint. They show a fixed resolve to reject all applications for patronage, and a determination to resist every effort to form an alliance. They imply a policy that will ultimately confine the Church within the limits of private enterprise. On the other hand, however, we see the same community employing chaplains in the army, and navy, and legislative bodies. We see it sustaining a law that commits us to the support of sectarian institutions, to the advocacy of sectarian theology. By law we forbid theological instruction in the public schools, and by law we support schools established for the express purpose of teaching theology! The assessed value of church property exempted in this State is $30,901,912,—a greater amount, by over two million dollars, than the value of educational institutions and all other exempted property combined. So long as this vast amount continues exempt, we are as surely taxed for the purposes to which it is devoted as we should be if church-tithes were collected by the tax-gatherer.

The conflict of principles involved in our attitude towards the Church marks, on the one side, the distance we have travelled from Puritanism, and, on the other, the distance we must journey before we arrive at republicanism. Shall we go forward or backward? We cannot stop where we are. The hands on the dial must move; and the question upon which you, gentlemen of the Committee, are to report to the General Court is in which direction shall they move. If you believe in a theocracy, you will favor the continuance of the exemption law,—you will help to push back the hands upon the dial. If you have faith in republicanism, you will ask for a repeal of the law, and so contribute your share of the work in the building up of a FREE STATE.—New Age (corrected).

THOMAS PAINE’S BUST.

Mr. Thomas Paine has still many admirers. Some of these propose to place a marble bust of him in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, “as a recognition of his great services in behalf of human liberty.” We think that Mr. Paine’s revolutionary services have been overrated. We are still willing to admit that he was a sharp and clever pamphleteer, an adept in a certain kind of political dialectics not of the highest order, but with a homely and vigorous way of asserting truths which should never have been disputed. His writings did the service of newspapers when newspapers were very few. The Congress used him, and to the best of its power rewarded him. He was not, however, a man for whom it was possible to do much. He was conspicuously a hard drinker even in those days of hard drinking, and he disregarded most social restraints. He does not seem to have kept the friendship of the leading men of the Revolution; and he died in solitude and comparative poverty. His memory is maintained by those who think as he did, that Christianity is a fraud and a delusion. His political services are used to bolster up his reputation by those who would not have cared much for his politics if he had been a professed antagonist of their disbelief. There may be historical propriety in placing his bust in the Hall. Its presence there can hardly be misinterpreted. It will be recognized as the presentment of Thomas Paine, the political writer, and not of Paine, the feeble and ignorant foe of Christianity.

In the exercise of that charity which the Bible inculcates, Paine may be forgiven much. He was an English democrat, who had been soured by the incongruities of the Establishment; he had been harshly treated on account of his crude notions; and he had been greatly influenced by the shallow infidelity of the French Revolutionists, who repaid his devotion to the Goddess of Reason by shutting him up, and by intending to cut off his head; for he only escaped the guillotine by the accident of an accident. Of what Christianity really is, we do not believe that he had the remotest idea. He thought that his quarrel was with the Bible, when it was only a quarrel with bishops. His criticism was of that small kind which picks out inconsistent texts, and discovers contradictions in passages which have not the most remote connection. So far have we advanced that his best arguments, if they may be so called, would not, if first published to-day, attract the slightest attention, nor would anybody think them worthy of serious refutation. The opponents of Christianity are now men of larger calibre, greater knowledge, and more respectable method. They perhaps do less mischief than he did, because fewer people understand them. He was an infidel without science, erudition, or philosophy. He was simply a sharp debater, a caviller, and a technical disputant. As such he was immensely admired by minds of the same class, but it is a class for which we cannot entertain the highest respect, or to the guidance of which methodical thinkers in these days resign themselves.

Such as he was, Paine was admirably fitted to expose the folly and the injustice of king-craft, and to defend the cause of a people against oppression. He had learned in a severe school how dangerous and how unscrupulous is power unrestrained by public liberty. He comprehended the value of free political discussion, which the English ministry regarded as much more dangerous than any discussion of the truths of religion. The cause of the Colonies commended itself to his common-sense; substantially it was the same cause for which he had suffered in England. He had a robust way of dealing with shams and pretensions; he was no respecter of persons, and hardly of himself. If his admirers ask that a bust of him may be placed in Independence Hall, and the request is granted, we trust that some suitable inscription will set forth the special merit to which the concession is made.—N. Y. Tribune, March 25.

SOME PERSONS are so devotional they have not one bit of true religion in them.—Haydon.

Poetry.

[For THE INDEX.]

MY IDLE NEIGHBOR.

BY C. APLIN.

’Tis mine to sow the chosen seed,
To till with care unceasing;
Nature her kindly forces lends,
To give the sure increasing.
I thank the Giver for his gifts;
I own my debt of labor;
Nor seek to shirk my honest work,
As does my idle neighbor.

He loves not toil; all future good
Is naught to present pleasure;
He plucks in Spring the blooms which bring
The Autumn’s richer measure.
And full and rank the wild weeds grow,
Nor wait for care or labor:
The better growth comes not to sloth,
He finds, my idle neighbor.

I grudge no man his ease; but yet,
When every wind that whistles
Blows straight to me a myriad seeds
From off his crop of thistles,
I see that for himself alone
No man can rest or labor;
My bones must ache for his sloth’s sake,—
My thriftless, idle neighbor.

And when within my field of life,
Grateful to Him who gave it,
I strive to make the stubborn soil
Yield all that Heaven would have it,
It grieves me sore to think how much
It adds of care and labor,
To kill these seeds of evil weeds,
Sown by my idle neighbor.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 25.

W. H. Crowell, $2.10; W. S. Leach, $4; E. Morely, $3.20; J. Main, $5.20; M. P. Barber, $1.60; C. H. White, $3.20; A. H. Roffe & Co., $2.20; L. B. Attwill, $1.50; J. E. Powers, 10 cents; G. E. Corbin, 25 cents; Mrs. E. Roberts, 25 cents; P. Prouty, 20 cents; H. Bliss, $3.20; Felix Adler, $3.20; W. H. Farguhar, $1.60; S. B. Stewart, $3.20; J. W. Hubbard, $1.60; A. E. Hecht, $3.20; J. W. Reyeroft, $3.20; B. M. Smith, $1; Henry James, $1.25; Minot Gage, $1.60; S. C. Gale, $2; W. S. Hart, 20 cents; S. J. Matthews, $2; C. W. Story, $10.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

N. B.—Please examine the ADDRESS and DATE on your INDEX mail-tag, and report at once any error in either.

N. B.—When writing about a former remittance, always give the date of such remittance as exactly as possible.

The Index.

BOSTON, MARCH 30, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO OFFICE, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FAY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, REV. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of	F. A. Angell, New York	$5.00
" 13.	"	M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.	2.00
" 13.	"	W. Barnsdall, "	2.00
" 13.	"	E. Whicher, Boston	5.00
" 13.	"	J. Davison, Alfred Centre, N.Y.	1.00
" 21.	"	Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.	2.00
" 21.	"	M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.	3.00
" 21.	"	R. H. Ranney, Boston	5.00
" 21.	"	P. E. Abbot, Boston	25.00
" 21.	"	C. A. Gurley, Pulaski, N. Y.	50.00
" 25.	"	Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.	5.00
" 25.	"	S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.	5.00
" 25.	"	John Blat, Winchester, Ind.	5.00
" 25.	"	A Friend	1.00
" 25.	"	C. H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50
" 25.	"	Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston	15.00
			$134.50

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.
805 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia	1.00
Friends in Boston	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.	2.50

Total to March 25th.....$44.50

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
805 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

FERDINAND FREILIGRATH, the famous radical poet of Germany, died in Cannstadt, near Stuttgart, on March 18, at the age of nearly sixty-six.

MR. KILGORE writes: "Please say to the free thinkers of America, that, if they will be as true to their free thought as the devotees of Orthodoxy are to their own stale and sickly superstitions, the $1000 for our Congress of Liberals will be raised in ten days, and as much more for the Paine bust. Already $10,000 have been raised for a bronze life-size figure of John Witherspoon, D.D., the only minister who signed the Declaration of Independence; and before the end of next month $10,000 more are expected for the same purpose. Compared to him, Thomas Paine should have a monument of gold high as the shaft of Bunker Hill."

SPECIAL ATTENTION is invited this week to the scathing indictment of Calvinism by Mr. Weiss, and the able plea for church taxation by Mr. Halliwell. The immoral tendency of Orthodoxy cannot be better exemplified than by the fact that it is Orthodoxy which insists on taxing the whole people indirectly for the support of its own dogmas; and these two papers have thus a close, though unintended, connection which ought not to be overlooked. Mr. Halliwell gives a powerful illustration of the moral tendency which Mr. Weiss exposes in general; and the two essays, marked as they are by great earnestness and unflinching directness of statement, are companion-pieces which will certainly win the applause of INDEX readers.

THE FIRST NUMBER of Mr. Voysey's new Langham Magazine was received just too late for mention in the last INDEX. It is a very handsomely printed pamphlet of 112 pages, with large type and excellent paper. It contains eight papers of varying length: Introductory, by the Editor; The Future of Asia, by Prof. Newman; Thoughts on Strikes and Trades' Unions, by the Rev. B. Lambert; Health and Holiday Haunts—Cheltenham; The Agricultural Rip Van Winkle, by W. E. Bear; The Course of True Love, by Ascott R. Hope; The Stone Age in Europe, by Edward Clodd; and Religion, by the Editor. The soul of the new magazine is the advocacy of pure theism, and the opening paper by Mr. Voysey is marked by even more than his usual fervid earnestness and high moral purpose. The price of the number is half a crown; address S. Deacon & Co., 150 Leadenhall Street, London, E. C.

THE SPIRIT OF 1876.

The New York Tribune of March 25 has an editorial article on "Thomas Paine's Bust," which slightly animadverts on the project of placing such a bust in Independence Hall, and exhibits the mingled ignorance, arrogance, and malevolence with which Orthodox Christians usually write of Thomas Paine. We can now only notice its closing words: "If his admirers ask that a bust of him may be placed in Independence Hall, and the request is granted, we trust that some suitable inscription will set forth the special merit to which the concession is made." That is, as the context shows, it will be a great "concession" by this Christian Republic to outlawed "infidelity" to allow Paine's bust to be placed by public sanction in a public hall; and it should not be granted, unless a formal inscription distinctly explains that the honor must not be misconstrued as any indorsement of Paine's "infidelity" by the State! Why this insulting requisition, when no similar requisition is made in the case of Christians whose busts are placed in a similar position? Why should not the State be equally scrupulous to disclaim any supposed indorsement of their Christianity? Why should this bullying spirit be so quick to reveal itself the very moment that "infidels" are suspected of claiming simple equality with "believers"?

Because the State is cunningly entangled with the Church by Sunday laws, Bible-in-school laws, etc., and thus made to recognize Christianity by indirection as the State's religion.

Is there no self-respect, no honorable pride, no manly resolve among non-Christians to put an end forever to this insufferably contemptuous repudiation of their equal rights? Have we not all been publicly kicked and spit upon about long enough? It is now four years since THE INDEX first published the "Demands of Liberalism," which must be all publicly acknowledged to be just before the equal rights of non-Christians will be practically respected by the government. Patiently have we labored to rouse the spirit of manhood and noble self-assertion among the liberals of America, in vindication of their right to think freely and speak openly without being cowed by any State recognition of a religion not their own—the private religion of only a part of the people, which by usurpation alone robes itself in the imperial purple of nationality. So long as liberals submit to be thus trampled into the dirt,—to be called on to be thankful for favors and "concessions" when all they want is a recognition of their equal rights,—just so long will they be despised by their Orthodox superiors as craven-hearted, mean-spirited, cowards without burning convictions for which sacrifices would be made, slaves in fact of a religious system which exercises an actual dominion over the whole land. It makes the blood of any self-respecting and honorable freeman boil with indignation, when the Tribune, in the name and spirit of Orthodoxy, thus cracks its whip over his head. He looks about him to catch some sign of such a response as this long-continued bullying ought to have evoked—some token that the consciousness of EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION has created a universal demand for STATE SECULARIZATION, which is its practical outcome. Shall he look in vain? It cannot be!

The Centennial Congress of Liberals at Philadelphia is called to proclaim our national independence of the power which has ruled and still rules us—the power of a Church which has no foothold in the United States Constitution, but has stealthily entrenched itself in statutes, precedents, usages, and the subserviency which it contemptuously exacts from the liberal public. It is time to break this long tradition of servitude, to declare the State's liberation from the invisible but strong chains of the Church, and to inspire the liberals with a new and mighty purpose to achieve the legal recognition of their absolutely equal rights as American citizens. Not only is their civil equality at stake, but their personal character as well; for no man can submit meekly to unjust impositions without personal degradation and demoralization. Orthodoxy has no right to enact its dogmas into laws. The acts of a republican government are the acts of the whole people; no citizen can escape responsibility for them, if he forbears to exert his utmost power to make them conform to justice and reason; and when the Orthodox majority insist on putting the government practically, though in defiance of the spirit and letter of the national Constitution, on an Orthodox basis, every liberal who consents to this usurpation even by silent acquiescence suffers a moral loss in his own individual character. It is his privilege, his right, his duty, to protest against such usurpation and to labor for the State's deliverance from it; and no sophistry, however specious, can absolve him from this high obligation to make common cause with public freedom and righteousness. It is for these reasons, private as well as public, that we appeal to the liberals of the country to aid the movement represented by the Centennial Congress of Liberals alike by their presence, their influence, and their purse. The need of State Secularization is sufficiently obvious, when a great journal like the Tribune, relying on the brute power of Orthodoxy in its usurped capacity of a State religion, prates of its State "concession" to "infidelity." If patriotic heterodox citizens, with rights every whit equal to those of Christians, propose to commemorate by a bust in Independence Hall the distinguished services of Thomas Paine to the nascent republic, what business has any one to require that a "suitable inscription" disowning his "infidelity" shall accompany the bust? Of course the State should no more indorse Thomas Paine's "infidelity" than it should the Christian Orthodoxy of Samuel Adams; but it should no more disown the one than the other. It is only the covert denial that ours is a purely secular government which could sustain for an instant the Tribune's monstrously arrogant pretensions; and the Tribune's insult will recoil in a most righteous rebuke to itself, if it so rouses the liberals as to inspire them with a new-born and determined earnestness to make the Centennial Congress of Liberals a triumphant success.

What is all this Centennial enthusiasm for? Is it not to pay a nation's homage to "the spirit of 1776"—that spirit of burning devotion to liberty which was the creator of the nation itself? Well indeed it is to honor thus the splendid heroism of the fathers; but better still will it be to prove that the children have inherited the fathers' greatness, and know how to discharge the high duty of this generation as nobly as the generation of a hundred years ago discharged its own. The principle of STATE SECULARIZATION, which is the great commanding word of the incoming century, demands of us all the same sturdy fidelity which immortalized the founders of the republic. It means EQUAL RIGHTS IN RELIGION; and that means the full and unhindered development of all that is noble in humanity—the free competition of all human thoughts and aspirations, and the certain survival of the truest, the purest, and the best. Shall not to-day prove itself worthy to be the heir of yesterday? If all the festivities of the Centennial Year revolve exclusively about the accomplished purpose of the fathers, and do not enclose in germ the yet to be accomplished purpose of the sons, our rejoicings will seem hollow and meaningless enough to our own posterity. Magnificent and inspiring, verily, was "the spirit of 1776," and fitting above all to be honored to-day. But one hundred years hence will be asked the searching question, "What was the spirit of 1876?"

Liberals of America; it is for you to record beforehand the answer to that question; it is for you to write it now in deathless words. The love of liberty is as ancient as the human heart, but the great heroes of liberty have been those who knew and did what liberty demanded in their own age; and it is for you, or for none, to know and do what liberty demands in ours. Suns rise and set; but the glory of each day lies in the great thoughts, the unselfish purposes, the heroic deeds whose birth it witnesses. Cannons and drums, processions and parades and fireworks, celebrations and orations and songs, will impart no lasting glory to the great day of the Centennial Year; but it will be memorable forever, if then and there "the spirit of 1876" shall reveal itself in a grander grasp of the American Idea, and speak to the people the new word of national inspiration for a coming hundred years.

CONCENTRATE.

The ineffectiveness, so much complained of by liberals, and so justly too, is due in considerable measure to their diffusiveness. They scatter their force; worse than that, they divide their force, and set detachments against one another; they are jealous, factious, partisan. They support, or rather try to support, try desperately and vainly to support too many papers; they undertake too many incidental projects; they stickle over too many points of purely speculative interest; they indulge in too many private crotchets. The secret of combination is the willingness to concede some things for the sake of a few things of essential concern. The proposal to organize a comprehensive scheme to counteract the influence of Orthodox Sunday-schools by starting Sunday afternoon classes for the instruction of children in liberal ideas, was defeated by the jealousy of special cliques, which held the same cardinal ideas, cherished the same hopes, looked forward to the same consummations, and agreed on the same general methods. But they could not cooperate because there were shades of speculative opinion just deep enough to mark off separate departments by lines of nomenclature. No single object presents itself with sufficient vividness to throw these half-imaginary distinctions into the background. It is one of the mischiefs of the theological training we have been subjected to, that the phantoms of opinion are more real than the forms of things; and concerns of vital moment are postponed to crotchets and prejudices.

There are two interests of vital moment to all liberals of whatever school: the release of the civil powers from ecclesiastical influence, and the overthrow of authority in the realm of mind,—the complete separation of Church and State, and the complete enfranchisement of the intellect. These two things all liberals who deserve or claim the name have at heart sincerely. These two things are of prime consequence to them all as elementary conditions of their success in other directions. The failure to secure these two things must embarrass all their movements. It would be wisdom on their part to set their personal differences aside, to waive considerations of party policy and sectarian aggrandizement, and throw their whole strength, pecuniary and intellectual, into the struggle for these objects. There is money enough, and mind enough, and earnestness enough to make the Liberal Leagues triumphant in their work of secularizing the government, and to beget modesty in the Catholics on the one side, and the Protestants on the other.

Progress goes on by successive steps. Not having seven-league boots, we must measure off the ground foot by foot. The ultimate goal is beyond the reach of many of our short generations; but each one of them may occupy and hold its position, and make fast its own link in the chain of development. The immediate apprehension is that in the diversity of interests, the multiplicity of aims, and the diffusion of energies, nothing of solid and permanent value will be accomplished. And if nothing is accomplished, it will be through the fault of the liberals themselves.

For the task is not difficult, at least, in its practical aspects. Multitudes are ready for the reform, and only wait to learn the method of it, and feel the impulse to it, from those who might be presumed to have it at heart. If the organs of liberalism in different parts of the country would lay their emphasis, for six, or even for three months, on two or three primary ideas, nothing more would be required. They would in this way, too, rescue themselves from the peril of death from inanition. As it is, ten minutes is a large allowance of time to give to the perusal of a liberal paper, and the result of the ten minutes' study is the conclusion that three-fourths of the contents of the paper is "stuffing," and the feeling that the silence of the "organ" would increase our enjoyment of sounds it would be pleasanter to hear. They lack what the French call a raison d'être, a justification of being,—and the efforts made to keep them in being exhaust the strength that would carry through some worthy cause. THE INDEX seems to be doing its part to infuse a working spirit into the liberal host. That its efforts should not be seconded would be indeed a misfortune.

O. B. F.

A PENITENTIARY VISIT.

A recent visit to the South Carolina Penitentiary, at Columbia, put before me in new light some of the difficulties of the present social problem in the South. It showed especially what a dense mass of mental and moral ignorance is to be enlightened before society here can be in a tolerably healthy condition.

This Penitentiary has only been in existence a few years. There was none in the State before the war. Indeed, it is the boast of some of the old South Carolinians that, in the good old days of slavery, the State had no penitentiary because there was no need of any. To them the necessitated establishment of a penitentiary is evidence of the demoralization and retrogression of society produced by the war and emancipation. Before the war, they say, the county jails were sufficient to take care of all criminals; and even these were not half-filled. But now the county jails are full, and the State Prison has its hundreds besides. And all this may be true, and yet the reasoning from it not be correct. For it is to be remembered that in "the good old days of slavery" the law was seldom invoked in the case of the negroes, either to protect them against crime or to punish them for it. More than half of the population of the State stood then outside of the courts and the law. The colored people when slaves could be maltreated without redress, and for their own offences were punished by their owners without the clumsy intervention of judge and jury. Under the "patriarchal institution" the State had no penitentiary, because for the blacks every patriarchal family had its lock-up, and lash, and other modes of punishment, and because among the whites many crimes, now brought before the courts, were settled by the duel. The establishment of penitentiaries, strange as the remark may sound, is indeed a mark of advancing civilization. South Carolina, we may admit, did not have any before the war. Neither do savage tribes have such an institution.

It is not to be wondered at that the greater number of the inmates of the South Carolina State Prison should be colored; but I was surprised at the very large proportion of colored to white prisoners. For the year ending Oct. 31, 1875, according to the printed official report, there were received 312 prisoners, of which 21 were white and 291 were colored. At the time I visited the institution, last February, the number of prisoners was 399, and the excess of colored to white was quite as great as at the time of the official returns. If this were in a State where the administrative power is in the hands of the white conservative Democracy, we might suspect that justice was not evenly administered,—that negroes were arrested for offences for which whites were allowed to go free. But here, where the power is so largely in the hands of the blacks, where so many colored men are in office, making a majority of the Legislature, and generally of the juries, such an explanation is not admissible. It is doubtless true that in their changed social and civil condition some of the negroes have taken to a roving, lawless life. It is easier for them to steal than to work. And many who do work think it no great crime to eke out their subsistence by a little thieving. The explanation of this large proportion of negro criminality is to be found in the mental and moral ignorance on the subject of property, which is the natural effect of slavery. It would be surprising if the colored people, not having been allowed to own themselves or the produce of their own labor, should possess very clear ideas, or a very quick conscience, concerning the rights of property. Of the 312 prisoners in the penitentiary last year, 237 were there for "crimes against property," and 75 for "crimes against person." And one who is well-informed on the subject tells me, that, throughout the State, while a very large proportion of the crimes against property are committed by negroes, the whites are more addicted to crimes against person. He added, moreover, the curious observation that among the white population of the State, even to the very lowest class, there has existed, and still exists, a remarkably nice sense of honor with regard to rights of property, from the fact that stealing has been regarded as a low caste crime, being particularly a negro propensity. To be called a "nigger-thief" was worse to the white chivalry than to be a murderer.

In one respect the large per centage of colored convicts in this penitentiary is to be remembered to the credit of the colored administration of the power of the State. I have heard not a little since I have been in the State about the subjugation of the whites to the blacks, and about the determination of the blacks to get away the property of the whites. But this State Prison, established and maintained by the negro government, and filled almost wholly with negro violators of the laws, and mostly with violators of the laws of property, is a sufficient refutation of the absurdity of the charge.

I had intended to say something about the fact that some of the present inmates of the penitentiary have been members of the Legislature, and held other high offices in the State. But this is hardly an exceptional fact in these days. I am not sure that Massachusetts will not soon have as many of the like class of criminals in her State Prison.

In general condition and management, so far as means will allow, the South Carolina Penitentiary, I judge, will compare well with similar institutions in Northern States. It is under the superintendence of Colonel T. W. Parmele, formerly of New York, who is an excellent man for the post. He is wise, watchful, and humane, and has a real interest in his work. One most admirable thing that he has done during his year of administration is already showing its good results. As there is no separate prison in the State, and no Reform School, for juvenile offenders, this class of criminals is also sent to the penitentiary. Colonel Parmele soon saw the evil effects of these boys associating with the older and more hardened inmates, and he separated them into a department by themselves. Then he organized them into a school, under an efficient teacher whom he found among the older convicts. This school has been in existence since last September only; but I heard there exercises which would have done credit to the members of any grammar school. The sixty scholars, with two or three exceptions, were colored. The boys have also a military drill, which helps to educate them to habits of discipline and order, and do, moreover, a part of the necessary work of the place.

Owing to lack of funds the chaplain, paid by the State, has been dismissed. But religious exercises are still conducted on Sunday for the prisoners, by the Young Men's Christian Associations, white and colored, of the city. This arrangement seems equally satisfactory to all concerned, and shows how easily one of the "Demands of Liberalism" for the entire separation of Church and State might be met without any loss to religion.

W. J. P.

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY E. C.

Four important decisions by the United States Supreme Court were announced early last week. The first relates to Chinese immigration, which the people of California have endeavored to prevent, or at least to check, by legislation which the Supreme Court now decides to be unconstitutional, and appends to the decision, moreover, a severe criticism upon certain laws of California. The two steamship lines which run between China and San Francisco are said to have all their steerage-room engaged for the coming six months for the transportation of Chinese, and as some of the steamers bring no less than 1,000 of these passengers each trip, it is evident that the Supreme Court has given a timely decision. The Chinese problem may eventually prove a very troublesome one, but some other solution than the prevention of immigration must be found for it. The second decision is upon an analogous subject, and declares unconstitutional a tax levied by the State of New York on immigrants, a tax which we believe was paid by the steamship companies, and which, if we are correctly informed, went to the support of a society which was supposed to look after the very poor or very ignorant emigrants who land in New York City. The third decision refers to the payment of a debt by a county in Wyoming Territory, the county claiming that a portion of the debt should be paid by two other counties which have been "set off" from the mother-county since the date of the contraction of the debt. The case derives especial interest from the fact that the principles involved are supposed to be the same as in an existing dispute between the two States of Virginia and West Virginia. The Court decides that the counties "set off" are not liable for the payment of any portion of the debt. The fourth decision is in favor of Mrs. Myra Clark Gaines, a lady who has spent literally the whole of a long life in the prosecution of a lawsuit, and whose case, whether she be right or wrong, is a telling satire upon the principal function of government,—the administration of justice.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has reported against the confirmation of Mr. Dana, although, as we write, the Senate has not yet taken action on the report, and it is still possible that he may be confirmed. General Butler's and Mr. Lawrence's attempt to influence the Senate Committee against him has been conducted in a thoroughly dishonorable manner. The Committee has taken umbrage at a manly letter of Mr. Dana, in which he very properly declined to attempt any justification of his conduct before men who had been willing to form their opinions concerning him from the ex parte statements of personal enemies. Dignity of conduct is something utterly incomprehensible by men like Cameron, Morton, and Conkling, and if anything had been needed to prove the unfitness of these last two for the Presidency, their course with regard to Mr. Dana would be conclusive.

Caucus-managers, however, care very little about the result of the controversy with regard to Mr. Dana. Their heroes, naturally, are men of a different stamp, and it need create no surprise, therefore, that the New York Republican Convention last week passed a resolution instructing its delegates to the Cincinnati Convention to present the name of Mr. Conkling for the Presidency. This resolution was passed by a two-thirds vote, notwithstanding a courageous and unanswerable speech by Mr. George William Curtis in opposition. Mr. Conkling may be briefly described as a stock politician with a glib tongue, the chief element of his popularity being found in his ability to make a rhetorical stump speech. He is the fit associate of Babcock, Morton, Shepherd, and Grant, and is often spoken of as a confidential friend of the latter. He has been the earnest advocate of everything which has brought discredit upon the administration of General Grant, has voted for all of the latter's worst appointments, and, during his congressional career, has given no indication of the possession of the least administrative ability, or of any statesmanlike quality of mind. His election to the Presidency could result only in giving us four years more of all the worst features of the present administration.

Ex-Senator Stewart has been testifying at length before the Emma Mine Investigating Committee, and although his testimony contradicts in some particulars that of Mr. Lyon, and although he still expresses his belief in the value of the Emma Mine, his revelations show at least that the Mining Company was projected as a stock-jobbing operation of the worst description, and incidentally, also, he damages his own character beyond all hope of successful repair. He admits, for instance, that, as attorney of Park, he made a very profitable bargain with himself as owner of the transferred claim of Lyon, in a manner analogous to that in which Pendleton, as President of a railroad company, made so excellent a bargain with Pendleton, as attorney of the same company. This method, by the way—that, namely, in which a man acting in one capacity makes a bargain with himself while acting in another capacity,—seems to have become in recent years a favorite money-making method. The Credit Mobilier affair, so much talked about a few years ago, was an illustration of this method on a large scale, and Massachusetts people have had recently familiar illustrations of the same method, modified to agree with changed circumstances, in Chapin as owner of the Ware River Railroad making an excellent bargain with Chapin as President of the Boston and Albany Railroad, or in Kimball as contractor (or contractor's partner) getting a good thing out of Kimball as director. Stewart, however, was by no means confined to this one method of making money out of the Emma Mine, but admits the use of other, and, as some people would consider them, more questionable methods; so that, whatever the fate of the mine, the ex-Senator may hereafter be dismissed into the company of Babcock, Pendleton, and Belknap, the fast increasing company of men whose public work is done. Schenck is ill in Washington, not having testified as yet, and Park is still to be heard from.

Governor Rice, in his recent proclamation appointing "a Day of Fasting, Humiliation, and Prayer," earnestly invites the people of Massachusetts to pray that God "will give power on earth to the Gospel of his Son Jesus Christ Our Lord." We know nothing whatever of the theological opinions of Governor Rice beyond what might be gathered by any one who should read carefully the above-mentioned proclamation, and we are aware, moreover, that, by an old provision of the Constitution of Massachusetts (whether in force at the present time or not, however, we do not know), the Governor of the State must be of the Christian religion. But if Governor Rice is, as may be presumed, a devout Christian, he should remember that a belief in Christianity, as he evidently understands it, is not among the requirements of citizenship in Massachusetts; that his proclamation is addressed to all the people of the State; and that some of the most estimable citizens of the State are Jews and Unitarians (omitting the names of other large classes) of whom none of the first and only a portion of the second could under any circumstances pray for power to be given "to the Gospel of his Son Jesus Christ Our Lord." In the supernatural sense implied by the Governor's phraseology. A governor should remember that he is chosen to perform certain specified functions of government, and should not take advantage of his position to intrude or to promulgate his personal religious convictions any more than the State Director of a railroad, for instance, who is chosen to look after the interests of the State, should take advantage of his position to make money for his personal use.

Daniel Drew has failed, and the Drew Theological Seminary, to which he is indebted to the amount of $250,000—the interest on which sum he has paid annually for some years past,—will probably lose its expected legacy. We should like to suggest to the Methodists that the present would be a most favorable time for restoring to Mr. Drew the various sums of money which he has contributed to the Seminary and to other Methodist institutions. The opinions of most Methodists with reference to "ill-gotten gains" is certainly no secret, and although they have heretofore been somewhat guarded in their expressions when referring to Mr. Drew, we feel assured that by this time they must be fully convinced that Mr. Drew's gains have been decidedly "ill-gotten." By restoring the sums of money heretofore accepted, they would not only be helping to put old "Uncle Dan" on his legs once more, but would also give the best possible proof of the sincerity of their sorrow at having unguardedly received money made by the sinful practices of stock gambling.

Petitions, signed by members of the temperance organizations of sixteen different States, have been presented to Congress, praying for the passage of a prohibitory liquor law for the District of Columbia and the Territories; and that the use of liquors be prohibited among the officials of the civil, military, and naval services of the United States. Several thousand women of Massachusetts, also, have sent to Congress a petition asking for the prohibition of the importation of alcoholic liquors. With hearty sympathy for the purpose sought to be attained by these two sets of petitions, we have no feeling but that of antagonism for their methods. It seems impossible for many well-meaning people to understand that there is both a right and a wrong way of doing the right thing, and that most of the present methods of temperance reform are as wrong as any methods can be which are wholly unjustifiable either by reason or by practicability. We have never listened to or read an argument by an alcoholic prohibitionist which would not have been equally serviceable to the late Mr. Trask in his ridiculous crusade against tobacco, to Dr. Trail in his efforts to stop the eating of salt, or to any vegetarian who should desire to force his fellows to live without meat. The utter futility of the methods proposed is at once evident to any one who will take the trouble to consider fairly the various elements involved. Prohibition might have been an appropriate method during the Middle Ages; it is as impossible to-day as would be a return to the social customs of those times.

The Senate has appropriated $150,000 to feed the Sioux Indians, amending the House bill for the same purpose which appropriated $100,000; has passed the Post Route bill; a bill to regulate the transportation of bonded merchandise withdrawn from the warehouse; has decided to sell the arsenal at Stonington; has ordered the printing of the eulogies pronounced upon the late Senator Ferry; and, after a lengthy debate, has passed the joint rule relating to the counting of votes for President and Vice-President. The House, early last week, by a vote of 100 to 108, refused to suspend the rules in order to repeal the Resumption Act; passed, after a hot debate and the acceptance of several amendments, a bill to prohibit contributions to election funds by officers of the United States; ordered the reduction of the area (to 54 square miles) of the military reservation at Fort Laramie; authorized commissioned officers to make deposits under the act of May 15, 1873; repealed the law which forbids the appointment, to any position in the army, of any person connected with the military, naval, or civil service of the Confederate States during the late rebellion; and appropriated $82,000 to supply a deficiency in the manufacture of postal cards. The Senate is not likely to consent to some of the reductions of salaries ordered by the House, nor does it seem possible for the two Houses to agree upon any financial measure heretofore introduced. There is some prospect, however, that the hard-money men of both parties and of both Houses may unite in support of the much-needed financial bill, thus setting party aside for the sake of the country. The various investigating committees are still at work, and the return of Marsh, from Canada, may now enable the Committee to continue the impeachment proceedings against Belknap.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, March 3, 1876.

Yesterday evening saw a demonstration in London worth the noting, if only for the hope that it affords of more earnest labor, and more successful toil. For a long time past an association has been in existence, entitled the National Sunday League, which has been endeavoring to promote a rational observance of the Sunday, claiming that the museums and art-galleries should be thrown open on the Sunday, and that the only day on which the mass of the industrial classes could enjoy them should not be the one day on which their doors were barred. The League has performed much useful service. It has encouraged the running of Sunday trains, has organized Sunday excursions, and has led thousands out from the beer-house, from the gin-palace, from the stifling court, and from the filthy alley, to taste in the open country the fresh charm of the bright flower-bloom, and of the deep, shady wood, the beauty of the thrilling carol of the lark as he rises quivering into the golden radiance of the summer sun, and of the full melody of the speckled missel-thrush, as he pours out his warbled symphony of joyous welcome to the cool evening breeze. Much has it done; but despite its efforts the museum gates still bear a padlock from Saturday night to Monday morning, and the art-galleries are close barred against the wistful looks of the sauntering, objectless wanderer. There is much of apathy; much of sloth; much of indifference. The League has in some way failed to grip public feeling, and to enlist enthusiastic support. Why? For the commonest of reasons. In opposition to the prejudices of respectability, it has yet ever endeavored to cling to the hem of the garment of the "respectable classes," striving to catch a clergyman to speak on its platform, eagerly anxious not to "needlessly offend," i. e., to be so colorless as to be almost invisible; striking against the dogmas of Sabbatarianism, it has yet ever struggled to shelter itself under some rag of orthodoxy and religion; pleading for the cause of the poor, it has yet ever striven to gain the patronage of the wealthy and of the aristocracy. Thus it has committed the fatal mistake of alienating its best friends, and of excluding from its platform those who alone could make those platforms a force. Naturally, therefore, the progress of the movement has been infinitesimally small, and little or no advance towards the object of the League has been made.

But the true reason of the stagnation now appears to have been recognized, and the meeting in St. James' Hall promises to be the starting-point of a more vigorous policy. To this meeting, in spite of strong opposition, Messrs. Charles Bradlaugh and G. J. Holyoake were invited as speakers, the majority of the Executive feeling that the enormous popular strength led by Charles Bradlaugh was worth the gaining, even though purchased by the loss of one or two Broad Church clergymen and dissenting ministers. The Free Sunday Advocate, in a sensible article, put the case plainly and tersely:—

"To achieve this ultimate triumph for our principles, we have to urge the great body of anti-Sabbatarians to extend their sympathy to an active, practical support. Let them not be ashamed of the faith that is in them. We must be tolerant to meet on the same platform, and act with those on the Executive with whom, on other questions, we may differ widely. A present case in point: among the invited and consenting speakers for our St. James' Hall meeting are Messrs. Charles Bradlaugh and G. J. Holyoake,—the one unquestionably able to bring large numbers to the support of the cause, the other a recognized and respected exponent of public questions, and against the honesty of neither has a word ever been raised; yet we are pained, though not surprised, that some of our good friends shrink from being associated with them. We trust the time will be, ere long, when such earnest men as Dean Stanley, Cardinal Manning, and others, who agree in the value of opening museums, etc., on Sundays, will appear by the side of Messrs. Bradlaugh and Holyoake in the promotion of our common object. We complain, as we think justly, that the non-conformists, who exist as a body by toleration, should act so intolerant a part in opposing civil and religious liberty to ourselves, and we ask all who would see our national museums and libraries open, to ponder ere they write such a reply as the following from a Church of England clergyman to a friend who asked him to speak in St. James' Hall, and mentioned, as showing its unsectarian character, that Messrs. Holyoake and Bradlaugh were to speak:—

"DEAR H.—
I much prefer (excuse my joke)
A holiday to Holyoake;
And though the Fourth Command be bad law,
Far better 'tis than Mr. Bradlaugh."

This clergyman is said to be a Mr. Haws, a "liberal" of that multitudinous school who admire liberty when stretched to include themselves, but who call the same liberty license when it is claimed by any whose convictions lead them beyond the line at which these pseudo-liberals have stopped. Such men are no true champions of liberty at all. They only fight for their own freedom, in the hope that the triumph at which they aim may make their own opinions the Orthodox creed, and that they may win the right to tyrannize to-morrow by oversetting those who tyrannize to-day.

The Sunday League reaped the reward of their courage. Some threat was made that the Lord's Day Observance Society would pack the hall, and carry an amendment against opening museums; but they had now to deal with a stronger than they, and a few short words from the secular leader put a thousand sturdy followers in the hall as soon as the doors opened, an hour before the meeting, while others flocked in later, making all thought of riot an impossible absurdity. Before the appointed time the hall (holding comfortably some three thousand) was densely crowded, and it was decided to commence proceedings at once. The Hon. Auberon Herbert was the appointed chairman, and he led the way, followed by Mr. Bradlaugh and myself, and the whole train of speakers and special guests. When the Secretary announced the names of the speakers, the storm of applause which had greeted Mr. Bradlaugh's appearance broke out again with fresh vigor at the sound of his name, and caused some black looks to pass from one to another among those whose bigotry made them dislike the Atheist and Republican orator. Mr. Auberon Herbert was much applauded on rising, as also during his speech,—and thoroughly he deserved the people's welcome, for he is one of those whose patent of nobility is signed by Nature, an earnest, loyal, brave-hearted man, simple and straightforward, true as steel. He spoke with his heart evidently in every word, with some keen satire against the sham-sanctimoniousness of the religious public, and with a frank honesty that stamped "freethinker" on every sentence.

He was succeeded by a delegate from various trade societies, who was deputed to bear a message of their desire for the success of the movement, and the first resolution was then proposed and seconded, and the chairman called on Mr. G. J. Holyoake to support it. Some slight disturbance was attempted, but "the police" were too good, and speedily ejected the riotously-minded, who were of the feeblest character, and were promptly disposed of. Mr. Holyoake was very warmly welcomed, and sat down amid great applause. The resolution was then put, and carried with only one dissentient, its purport being that the closing of museums, etc., was distinctly injurious to the moral and intellectual welfare of the people. The second resolution, urging that the "present state of Sabbath legislation was shamefully unjust in favoring the rich and injuring the poor," was moved by the well-known Mr. Lloyd Jones, and was seconded by Dr. Bennett. Mr. Bradlaugh was called on to support it, and, as he rose to his feet, one understood the force of the objection made to him as a speaker by one of the promoters of a late public meeting: "No, don't ask Bradlaugh, or it will be Bradlaugh's meeting, and he will have all the glory." Round after round rang out, making all speech impossible, until he himself silenced them, and they obeyed the gesture of command. He spoke shortly only—more shortly than any preceding speaker,—but with a marvellous force and impressiveness, his magnificent voice dominating the irrepressible cheers which greeted almost every sentence. When he sat down, it was worse than ever; shouts, waving hats, handkerchiefs, umbrellas, the whole mighty crowd one mass of beaming excitement, the roar breaking out some five or six times, and the chairman—a friend much honored by Mr. Bradlaugh—looking placidly on, apparently well-pleased at the demonstration.

An amendment was at last moved by a street preacher, and seconded, but of supporters there were none, and the resolution passed amid general applause. At this point Mr. Bradlaugh quitted the platform, being far from well, the persistent applause breaking out once more to "speed the parting" speaker; here my personal experience of the meeting ends, as apparently must have ended that of a large number who attended it, as the crowd came pouring down the stairs, satisfied with the speeches they had heard. So successfully ended a grand demonstration in favor of "Free Sunday for free people," a demonstration that, vigorously backed up, cannot fall of effect.

This question of the Sunday opening of museums is a very important one. The churches and the beer-houses are the only places open on the Sunday, save the one or two halls for lecturing, such as that managed by the Sunday League, which provides a good lecture and some "sacred music," and that of our party, affording a lecture and subsequent free discussion. Drunkenness is much preached against; but an Act of Parliament throwing open art-galleries on the Sunday would do more to empty the gin-palaces than a hundred Permissive Bills. Culture the faculties, refine the taste, enlarge the capabilities of enjoyment, and drunkenness will be really destroyed, because the bestial pleasure it imparts will be replaced by a higher enjoyment, and those who have drunk deeply at the pure and sparkling fount of intellectual refreshment will not stoop to quench their craving for some pleasure outside the circle of their daily toil in the foul and muddy stream of intoxication. Give art, give beauty, give science, some chance of casting a ray of light through the thick clouds of ignorance, and the human mind will turn to that sun-glory, as the flower grows towards the day-god, and drunkenness will melt away and disappear as the night vanishes before the sweet, fair face of the dawn. We do not ask to close the churches. "Free Church in free State" is our motto. We claim freedom to kneel for those who wish to kneel; we claim freedom to stand for those whose knees are too stiff to bend; and we urge, we insist, that all means of culture shall be accessible on the one day when that culture is possible to the poor, that the museum shall be as open as the Church, that the picture-gallery shall rival the beer-shop, that our English people may be saved from the curse of intemperance, and beauty, art, and taste may brighten the homes of the poor.

Communications.

THE BISHOP'S LECTURE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INDEX:—

I have read with great interest Bishop McQuaid's lecture and your reply, and think that you have in general successfully met his arguments; in especial, it would be impossible to improve upon the thoroughness with which you have exposed the fallacy of his advocacy of the "parental prerogative." That is an argument that no consistent Roman Catholic has a right to make.

You seem to me, however, to have missed one point made by him, and that, in my eyes, the most vital of all; that is, the impossibility of secular education pure and simple. What you say of denominational schools teaching irreligion so many hours a day is good so far as it goes, but it does not go very far. In the first place, the school is not merely a place of instruction, but a place of discipline, and it is in the enforcement of discipline, not in teaching how to parse, or draw maps, or do sums, that the teacher finds it hard to abstain from religious appeals involving the recognition of certain dogmas. In the next place, all instruction, even in the common schools, is not confined to bare facts of universal acceptance, but controverted points in all departments continually come up; and we must bear in mind that theological doctrine is, in this point of view, merely a type of differences of opinion which occur equally in political, and even scientific, questions. It is hard not to confess some cogency in Bishop McQuaid's reasoning, when he says of the teacher: "If he but mentions the name of God, of Christ, with reverence, he leads his bright pupils to infer that such a being exists; if he evades a question about God, he indicates doubt; if he speaks the name with a sneer on the lip, or a shrug of the shoulders, he inculcates to young, impressionable minds his contempt for such a belief." In this paragraph is contained, I must confess, the only part of Bishop McQuaid's argument which has given me any embarrassment.

Nevertheless there must be a fallacy here, or we must perforce admit the supremacy of Church over State. Bishop McQuaid does not say so, but he knows that his argument, logically carried out, will land us in a theocracy. What is true of the schools is equally true, and perhaps even more true, of the State. If a secular State is possible, so is a secular school. If instruction cannot be divorced from dogma, neither can administration. Moreover, if danger lurks in the school-room, all the more does it lurk in society; the boy cannot pass through the street, enter a railroad-car, glance at the daily paper, without seeing or hearing something which may shake his faith. And if the assiduity of priests and parents can protect against these perils, it surely can protect against the far smaller perils of the school-room. The Syllabus is a logical deduction from this doctrine of Bishop McQuaid.

In short, while we may admit that instruction which shall be absolutely indifferent on all controverted questions is very hard to secure, we may claim that it is not hard to secure instruction so fair and conscientious in its impartiality that it will exert absolutely no influence in the face of the steady impressions of home and the Sunday-school. Catholic parents know this, and are perfectly willing to trust their children to the common schools for secular education, having a well-grounded confidence that the Church influences will be strong enough to protect their faith against all danger from this source, as well as others; it is only the priests that are hostile to secular schools, for the reason that they are not satisfied to have the children brought up as Catholics, but will have them Ultramontanians.

W. F. ALLEN.

MADISON, Wis.

[It was not strictly a reply to Bishop McQuaid that devolved upon us, but rather an independent consideration of the same subject from a different point of view. Hence we made no attempt to answer all his arguments, or even to notice all his points. His tactics seemed to be to charge along the whole line, and assail the defenders of State education with a vast multiplicity of arguments—to confuse and overwhelm them, as it were, by the sheer force of numbers. Our own tactics were to concentrate our forces in a solid column, and break the opposing line at the decisive point. The arraignment of the school system for injustice (and that is the one great and formidable accusation) rests wholly on the theory of "parental prerogative"; and we made it our chief object, first to annihilate this theory, and then to establish positively the State's just right to tax all without exception for the public schools. But a great deal remains to be said on other points which we by no means overlooked, but were simply unable to treat in a single lecture. Professor Allen, in the above most excellent letter, treats one of these other points very candidly, and points to a true solution. The fact is that there is just as much impossibility of religious education pure and simple as there is of "secular education pure and simple." But this is a subject we cannot discuss in a mere note.—ED.]

NO FOR THE CONGRESS!

CURWENSVILLE, Clearfield Co., Pa.,
March 12, 1876.

F. E. ABBOT:

Dear Sir,—When I read Bishop McQuaid's lecture on "The Public School Question," I experienced an almost irresistible impulse to blossom out in a reply; but, when I learned that you intended replying, I felt easier, confident that you would do the subject justice. The result proves that my confidence was not misplaced. I cannot praise your effort too highly. It is just the right word in the right place, and at the right time. It covers the ground completely, and leaves nothing to be said. I am much obliged to the Bishop for furnishing the opportunity. The Cincinnati Times published a synopsis of Bishop McQuaid's lecture; so I sent a copy of THE INDEX containing your masterly reply with a request to publish; but I am not very sanguine of success. The editor of the Times, while professing to "hear both sides," publishes only such articles as favor the Bible in the schools and God in the Constitution. Blessed are they who do not expect justice at the hands of a bigot! They shall not be disappointed.

If alive, I will be at the Centennial Congress. It will be an occasion of as much interest to liberals as the laying of the corner-stone of the temple at Jerusalem to the Jews, or the fabulous resurrection of Christ to Christians.

Yours truly,

HARRY HOOVER.

THE TRUE BASIS OF THE SCHOOL.

SANDY SPRING, Md., 3 mo., 17th, 1876.
MY DEAR FRIEND, FRANCIS E. ABBOT:—

I wish to congratulate thee on thy reply, in the number of THE INDEX of the 9th inst., to the articles on the Public School Question in the two preceding numbers by Bishop McQuaid. I had looked forward to thy promised reply to his very plausible and, as viewed from his stand-point and with his assumptions, very strong presentation of the question, with very great interest, and I must own, some little anxiety; and I regard it as a complete success in every respect.

The several points presented in thy concluding paragraph, which cover the whole ground involved in the question, I scrutinized closely; and, being an old mathematician, I carefully examined the arguments by which each point is supported, and I regard them irrefutable.

A foundation on which the public school can alone firmly and steadily repose, as thy article shows, must be individual freedom, intelligence, justice, and right, which induce truth, kindness, and love.

With sentiments of high respect and esteem,

I remain thy sincere friend,

BENJ. HALLOWELL.

Soon after Chief-Justice Chase assumed the gubernatorial chair in Ohio, he issued his proclamation appointing a Thanksgiving day. To make sure of being Orthodox, the Governor composed his proclamation almost entirely of passages from the Bible, which he did not designate as quotations, presuming that every one would recognize them, and admire the fitness of the words as well as his taste in their selection. The proclamation meeting the eye of a Democratic editor, he pounced at once upon it, and declared that he had read it before—couldn't exactly say where,—but he would take his oath that it was a downright plagiarism from beginning to end. That would have been a pretty fair joke; but the next day a Republican editor came out valiantly in defence of the Governor, pronounced the charge libellous, and challenged any man living to produce one single line of the proclamation that had ever appeared in print before.—Toledo Commercial.

Sanctuary of Superstition.

WHAT TO PRAY FOR.—For the conversion of two young men for whom much prayer has been offered. For the conversion of a son, and that his wife may be restored to health. Pray that the pastor of a Unitarian Church may be converted from "Spiritualism." For a sister, that her eyes may be healed. For a minister who is embarrassed financially, but trusting in the Lord for relief. Also for his wife, that she may be delivered from the bondage of discontent, and wholly sanctified.—Requests for prayer, given in Dr. Cullis' "Times of Refreshing," March, 1873.

THE CURSE ON DANCING.—We heard last week of some remarks that were made upon the subject of dancing by Rev. A. Wheeler, pastor of the First Methodist Church of this city, that struck us as being too fanatical for any Christian to utter when clothed in his right mind. In order, if possible, to do justice to Mr. Wheeler and also to our readers, we called upon him at his residence on Elm Street, and stated the purpose of our visit. Mr. Wheeler received us very courteously, and we took from his lips, word for word, the remarks uttered by him in an afternoon prayer-meeting one day last week. Mr. Wheeler said: "That the dancing community seemed to be doing all that they could to break up the religious interests. I have read well-authenticated instances, under similar circumstances, where Divine Providence had seemed to interpose in a summary way, and persons had been carried from the ball-room dead. If it were necessary for the salvation of souls that the balls should be broken up, and in order that they be broken up it were necessary that a similar visitation should occur, I would not object to it, and hope it might occur." Comments are worse than useless.—Warren (O.) Constitution, Feb. 15, 1876.

DRIVING THE DEVIL OUT OF A SICK CHILD.—John Wybrick, who lives at 3513 Broadway, is a blacksmith in comfortable circumstances. For the past three weeks one of his seven children, an infant, has been dangerously ill with a disease, the symptoms of which are exactly similar to those of the cerebro spinal meningitis. As the child did not appear to get any better, a priest was called in on Monday evening; and to this priest the balance of this tale principally relates. Upon viewing the child, the clerical gentleman informed the parents that it was troubled with witches, and he thereupon laid a large cross on the legs of the little one, which, he claimed had the effect of driving out the evil spirits. They were only driven out of the body, however, to enter the bed upon which the sick child was lying. By direction of the priest this bed was then taken and burned in the back-yard; but, as it was asserted that the devil still lingered in and around four other beds that were in the house, they also were burned up. As a crowd had gathered on the occasion of the first burnt offerings, these beds were taken to a remote spot on the river bank, where an extensive conflagration ensued. The beds in question were worth about $150, and the neighbors, upon hearing of the sacrifice to be made, pleaded piteously for them, but without avail. Not only were the beds destroyed, but also bolsters, pillows, and everything else which was constituted of feathers. Despite the well-meant efforts of the parents to aid the recovery of their child, they were informed the witches still held possession of it, and that they could not be driven out; and, further, that the child could neither recover nor die until the evil one took its departure. The parents devoutly believe all that has been stated by the priest, and, in token thereof, a large cross hangs at present from the neck of the sick one; but its healing powers do not seem to be very efficacious.—St. Louis Democrat.

GENERAL STATUTES OF MASSACHUSETTS, CHAPTER 84.—Section 1. Whoever keeps open his shop, warehouse, or workhouse, or does any manner of labor, business, or work, except works of necessity and charity, or is present at any dancing or public diversion, show, or entertainment, or takes part in any sport, game, or play, on the Lord's Day, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding ten dollars for every offence.

Section 2. Whoever travels on the Lord's Day, except from charity or necessity, shall be punished by fine not exceeding ten dollars for every offence.

Section 4. Whoever is present at a game, sport, play, or public diversion, except a concert of sacred music, upon the evening of the Lord's Day, or upon the evening next preceding the Lord's Day, unless such game, sport, play, or public diversion, is licensed by the persons or board authorized by law to grant licenses in such cases, shall be punished by fine not exceeding five dollars.

Section 6. No person shall serve or execute any civil process on the Lord's Day; but such process shall be void, and the person serving or executing such process shall be liable in damages to the party aggrieved in like manner as if he had no such process.

Chapter 165, Section 19. Whoever wilfully blasphemes the holy name of God, by denying, cursing, or contumeliously reproaching God, his creation, government, or final judging of the world, or by cursing or contumeliously reproaching Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost, or by cursing or contumeliously reproaching the holy word of God, contained in the Holy Scripture, or exposing them to contempt and ridicule, shall be punished by imprisonment in the State prison not exceeding two years, or in the jail not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding three hundred dollars, and may also be bound to good behavior.

Advertisements.

THE PATRONAGE

of the liberal advertising public is respectfully solicited for THE INDEX. The attempt will be honestly made to keep the advertising pages of THE INDEX in entire harmony with its general character and principles, and thus to furnish to the public an advertising medium which shall be not only profitable to its patrons, but also worthy of their most generous support. To this end, all improper or "blind" advertisements, all quack advertisements, and all advertisements believed to be fraudulent or unjust to any one, will be excluded from these columns. No cuts will be admitted.

THE INDEX must not be held responsible for any statement made by advertisers, who will in all cases accept the responsibility for their own statements.

ADVERTISING RATES.

For 1 to 12 insertions, 10c per line.
 " 13 " 25 " 8 " "
 " 26 " 51 " 6 " "
 " 52 " " 5 " "

On half-column advertisements, a discount of 10 per cent. will be made; on full-column advertisements, a discount of 25 per cent.

On all advertisements for which cash is paid in advance, a further discount of 25 per cent. on the total, as above calculated, will be made. FRANCIS E. ABBOT, Editor.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The following states the experience of a successful Bookseller who has advertised in THE INDEX:—

TOLEDO, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1872.
 TO THE INDEX ASSO., Toledo, O.:

Gentlemen,—Having had occasion to advertise in your paper during the past two years quite largely, I take pleasure in stating that I have always obtained very satisfactory returns—better in fact than from book advertisements in any other paper I have advertised in. Not only have I obtained immediate results, but orders have frequently been received months after the insertion of the advertisement, showing that your paper is kept on file and referred to by your readers.

Yours truly,
 HENRY S. STEBBINS.

Special arrangements will be made at reduced terms for long-time or extended advertisements. Address

THE INDEX,
 No. 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston.

CULTURED FREE THOUGHT.

The Index Association,

OFFICE, NO. 1 TREMONT PL., BOSTON,

has been organized with a capital stock fixed at ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND dollars, for the purpose of publishing Tracts, Books, and

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Paper devoted to Free and Rational Religion.

It is the object of THE INDEX to give public utterance to the boldest, most cultivated, and best matured thought of the age on all religious questions, and to apply it directly to the social and political amelioration of society.

It is edited by FRANCIS E. ABBOT, with the following list of Editorial Contributors:—

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 WILLIAM J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 WILLIAM H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 Rev. CHARLES VOYSEY, London, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, London, Eng.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

Every liberal should subscribe for THE INDEX, as the best popular exponent of Religious Liberalism. Every Christian minister, and every thinking church-member, should subscribe for it, as the clearest, most candid, and most scholarly exposition of the differences between Free Thought and Evangelical Christianity, and as the best means of becoming well informed of the arguments and the movements which the Church will have to meet in the future.

Almost every number contains a discourse or leading article, which alone is worth the price of one year's subscription.

Prof. MAX MUELLER, of Oxford, England, in a letter to the Editor published in THE INDEX for January 4, 1873, says: "That the want of a journal entirely devoted to Religion in the widest sense of the word should be felt in America—that such a journal should have been started and so powerfully supported by the best minds of your country,—is a good sign of the times. There is no such journal in England, France, or Germany; though the number of so-called religious or theological periodicals is, as you know, very large." And later still: "I read the numbers of your INDEX with increasing interest."

Send $3.00 for one year, or 75 cents for three months on trial.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place Boston.

PUBLICATIONS

OF THE

FREE

RELIGIOUS

ASSOCIATION.

Proceedings of Fifth Annual Meeting, 1872. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by J. W. Chadwick on "Liberty and the Church in America," by C. D. B. Mills on "Religion as the Expression of a Permanent Sentiment of the Human Mind," and by O. B. Frothingham on "The Religion of Humanity," with addresses by Rowland Connor, Celia Burleigh, Lucretia Mott, A. B. Alcott, C. A. Bartol, Horace Seaver, Alexander Loos, and others.

Proceedings of Sixth Annual Meeting, 1873. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains essays by Samuel Johnson on "Freedom in Religion," and by John Weiss on "Religion in Freedom," with addresses by Wm. C. Gannett, Robert Dale Owen, T. W. Higginson, Samuel Longfellow, J. S. Thomson, F. E. Abbot, and Lucretia Mott.

Proceedings of Seventh Annual Meeting, 1874. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains verbatim reports of President Frothingham's address on "The Validity of the Free Religious Platform," of Dr. Bartol's essay on "The Religious Signs of the Times," of Rabbi Sonnenschein's speech on "Reformed Judaism," and of the statements by Messrs. Calthrop, Abbot, and Higginson of their respective attitudes towards Christianity,—as "Christian," "Anti-Christian," and "Extra-Christian,"—together with the Secretary's Annual Report, and letters from Keshub Chunder Sen, Frederick Douglass, and D. A. Wasson.

Proceedings of Eighth Annual Meeting, 1875. 35 cents. (Four or more, 25 cents each.) Contains Essays by Wm. C. Gannett, on "The Present Constructive Tendencies in Religion," and by Francis E. Abbot, on "Construction and Destruction in Religion," and addresses by T. W. Higginson, Lucretia Mott, Chas. G. Ames, O. B. Frothingham, B. F. Underwood, S. P. Putnam, and E. S. Morse.

Religions of China, by Wm. H. Channing. 25 cents.

Reason and Revelation, by William J. Potter. 10 cents.

Taxation of Church Property, by Jas. Parton. 5 cents, singly; package of ten, 30 cents; of one hundred, $1.50.

These publications are for sale at the office of the Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston. The Annual Reports for 1868 and 1871 cannot be supplied, and the supply of others previous to that of 1872 is quite limited. Orders by mail may be addressed either "Free Religious Association, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston," or to the Secretary, New Bedford, Mass.

WM. J. POTTER Sec. F. R. A.

GOOD PHOTOGRAPHS

OF LEADING INDEX WRITERS.

Including

O. B. FROTHINGHAM,
 T. W. HIGGINSON,
 W. J. POTTER,
 W. H. SPENCER,
 F. W. NEWMAN,
 CHAS. VOYSEY,
 A. W. STEVENS,
 F. E. ABBOT,

Are now for sale at the office of THE INDEX, and will be mailed postpaid to any address on receipt of price. Single Photographs, 25 cents each; complete Set of Eight Photographs, $1.50.

Address, THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

INDEX TRACTS.

No. 1.—Truths for the Times, by F. E. Abbot, contains the "Fifty Affirmations" and "Modern Principles." MR. CHARLES DARWIN, author of "The Origin of Species," says, in a letter to the editor not originally intended for publication, but subsequently authorized to be used: "I have now read 'TRUTHS FOR THE TIMES,' and I admire them from my inmost heart; and I agree to almost every word." New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 2.—Fear of the Living God, by O. B. Frothingham, exposes the debasing character of the popular notions of God, and presents conceptions of him that are worthy of the nineteenth century. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 3.—Lecture on the Bible, by the Rev. Charles Voysey, of England, is an overwhelming demonstration of the imperfections and errors of the Bible, both in the Old and the New Testaments. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 4.—Christian Propagandism, by F. E. Abbot, is an exposure of the weakness, costliness, and inefficiency of the System of Foreign Missions. Full of Figures, Facts, and Interesting Extrads. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 5.—"God in the Constitution," by Rev. Arthur B. Bradford, opposes the proposed Theological Amendment to the United States Constitution. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 6.—"The Sabbath," by Parker Pillsbury, denounces Sabbatarian superstition. New Edition. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 7.—"Compulsory Education," by F. E. Abbot, maintains the right of every child to be educated, and the duty of the State to ensure it an education. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 8.—The Present Heaven, by O. B. Frothingham, treats of a subject that interests everybody. New Edition. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 9.—The Christian Amendment, by F. E. Abbot, shows the dangerous character of the attempt to interpolate the Evangelical Christian Creed in the U. S. Constitution. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 10.—The Impeachment of Christianity, by F. E. Abbot. Fourth Ten Thousand. Sent for free distribution to any one who will distribute it, in packages of from five to one hundred copies.

No. 11.—The God of Science, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show the real influence of modern science upon the idea of God. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 12.—Is Romanism Real Christianity? Two essays by Francis W. Newman and F. E. Abbot. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00.

No. 13.—On the Vision of Heaven, by Prof. F. W. Newman, of England, analyzes the Christian conception of Heaven. Price 5 cents; 12 copies 50 cents.

No. 14.—A Study of Religion: The Name and the Thing, by F. E. Abbot, attempts to show that the popular derivation of the word Religion is incorrect; that the popular conceptions of Religion itself are inadequate; and that a new conception of it, based on the Law of Evolution, consistent with absolute Freedom of Thought, and independent even of belief in God, is the necessary condition of the perpetuity of Religion among men. Price 10 cents; 12 copies $1.00. Address

THE INDEX, 1 TREMONT PLACE,
 Boston, Mass.

1 8 7 5.

THE INDEX,

A Weekly Journal

DEVOTED TO

FREE RELIGION.

PUBLISHED BY THE

INDEX ASSOCIATION,

AT

No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

EDITOR:

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ABBOT.

EDITORIAL CONTRIBUTORS:

O. B. FROTHINGHAM, New York City.
 W. J. POTTER, New Bedford, Mass.
 W. H. SPENCER, Sparta, Wis.
 Mrs. E. D. CHENEY, Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 CHARLES VOYSEY, England.
 GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE, England.
 DAVID H. CLARK, Florence, Mass.

THE INDEX aims—

To increase general intelligence with respect to religion:

To foster a nobler spirit and quicken a higher purpose, both in society and in the individual:

To substitute knowledge for ignorance, right for wrong, truth for superstition, freedom for slavery, character for creed, catholicity for bigotry, love for hate, humanitarianism for sectarianism, devotion to universal ends for absorption in selfish schemes.

In brief, to hasten the day when Free Religion shall take the place of dogmatism and ecclesiasticism throughout the world, and when the welfare of humanity here and now shall be the aim of all private and public activities.

In addition to its general objects, the practical object to which THE INDEX is specially devoted is the ORGANIZATION OF THE LIBERALS OF THE COUNTRY, for the purpose of securing the more complete and consistent secularization of the political and educational institutions of the United States. The Church must give place to the Republic in the affections of the people. The last vestiges of ecclesiastical control must be wiped out of the Constitutions and Statutes of the several States in order to bring them into harmony with the National Constitution. To accomplish this object, the Liberals must make a united demand, and present an unbroken front, and the chief practical aim of THE INDEX will be henceforth to organize a great NATIONAL PARTY OF FREEDOM. Let every one who believes in this movement give it direct aid by helping to increase the circulation of THE INDEX.

SPECIAL FEATURES.

The publication of a valuable leading paper or essay of a thoughtful character, in each issue, will continue to be one of the most marked features of THE INDEX.

Regular editorial contributions will continue to be furnished by the well-known eminent writers who have already done so much to give to THE INDEX its present high position. Mr. VOYSEY has kindly consented to furnish every fortnight a LONDON LETTER containing matters of general interest to radical readers. Other interesting correspondence, communications, extracts from valuable books and periodicals, and miscellaneous articles, will also be published; and such improvements will be made from time to time as circumstances shall render possible.

AGENTS.

Local Agents for THE INDEX are wanted in every city and town throughout the country. The most liberal terms are offered.

TERMS.

The price of THE INDEX is Three Dollars a year, payable in advance; and at the same rate for shorter periods. All remittances of money must be at the sender's risk, unless forwarded by cheque, registered letter, or post-office money order. The name, with address in full, must be accompanied with the money in each case.

Address THE INDEX,
 No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

POPULAR BOOKS,

SENT BY MAIL

AT

PUBLISHERS' PRICES!

ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED.

NO EXTRA CHARGE FOR POSTAGE

ANY BOOK in the subjoined List, or any other OBTAINABLE BOOK that may be desired, will be forwarded as promptly as possible on receipt of orders accompanied with the CASH.

Orders are respectfully solicited from all friends of THE INDEX.

ALCOTT (A. BRONSON). Tablets.....	1.50
Concord Days.....	1.50
Records of a School. A new edition.....	1.50
ALCOOT (LOUISA M.). Little Women. Two vols.....	3.00
Hospital Sketches and Camp and Fireside Stories.....	1.50
An Old-Fashioned Girl.....	1.50
Little Men.....	1.50
My Boys, &c.....	1.00
Shawl-Straps.....	1.00
Work; A Story of Experience.....	1.75
ARABIAN NIGHTS' ENTERTAINMENTS.....	1.50
ARNOLD'S (MATTHEW) Essays in Criticism.....	2.00
New Poems.....	2.00
Literature and Dogma.....	1.50
AUERBACH (BERTHOLD). On the Heights. Villa Eden; The Country-House on the Rhine.....	1.50
Edelweiss.....	2.00
German Tales.....	1.00
BACON'S Essays.....	1.25
BAGEHOT on the English Constitution.....	2.25
Physics and Politics.....	1.50
BAIN (ALEXANDER). Mental Science: A Compendium of Psychology and History of Philosophy.....	1.75
Moral Science: A Compendium of Ethics. 1 vol.....	1.75
The Senses and the Intellect. Third edition. 1 vol.....	3.00
BARTLETT'S Dictionary of Americanisms.....	2.50
BARTLETT'S Familiar Quotations.....	4.00
BARTOL (REV. C. A.). Radical Problems.....	2.00
The Rising Faith.....	2.00
BASTIAN (H. CHARLTON). The Beginnings of Life. 2 vols.....	5.00
BRACKETT (ANNA C.). The Education of American Girls.....	5.00
BROOKS' (CHARLES T.) Translations. The Layman's Breviary.....	2.25
The World-Priest.....	2.25
The Tall Student.....	.75
BUECHNER'S Force and Matter.....	3.25
BUCKLE (HENRY THOMAS). History of Civilization in England and France, Spain and Scotland. New edition of the entire work, with a complete index. 2 vols.....	6.00
CARLYLE'S Works. Cheap edition. Comprising the following: Miscellaneous Essays, 7 vols.; French Revolution, 3 vols.; Frederick the Great, 10 vols.; Cromwell's Letters, &c., 3 vols.; Barry Rosartus, 1 vol.; John Sterling, 1 vol.; Life of Schiller, 1 vol.; Past and Present, 1 vol.; Heroes and Hero Worship, 1 vol.; Latter Day Pamphlets, 1 vol. Any volume sold separately. 31 vols. London, 1871-3. Per vol.....	.90
CARPENTER (DR. W. B.). The Principles of Mental Physiology, with their Applications to the Training and Discipline of the Mind, and the Study of its Morbid Conditions.....	3.00
CERVANTES' Don Quixote.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY, D.D.). The Perfect Life. In Twelve Discourses. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, Wm. Henry Channing.....	1.50
CHANNING (WM. ELLERY). Thoreau: The Poet-Naturalist. With Memorial Verse.....	2.00
CHENEY (MRS. E. D.). Patience. A Series of Thirty Games for the Fireside.....	1.00
Social Games. A new Series of Games for Parties, uniform with Patience.....	1.00
Sally Williams, the Mountain Girl. Illustrated.....	1.50
CLARKE (JAMES FREEMAN). Ten Great Religions.....	3.00
Common-Sense in Religion.....	2.00
CLARKE (DR. E. H.). Sex in Education.....	1.25
CLODD (EDWARD). The Childhood of the World.....	.75
COBBE (FRANCES POWER). Studies New and Old, of Ethical and Social Subjects. Darwinism in Morals, and other Essays.....	3.00
The Religious Demands of the Age.....	.30
CONWAY (MONCURE D.). The Earthward Pilgrimage.....	1.75
CORRELATION and Conservation of Forces: A Series of Expositions by Grove, Helmholtz, Mayer, Faraday, Leibig and Carpenter: with an Introduction by Edward L. Youmans, M.D. 1 vol.....	2.00
CULTURE DEMANDED BY MODERN LIFE: Its True Aims and Requirements. A Series of Addresses. By Tyndall, Huxley, Whewell, Faraday, Spencer, Draper, Masson, Lyell, etc. Edited by Edward L. Youmans.....	2.00
DALL (MRS. CAROLINE H.). The College, the Market, and the Court; or, Woman's Relation to Education, Employment, and Citizenship.....	2.50
Historical Pictures Retouched; a Volume of Miscellanies. In two parts. Part I, "Studies, Pictures, and Fancies".....	1.50

The Life of Dr. Maria Zakrzewska, being a Practical Illustration of "Woman's Rights to Labor".....	1.00
DARWIN'S Origin of Species.....	2.00
The Descent of Man. 2 vols.....	4.00
Journal of Researches.....	2.00
Emotional Expression of Man and the Lower Animals.....	3.50
The Variation of Animals and Plants under Domestication. 2 vols., illustrated.....	6.00
DESCARTES (RENE). Discourse on the Method of Rightly conducting the Reason and Seeking Truth in the Sciences.....	2.25
DICKENS' Child's History of England.....	1.50
DUHRING (JULIA). Philosophers and Fools. A Study.....	2.00
ELIOT'S (GEORGE) Novels. Household Edition. 5 vols., each.....	1.00
Compriug: Adam Bede, Romola, The Mill on the Floss, Felix Holt, Silas Marner and Scenes of Clerical Life, The Same. Library Edition. 2 vols.....	3.50
Middlemarch. 2 vols.....	3.50
Wit and Wisdom of.....	1.25
The Spanish Gypsy.....	1.50
How Lisa Loved the King.....	.50
EMERSON'S (R. W.) Essays. First Series.....	2.00
Essays. Second Series.....	2.00
Miscellanies.....	2.00
Representative Men.....	2.00
English Traits.....	2.00
Conduct of Life.....	2.00
Poems. With Portrait.....	2.00
May-day and Other Pieces.....	2.00
Essays. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Poems. Blue and Gold.....	1.50
Prose Works. 2 vols.....	5.00
Society and Solitude.....	2.00
EVANS (E. P. Ph. D.). First Historical Transformations of Christianity. From the French of Athanasius Coquerel the Younger.....	1.50
The Life and Works of Gotthold Ephraim Lessing. Translated from the German of Adolf Stahr. 2 vols.....	5.00
FARBAER'S Critical History of Free Thought, in Reference to the Christian Religion.....	2.00
FEUERBACH (LUDWIG). The Essence of Christianity. "George Eliot's" translation.....	3.00
FISKE'S (JOHN) Myths and Myth-Makers.....	2.00
Cosmic Philosophy.....	5.00
FROTHINGHAM (O. B.). Religion of Humanity.....	1.50
Child's Book of Religion.....	1.00
Life of Theodore Parker.....	3.00
FULLER'S (MARGARET) Complete Works, including Memoirs by Emerson, Channing, and others. A new edition. 8 vols.....	9.00
GALTON (FRANCIS). Hereditary Genius. An Inquiry into its Laws and Consequences.....	2.00
GOETHE'S Faust. Translated into English Verse by Bayard Taylor. 2 vols. Per vol.....	5.00
Elective Affinities.....	1.25
Wilhelm Meister. Translated by Thomas Carlyle. Portrait of Goethe. 2 vols.....	3.50
Herman and Dorothea. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.00
GREG'S (W. R.) Enigmas of Life.....	2.00
Literary and Social Judgments.....	2.00
Creed of Christendom.....	7.00
GROTE'S LIFE. Compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends. By Mrs. Grote. Second Edition. With Portrait.....	5.00
HAMERTON (PHILIP G.). A Painter's Camp. Book I. In England. Book II. In Scotland. Book III. In France.....	1.50
Thoughts about Art.....	2.00
The Unknown River.....	6.00
The Intellectual Life.....	2.00
Chapters on Animals.....	4.00
HAMILTON (GAIL). Child World. Part Second. Child World. Part First.....	1.00
HAMILTON'S Lectures.....	1.50
1. Metaphysical Lectures.....	3.50
2. Logical Lectures.....	3.50
HAWTHORNE'S (NATHANIEL) Works. New Illustrated Library Edition. Nine vols. Per vol.....	2.00
Twice-Told Tales.....	2.00
Mosses from an Old Manse.....	2.00
The Scarlet Letter, and The Blithedale Romance.....	2.00
The House of the Seven Gables, and The Snow Image.....	2.00
The Marble Faun.....	2.00
The English Note-Books.....	2.00
The American Note-Books.....	2.00
The French and Italian Note-Books.....	2.00
Our Old Home, and Septimius Felton.....	2.00
HIGGINSON'S (T. W.) Out-Door Papers.....	1.50
Malboms. An Oldport Romance.....	1.50
Army Life in a Black Regiment.....	1.50
Atlantic Essays.....	2.00
Oldport Days.....	2.50
HOWELL'S (WILLIAM D.) Their Wedding Journey.....	3.00
Suburban Sketches.....	2.00
Venetian Life.....	2.00
Italian Journeys.....	2.00
A Chance Acquaintance.....	1.50
HUGO'S (V.) New Novel, "Ninety-Three".....	1.75
HUMBOLDT (ALEXANDER VON). Life of. Translated from the German. 2 vols., with three portraits.....	10.50
HUME'S (DAVID) Essays and Life.....	1.75
HUNT'S (MRS. HELEN). Verses.....	1.25
Bits of Travel.....	1.50
HUXLEY'S Man's Place in Nature.....	1.25
On the Origin of Species.....	1.00
More Criticisms on Darwin and Administrative Nihilism.....	.50
A Manual of the Anatomy of Vertebrate Animals.....	2.50
Lay Sermons, Addresses, and Reviews.....	1.75
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Poems.....	2.25
The Monitions of the Unseen.....	1.50
Songs of Seven.....	2.50
INGELOW'S (JEAN) Prose. Of the Skelligs.....	1.75
Studies for Stories.....	1.25
Stories told to a Child. First and Second Series.....	1.25
A Sister's Bye-Hours.....	1.25
Mosses the Fairy: A Story.....	1.25
Poor Matt; or, The Clouded Intellect.....	.60
INGERSOLL'S (ROBT. G.) The Gods and Other Lectures.....	2.00
INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES. No. I. Forms of Water, in Clouds, Rain, Rivers, Ice, and Glaciers. By John Tyndall.....	1.50
No. II. Physics and Politics; or, Thoughts on the Application of the Principles of "Natural Selection," and "Inheritance" to Political Society. By Walter Bagehot.....	1.50

III. Foods. By Dr. Edward Smith.....	1.75
IV. Mind and Body. The Theories of their Relations. By Alex. Bain.....	1.50
V. The Study of Sociology. By Herbert Spencer, Esq.....	1.50
VI. The New Chemistry. By Josiah P. Cooke, Jr.....	2.00
VII. The Conservation of Energy. By Balfour Stewart, with an Appendix, treating of the Vital and Mental Applications of the Doctrine.....	1.50
VIII. Animal Locomotion; or, Walking, Swimming, and Flying, with a Dissertation on Aerodynamics. By J. Bell Pettigrew.....	1.75
IX. Responsibility in Mental Disease. By Henry Maudsley, M.D.....	1.50
JERROLD (DOUGLAS). Fireside Saints, Mr. Claude's Breakfast Talk, and other Papers.....	1.50
JOHNSON'S (SAMUEL) Oriental Religions, and their Relation to Universal Religion. India.....	5.00
JOSEPHUS. The whole Works of Flavius Josephus, the Jewish Historian.....	2.50
JOWETT. The Dialogues of Plato. Translated into English, with Analysis and Introductions by B. Jowett, M.A., Master of Balliol College, Oxford, and Regius Professor of Greek. Four vols.....	12.00
KERR (ORPHEUS C.). Versabilities, Poems, Patriotic, Sentimental and Humorous.....	2.00
LECKY (W. E. H.). History of the Rise and Influence of the Spirit of Rationalism in Europe. 2 vols.....	4.00
History of European Morals from Augustus to Charlemagne. 2 vols.....	6.00
LEGGE'S Confucius' Life and Teachings.....	4.00
Confucius and Chinese Classics.....	2.00
LESSING'S (G. E.) Nathan the Wise. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.....	1.50
LEWES' Physiology of Common Life. 2 vols. Biographical History of Philosophy, from its Origin in Greece down to the Present Day. 2 vols.....	3.00
Problems of Life and Mind. The Foundations of a Creed.....	3.00
LEWES (G. H.). The Story of Goethe's Life.....	1.50
LEWIN (REV. RAPHAEL D'O.). What is Judaism? or, A Few Words to the Jews.....	1.00
LONGFELLOW'S (H. W.) Poems. Portrait. 2 vols.....	4.00
Prose Works. Portrait.....	4.00
LOWELL'S (J. R.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
The Biglow Papers. First Series.....	1.50
The Biglow Papers. Second Series.....	1.50
Among my Books.....	2.00
My Study Windows.....	2.00
LOWELL (MRS. A. C.). Poems for Children.....	.75
LUBBOCK (SIR JOHN). Origin of Civilization, and the Primitive Condition of Man. Pre-historic Times.....	2.00
LYELL'S Principles of Geology. 2 vols.....	8.00
Elements of Geology.....	3.50
MACDONALD (GEORGE) The Vicar's Daughter.....	1.50
MANN (HORACE). The Life of Horace Mann. By his Wife.....	3.00
Lectures and Annual Reports on Education, from 1839 to 1843.....	3.00
Thoughts Selected from the Writings of Horace Mann.....	1.25
MARTINEAU (JAMES). Essays, Philosophical and Theological. 2 vols. Per vol.....	2.50
MAURICE (REV. F. D.). The Ground and Object of Hope for Mankind.....	.75
MERIVALE'S (CHARLES) Conversion of the Roman Empire.....	1.50
Conversion of the Northern Nations.....	1.50
MILL (JOHN STUART). Dissertations and Discussions. 4 vols., each.....	2.25
The Examination of the Philosophy of Sir William Hamilton. 2 vols., each.....	2.25
The Positive Philosophy of Auguste Comte. Political Economy. New and revised edition.....	2.50
The Subjection of Women—Essay on Liberty—both in one vol.....	2.50
Representative Government.....	1.50
Autobiography.....	2.25
Memorial Volume. His Life and Works.....	1.00
Three Essays on Religion.....	4.50
MILLER (JOAQUIN). Songs of the Sierras, Songs of the Sun Lands.....	1.50
MIVART (ST. GEO.). On the Genesis of Species.....	1.75
MORLEY (PROF. JOHN). Voltaire.....	2.00
Rousseau, 2 vols.....	5.00
MOULTON (LOUISE CHANDLER). Bed-Time Stories.....	1.50
MUELLER (MAX, M.A.). Lectures on the Science of Language. First Series.....	3.50
The Same. Second Series.....	3.50
Chips from a German Workbench. Vol. I. Essays on the Science of Religion. Vol. II. Essays on Mythology, Traditions, and Customs. Vol. III. Essays on Literature, Biography and Antiquities.....	2.50
Three vols. Price per volume.....	2.50
Lectures on the Science of Religion.....	2.00
NABBY (PETROLEUM V.). Swingin' Round the Circle.....	1.50
Ekkoes from Kentucky.....	1.50
NEWMAN (FRANCIS W.). A History of the Hebrew Monarchy.....	4.50
Phases of Faith; or, Passages from the History of my Creed.....	2.00
The Soul, its Sorrows and its Aspirations.....	2.00
Catholic Union: Essays towards a Church of the Future, as the Organization of Philanthropy.....	1.75
Theism, Doctrinal and Practical.....	4.25
The Religious Weakness of Protestantism. Against Hero-Making in Religion.....	.25
PARKER (THEODORE). A Discourse of Matters Pertaining to Religion.....	1.50
Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 3 vols.....	4.50
Additional Speeches, Addresses, and Occasional Sermons. 2 vols.....	5.00
Critical and Miscellaneous Writings.....	1.50
Historic Americans.—Franklin, Washington, Adams, and Jefferson. With an Introduction by Rev. O. B. Frothingham.....	1.50
The Trial of Theodore Parker for the Maintenance of a Speech in Faneuil Hall against Kidnaping with the Defence.....	1.50
The two Christmas Celebrations.—A. D. I. and MDCCLV. A Christmas Story.....	.60
PARSONS (THEOPHILUS). The Infinite and the Finite.....	1.00
PHELPS'S (ELIZABETH STUART) The Gates Ajar.....	1.50
The Trolley Book.....	1.50
Men, Women, and Ghosts.....	1.50
Hedged in.....	1.50
The Silent Partner.....	1.50
What to Wear?.....	1.00
PROCTOR'S (ADELAIDE A.) Poems. Portrait. Cabinet Edition.....	2.00

PROCTOR (RICHARD A.) Other Worlds than Ours: the Plurality of Worlds studied under the Light of Recent Scientific Researches. With Colored Plates.....	2.50
Light Science for Leisure Hours. A Series of Familiar Essays on Scientific Subjects, Natural Phenomena.....	1.75
Essays on Astronomy: A Series of Papers on Planets and Meteors, the Sun, etc. With 10 Plates and 24 Woodcuts.....	4.50
The Moon, her Motions, Aspects, Scenery, and Physical Conditions, with Three Lunar Photographs and many Plates, Charts, etc.....	5.00
The Expense of Heaven.....	2.00
RENAN'S Life of Jesus.....	1.75
ROSSETTI (CHRISTINA G.) A Shadow of Dante.....	2.50
SCHLLEN (H.) Spectrum Analysis, in its Application to Terrestrial Substances, and the Physical Constitution of the Heavenly Bodies.....	6.00
SCIENCE PRIMERS: 1. Introductory. By Prof. Huxley, F.R.S.....	.50
2. Chemistry. By Prof. Roscoe.....	.50
3. Physics. By Balfour Stewart. With Illustrations.....	.50
4. Physical Geography. By Archibald Geikie, LL.D., F.R.S., flexible cloth.....	.50
SCOTT'S Waverley Novels. 25 vols.....	31.25
SCOTT'S (THOMAS) The English Life of Jesus. Second Edition.....	2.00
SMILES'S (SAMUEL) Self-Help.....	1.50
SPENCER (HERBERT). Education, Intellectual, Moral, and Physical.....	1.25
First Principles.....	2.50
Essays: Moral, Political, and Aesthetic. Illustrations of Universal Progress. A Selection of his best Papers.....	2.00
Social Statics; or, The Conditions Essential to Human Happiness Specified, and the First of them Developed.....	2.50
The Principles of Biology. 2 vols.....	5.00
The Principles of Psychology. 2 vols.....	5.00
Philosophy of Style.....	.50
Recent Discussions in Science, Philosophy, and Morals. New and enlarged edition.....	2.00
Sociology.....	2.00
SPINOZA (BENEDICT DE.) Tractatus Theologico-Politicus.....	.30
Life, Correspondence and Ethics.....	5.00
STOWE (HARRIET BEECHER) Pink and White Tyranny.....	1.50
Uncle Tom's Cabin.....	.50
STRAUSS (D. F.) The Old Faith and the New.....	2.50
New Life of Jesus. Authorized translation. 2 vols.....	12.00
TAINES (H. A.) History of English Literature. 2 vols.....	7.50
The City of Dreadful Night.....	2.50
Literature. Abridged and Edited by John Fiske.....	2.50
TENNYSON'S (ALFRED) Poems.....	1.75
THACKERAY'S (W. M.) Novels. Household Edition. Complete in 5 volumes. Per vol.....	1.25
Vanity Fair.....	1.25
The Newcomes.....	1.25
Adventures of Philip Pendennis.....	1.25
The Virginians.....	1.25
Emend, and Love the Widower.....	1.25
Miscellaneous Writings. Household Edition. Uniform with the Novels. Complete in 5 vols. With new Portrait. Per vol.....	1.25
This edition includes all the matter in the latest English editions, with many additions, thus making it, with the novels, the cheapest and most complete Thackeray in the market. 1. Barry Lyndon, Hogarty Diamond, &c. 2. Paris, and Irish Sketch-Books, &c. 3. Sketches, Sketches, Denis Duval, &c. 4. Four Georges, Humors, &c. 5. Catherine, Christmas Books, and Unreprinted Pieces.....	1.25
THAXTER'S (MRS. CELIA) Among the Isles of Shoals.....	1.50
THOREAU'S (H. D.) Walden; or, Life in the Woods.....	2.00
Excursions in Field and Forest. Portrait.....	2.00
The Maine Woods.....	2.00
Cape Cod.....	2.00
Letters.....	2.00
A Yankee in Canada.....	2.00
A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers.....	2.00
TYLER (EDWARD B.) The Early History of Mankind.....	2.50
Primitive Culture. 2 vols.....	5.00
TYNDALL (JOHN). Faraday as a Discoverer.....	1.00
Fragments of Science for Unscientific People.....	2.00
Light and Electricity.....	1.25
Hours of Exercise in the Alps.....	2.00
Heat as a Mode of Motion.....	2.00
On Sound.....	2.00
Radiant Heat.....	6.00
Forms of Water.....	1.50
Lectures on Light.....	1.00
Proceedings at the Farewell Banquet to Prof. Tyndall.....	.50
TYTLER (SARAH). Old Masters and their Pictures.....	1.50
Modern Painters and their Paintings.....	1.50
VOYSEY (REV. CHARLES) The Sling and the Stone. Vols. I and V, each.....	3.00
Vols III, IV, and VI, each.....	3.75
The Voysey Appeal.....	.50
Voysey's Defence at York.....	.50
WARNER'S (CHARLES D.) My Summer in a Garden.....	1.00
Sauterlings.....	1.50
Back-Log Studies.....	2.00
WEISS (JOHN). American Religion.....	1.50
Life of Theodore Parker. 3 vols.....	6.00
WHIPPLE'S (E. P.) Literature and Life.....	1.50
Essays and Reviews.....	1.50
Character and Characteristic Men.....	1.50
The Literature of the Age of Elizabeth.....	1.50
Success and its Conditions.....	1.50
Washington and the Revolution.....	.30
WHITNEY'S (MRS. A. D. T.) A Summer in Leslie Goldthwaite's Life.....	1.50
We Girls: A Home Story.....	1.50
Real Folks.....	1.50
The Other Girls.....	2.00
Fancies. A volume of Poems.....	1.50
WHITTIER'S (JOHN G.) Poems. 2 vols.....	4.00
Child Life.....	3.00

ADDRESS:

THE INDEX,

1 Tremont Place Boston.

Digitized by Google

WHAT IS PROPERTY?

OR,

AN INQUIRY INTO THE PRINCIPLE OF RIGHT AND OF GOVERNMENT.

By P. J. PROUDHON.

Prefaced by a sketch of Proudhon's Life and Works, by J. A. Langlois, and containing as a Frontispiece a fine Steel Engraving of the Author. Translated from the French by BENJ. R. TUCKER.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

P. J. PROUDHON: HIS LIFE AND HIS WORKS. PREFACE.

FIRST MEMOIR.

METHOD PURSUED IN THIS WORK.—THE IDEA OF A REVOLUTION.

CHAPTER II.

PROPERTY CONSIDERED AS A NATURAL RIGHT.—OCCUPATION AND CIVIL LAW AS EFFICIENT BASES OF PROPERTY.—DEFINITIONS.

1. Property as a Natural Right.
2. Occupation as the Title to Property.
3. Civil Law as the Foundation and Sanction of Property.

CHAPTER III.

LABOR AS THE EFFICIENT CAUSE OF THE DOMAIN OF PROPERTY.

1. The Land cannot be appropriated.
2. Universal Consent no Justification of Property.
3. Prescription gives no Title to Property.
4. Labor.—That Labor has no Inherent Power to appropriate Natural Wealth.
5. That Labor leads to Equality of Property.
6. That in Society all Wages are Equal.
7. That Inequality of Powers is the Necessary Condition of Equality of Fortunes.
8. That, from the stand-point of Justice, Labor destroys Property.

CHAPTER IV.

THAT PROPERTY IS IMPOSSIBLE.

Demonstration. Axiom. Property is the Right of Increase claimed by the Proprietor over anything which he has stamped as his own.

First Proposition. Property is impossible, because it demands something for Nothing.

Second Proposition. Property is impossible, because, wherever it exists, Production costs more than it is worth.

Third Proposition. Property is impossible, because, with a

given Capital, Production is proportional to Labor, not to Property.

Fourth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is Homocidal.

Fifth Proposition. Property is impossible, because, if it exists, Society devours itself.

Sixth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Mother of Tyranny.

Seventh Proposition. Property is impossible, because in consuming its Receipts, it loses them; in hoarding them, it nullifies them; and in using them as Capital, it turns them against Production.

Eighth Proposition. Property is impossible, because its Power of Accumulation is infinite, and is exercised only over Finite Quantities.

Ninth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is powerless against Property.

Tenth Proposition. Property is impossible, because it is the Negation of Equality.

CHAPTER V.

PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPOSITION OF THE IDEA OF JUSTICE AND INJUSTICE, AND A DETERMINATION OF THE PRINCIPLE OF GOVERNMENT AND OF RIGHT.

Part I.

1. Of the Moral Sense in Man and the Animals.
2. Of the First and Second Degrees of Sociability.
3. Of the Third Degree of Sociability.

Part II.

1. Of the Causes of our Mistakes. The Origin of Property.
2. Characteristics of Communism and of Property.
3. Determination of the Third Form of Society. Conclusion.

SECOND MEMOIR.

LETTER TO M. BLANQUI ON PROPERTY.

This—the first volume of Proudhon's Complete Works—is a large octavo of 500 pages, handsomely printed in large, new type, on heavy-toned paper. Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price. Remittances may be made by P. O. Money Order, payable at Worcester, Mass., by Draft on New York, or by Registered Letter.

Price in Cloth, bevelled edges $3.50
Price in Full Calf, blue, gilt edge 6.50

All orders should be addressed to the publisher,

BENJ. R. TUCKER,
PRINCETON, MASS.

LIBERAL BOOKS.

THE MARTYRDOM OF MAN. By Win-

wood Reade $3.00

THE SAFEST CREED. By O. B. Frothing-

ham 1.50

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE WORLD. By

Edward Clodd75

NATHANIEL VAUGHAN: Priest and Man.

By Frederika MacDonald 1.50

SOUL PROBLEMS, with other Papers. By

Joseph E. Peck75

THE CULTIVATION OF ART, and its Relations to Religious Puritanism and

Money-Getting. By A. R. Cooper... .25

JUST ISSUED:

THE CHRIST OF PAUL; or, The Enigmas

of Christianity. By George Reber.

12mo. Extra cloth. 400 pp. Post-

paid 2.00

PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY AS A PHILOSOPHER

AND REFORMER. By Charles

Sotheran. Post-paid 1.25

Sent post-paid on receipt of price by THE

INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

DRINK PINE GROVE

MINERAL SPRING WATER!

The best Alkaline Chalybeate found in twenty-eight years' practice of medicine, and diligent search for the best remedies for disease. It contains alkaline matter and iron in such proportions as to promote the circulation in the portal veins, regulate the secretions, remedy constipation, and give a good appetite. The iron reproduces the red globules in the blood, and invigorates the nervous system. No experienced physician and no well-informed person can deny the good effects of the ingredients.

For invalids, arrangements have been made with the proprietor of the New Hampshire House, and with several farmers near the Springs, for good and cheap board.

AGENCIES:

WM. H. VICKERY, Apothecary, Dover, N.H.

Z. FOSTER CAMPBELL, Apothecary, Manchester, N.H.

SULLIVAN & LOTZ, Tremont St., Boston, Mass.

SCRIPTURE & PARKER, 31 and 33 Court Square, Boston.

For Circulars, Agencies, and Information, address

Office Pine Grove Mineral Springs,

DOVER, N.H.

DR. J. EDWARD BRUCE

Is prepared to lecture before Lyceums, and other societies desiring his services. He offers the following list of Lectures:—

1. The Education Question, considered as the Coming Crisis in American Politics.

2. Christian versus Chamo-Civilization.

3. The Place of Spiritual Phenomena in a Right Philosophy of Man.

4. The Origin and Development of the Spiritual Element in Man.

5. Christianity and Free Religion.

6. The Religious Outlook.

7. Supernatural Selection.

8. English Labor and English Laborers as I saw Them.

Address

J. EDWARD BRUCE, M. D.

NEWBURYPORT, MASS.

LABOR REFORM.

The History of Co-operation in England:

Its Literature and Its Advocates.

BY

GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE.

VOLUME I.

THE PIONEER PERIOD—1812 to 1844.

A masterly work, indispensable to all who are interested in the rights of labor and the best method of securing those rights.

Sent to any address by mail, post-paid, on receipt of TWO DOLLARS, by THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston.

$12 A DAY at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Me.

WEST NEWTON

English and Classical School.

The next Term begins WEDNESDAY, April 5, 1876. Address

NATH'L T. ALLEN.

SEND 25 cts. to G. P. ROWELL & CO., New York, for Pamphlet of 100 pages, containing lists of 3000 newspapers, and estimates showing cost of advertising.

A CHEAP OFFER.

A COMPLETE SET OF INDEX TRACTS, from No. 1 to 15 inclusive, will be mailed to any address on the prepayment of 50 CENTS.

Address THE INDEX, No. 1 Tremont Place, Boston, Mass.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $1 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

TO BOOK-BUYERS.

Please examine the revised list of POPULAR BOOKS on the opposite side of this page. Any OBTAINABLE BOOK NOT IN THIS LIST will be furnished to order. Address THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place Boston.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY.

A well established Publishing and Book-selling House (Freethought) requires $5,000 to $10,000 to extend its business. Partnership given, if desired by an unorthodox man of right stamp. Address "PUBLISH-ER," care Brown & Henderson, 18 Clinton Place, New York.

FURNITURE, BEDDING,

WINDOW SHADES,

and DRAPERIES.

Comfort, Durability, and Common Sense kept in view in its manufacture. Prices the lowest for properly made goods. Repairing and Refitting a branch of our business.

GEO. W. STEVENS,

757 Washington St., Boston.

BOOKS FOR THINKERS.

Send 25 cts. for THE STYLUS one year, a Monthly Record and Review of the latest and best works in Radical, Freethought, and Oriental Literature. It also contains a list of the standard books of this class.

CHAS. P. SOMERBY,

PUBLISHER, BOOKSELLER, AND IMPORTER,

139 Eighth St., New York.

THE WEEKLY SUN.

1876. NEW YORK. 1876.

Eighteen hundred and seventy-six is the Centennial year. It is also the year in which an Opposition House of Representatives, the first since the war, will be in power at Washington; and the year of the twenty-third election of a President of the United States. All of these events are sure to be of great interest and importance, especially the two latter; and all of them, and everything connected with them, will be fully and freshly reported and expounded in The Sun.

The Opposition House of Representatives, taking up the line of inquiry opened years ago by The Sun, will sternly and diligently investigate the corruptions and misdeeds of GRANT's administration, and will, it is to be hoped, lay the foundation for a new and better period in our national history. Of all this The Sun will contain complete and accurate accounts, furnishing its readers with early and trustworthy information upon these absorbing topics.

The twenty-third Presidential election, with the preparations for it, will be memorable as deciding upon GRANT's aspirations for a third term of power and plunder, and still more as deciding who shall be the candidate of the party of Reform, and as electing that candidate. Concerning all these subjects, those who read The Sun will have the constant means of being thoroughly well informed.

The Weekly Sun, which has attained a circulation of over eighty thousand copies, already has its readers in every State and Territory, and we trust that the year 1876 will see their numbers doubled. It will continue to be a thorough newspaper. All the general news of the day will be found in it, condensed when unimportant, at full length when of moment; and always, we trust, treated in a clear, interesting, and instructive manner.

It is our aim to make the Weekly Sun the best family newspaper in the world, and we shall continue to give in its columns a large amount of miscellaneous reading, such as stories, tales, poems, scientific intelligence, and agricultural information, for which we are not able to make room in our daily edition. The agricultural department especially is one of its prominent features. The fashions are also regularly reported in its columns; and so are the markets of every kind.

The Weekly Sun, eight pages with fifty-six broad columns, is only $1.20 a year, postage prepaid. As this price barely repays the cost of the paper, no discount can be made from this rate to Clubs, Agents, Postmasters, or anyone.

The Daily Sun, a large, four-page newspaper of twenty-eight columns, gives all the news for two cents a copy. Subscription, postage prepaid, 55c. a month, or $6.50 a year. Sunday edition extra, $1.20 per year. We have no travelling agents.

Address THE SUN, New York City.

THE CENTENNIAL

CONGRESS OF LIBERALS!

AN APPEAL TO ALL

Who believe that the United States should be

Absolutely Secularized.

And who favor the movement to carry out the principle of

STATE SECULARIZATION,

As indicated in the "Demands of Liberalism."

605 WALNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA, }
March 1, 1876. }

To the Liberal Leagues and the Liberal Public of the United States:—

The General Centennial Committee, appointed at a convention held in this city last September for the purpose of making all necessary arrangements for a General Centennial Congress of Liberals next summer, have decided to call said Congress to convene at Philadelphia, Saturday, July 1, 1876, further particulars to be hereafter announced.

Each organized Liberal League will be entitled to send five delegates as special representatives—three in addition to its President and Secretary. But all individual Liberals who sympathize with the general objects and aims of the Liberal Leagues will be equally entitled and welcomed to seats and votes in the Congress.

REPORT PROMPTLY!

In order to lessen as much as possible the expenses of the delegates, each League is requested to elect them as soon as possible, and to report their names to the undersigned through its Secretary. All Liberals, delegates, or individuals who desire and intend to participate in the Convention are requested also to forward personally and immediately their names and full post-office addresses to the undersigned, that he may be enabled to make the most favorable terms possible for their accommodation. If notified early, he hopes to secure for them a considerable reduction in railroad fares, and to provide boarding-places at perhaps half the usual rates of the season.

Donations Solicited!

The Centennial Committee on Finance having through their Chairman transferred their duties to the General Centennial Committee, the undersigned has been appointed to attend to the financial department, and hereby appeals to the Liberals of the country for voluntary contributions to the amount of One Thousand Dollars. This amount will be needed to make the Congress a complete success, though the utmost possible will be done with whatever is contributed. The officers of the union of Liberal German societies propose to raise the same amount for their convention, and have already raised $600 of it. The Young Men's Christian Association here have already spent this year nearly $100,000 in preparation for the Centennial, in the interest of Orthodox superstition; it would be a pity if all the friends of "Liberty and Light" could not do a hundredth part as much for the cause of national development and free humanity! The money will all be wanted (and much more could be advantageously expended) in providing suitable halls and headquarters, advertising the Congress liberally in advance in the chief dailies of the country, defraying the necessary expenses of desired and invited speakers, paying verbatim reporters, publishing a complete pamphlet report of the proceedings, etc., etc. What is done must be done speedily, since the arrangements should be completed, as far as practicable, by the first of May.

All sums donated will be duly acknowledged in THE INDEX, and a full report of all expenditures will be sent for publication in the same paper. Remittances should be sent to the undersigned, 605 Walnut St., Philadelphia, Pa. Will not all friends of the movement respond heartily and at once?

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

Acting Treasurer.

I believe that Mr. Kilgore is a gentleman of unimpeachable personal integrity, and that all money remitted to him as above will be faithfully and economically devoted to the legitimate uses of the Congress.

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

Chairman of the General Centennial Committee.

At the preliminary Convention held at Philadelphia on Sept. 17, 18, and 19, 1875, for the purpose of making arrangements for the Centennial Congress of Liberals, the following were appointed a

General Centennial Committee:

FRANCIS E. ABBOT,

DAMON Y. KILGORE,

ALEXANDER LOOS,

ISAAC RHEN,

BENJ. F. UNDERWOOD,

H. S. WILLIAMS,

with power to increase their number to fifteen. The completion and success of the arrangements must depend on the liberality of the friends of the movement, who are respectfully and earnestly solicited to contribute the necessary funds.

The Index.

Three Dollars a Year.

LIBERTY AND LIGHT.

Single Copies Seven Cents.

VOLUME 7.

BOSTON, MASS., THURSDAY, APRIL 6, 1876.

WHOLE No. 328.

ORGANIZE!

THE DEMANDS OF LIBERALISM.

1. We demand that churches and other ecclesiastical property shall no longer be exempt from just taxation.
2. We demand that the employment of chaplains in Congress, in State Legislatures, in the navy and militia, and in prisons, asylums, and all other institutions supported by public money, shall be discontinued.
3. We demand that all public appropriations for educational and charitable institutions of a sectarian character shall cease.
4. We demand that all religious services now sustained by the government shall be abolished; and especially that the use of the Bible in the public schools, whether ostensibly as a text-book or avowedly as a book of religious worship, shall be prohibited.
5. We demand that the appointment, by the President of the United States or by the Governors of the various States, of all religious festivals and fairs shall wholly cease.
6. We demand that the judicial oath in the courts and in all other departments of the government shall be abolished, and that simple affirmation under the pains and penalties of perjury shall be established in its stead.
7. We demand that all laws directly or indirectly enforcing the observance of Sunday as the Sabbath shall be repealed.
8. We demand that all laws looking to the enforcement of "Christian" morality shall be abrogated, and that all laws shall be conformed to the requirements of natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
9. We demand that not only in the Constitutions of the United States and of the several States, but also in the practical administration of the same, no privilege or advantage shall be conceded to Christianity or any other special religion; that our entire political system shall be founded and administered on a purely secular basis; and that whatever changes shall prove necessary to this end shall be consistently, unflinchingly, and promptly made.

A FORM OF LOCAL ORGANIZATION.

Whereas, It is our profound conviction that the safety of republican institutions is imperilled, the advance of civilization impeded, and the most sacred rights of man infringed, by the least interference of the State in matters of religion; and

Whereas, Certain grave inconsistencies with the general spirit of the United States Constitution still mark the practical administration of our political system, threatening the perpetuity of religious liberty, the existence of free public schools, and the peace and prosperity of the entire land;

THEREFORE, We, the undersigned, hereby associate ourselves together under the following

ARTICLES OF AGREEMENT.

- ART. 1.—The name of this Association shall be THE LIBERAL LEAGUE OF —.
- ART. 2.—The object of the Liberal League shall be to secure practical compliance with the "Demands of Liberalism" throughout the country, and especially in —, and thereby to effect the total separation of Church and State in fact as well as in theory.
Also to send delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League, when organized, and to cooperate heartily with all the liberals of the country in furtherance of the above-named object.
- ART. 3.—The means employed in working for these objects shall be regular local meetings, free discussions, lectures, addresses, conventions, the platform and the press in general, and all such other means as are peaceable, orderly, and right.
- ART. 4.—Such measures shall be adopted for raising funds for the League as shall be prescribed in the By-Laws by a two-thirds vote of the members.
- ART. 5.—Any person may become a member of the League by subscribing his or her name to these Articles of Agreement.
- ART. 6.—The Officers of the League shall be a President, a Vice President, a Secretary, a Treasurer, and an Executive Committee of three members; and their duties shall be those commonly pertaining to these offices. The President and Secretary shall be ex-officio delegates to the conventions of the National Liberal League.
- ART. 7.—These Articles of Agreement may be amended by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular meeting, provided due notice of the proposed amendments shall have been sent to every member at least two weeks previous to such meeting.

RELIGIOUS FREEDOM AMENDMENT:

PROPOSED AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE

FIRST AMENDMENT TO THE U. S. CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE 1.

SECTION 1.—Neither Congress nor any State shall make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or favoring any particular form of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or permitting in any degree a union of Church and State, or granting any special privilege, immunity, or advantage to any sect or religious body, or to any number of sects or religious bodies; or taxing the people of any State, either directly or indirectly, for the support of any sect or religious body, or of any number of sects or religious bodies; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

SECTION 2.—No religious test shall ever be required as a condition of suffrage, or as a qualification to any office or public trust, in any State. No person shall ever in any State be deprived of any of his or her rights, privileges, or capacities, or disqualified for the performance of any public or private duty, or rendered incompetent to give evidence in any court of law or equity, in consequence of any opinions he or she may hold on the subject of religion.

lon. No person shall ever in any State be required by law to contribute directly or indirectly to the support of any religious society or body of which he or she is not a voluntary member.

SECTION 3.—Neither the United States, nor any State, Territory, municipality, or any civil division of any State or Territory, shall levy any tax, or make any gift, grant, or appropriation, for the support, or in aid, of any church, religious sect, or denomination, or any school, seminary, or institution of learning, in which the faith or doctrines of any religious order or sect shall be taught or inculcated, or in which religious practices shall be observed; or for the support, or in aid, of any religious charity or purpose of any sect, order, or denomination whatsoever.

SECTION 4.—Congress shall have power to enforce the various provisions of this Article by appropriate legislation.

GLIMPSES.

MOODY'S success as a revivalist is attributed by a correspondent of a religious journal to the fact that "he is a thorough business man in matters of religion." No rationalist will be permitted to smile at this statement.

Do NOT forget to inscribe your name early in the list of those who prove their earnestness for State Emancipation by subscribing to the fund for the Centennial Congress of Liberals. In coming years, that list may be looked back to as the Centennial "Roll of Honor."

CARDINAL CULLEN, of Ireland, in his Lenten Pastoral, recommends heads of families not to allow their children to read the newspapers, but to read the lives of the saints instead! Which manifests the zeal of the Holy Apostolic Empire for the mental illumination of mankind.

THE BOSTON LIBERAL LEAGUE will hold a public meeting at Parker Memorial Hall, corner of Berkeley and Appleton Streets, on Friday evening, April 14, at half past seven o'clock. Rev. M. J. Savage, of this city, has kindly consented to address the League on "State Secularization," and other addresses will be made.

MISS SUSAN B. ANTHONY has evinced a noble spirit in paying off a debt of $10,000 in which she was involved by the failure of the Revolution a few years ago. She has lectured one hundred and twenty times this season, it is said; and has just paid off the last dollar of this heavy debt with the proceeds. Such an instance of high integrity is worthy of all praise.

THREE STATE CONVENTIONS of the Republican party, in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Vermont, have just adopted resolutions on the school question. These are quoted below, and especial attention is due to the Ohio one; but they are all non-committal as to Bible-reading in the schools, and show that the Republicans do not dare, as a party, to take positive ground either for or against this sectarian practice. It would be a great misfortune to perpetuate this non-committalism in the United States Constitution.

THE REPUBLICAN State Convention at Burlington, Vermont, on March 29, adopted the following among their resolutions: "Third—The safety of the republic depends upon the intelligence as well as the virtue of its citizens, and it is essential that the public school system shall be maintained in order that every child may receive such education as will fit him for useful citizenship; and we are unalterably opposed to any diversion of the public school money for any purpose whatever."

THE REPUBLICAN State Convention at Columbus, Ohio, adopted a platform on March 29 containing the following plank: "Seventh—We stand by our system of free common schools, supported by general taxation. There must be no division of the school fund, and no sectarian interference with the schools." If the members who voted for this resolution should become aware of the full meaning of their own words, they would be amazed to find they had voted to exclude the Bible from the schools.

ACCORDING to the London Times, "a papal brief, addressed to the Archbishop of Toledo, denounces the liberty of worship in Spain as leading the State with a great crime, and paving the way to the persecution of Catholicism"! Catholics in America are very anxious that no attention should be paid to what the Church does in other lands; like Bishop McQuaid, they declare themselves "in no way responsible for Mexico, South America, Spain, or any other country in the world." But, begging their pardon, they are responsible, just so long as they uphold the Church, which will do precisely the same things here, if it ever gets the opportunity. To allow religious liberty, forsooth, is to persecute Catholicism; therefore, down with religious liberty! It is almost funny to see radical lambs trying to let the lion out of his cage that they may lie down in peace together, and innocently hoping it will not be inside of him.

THE REPUBLICAN State Convention at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, on March 29, adopted the following resolution as a part of their platform: "Resolved, That the common safety demands that our public schools shall not only be free to all, but shall be preserved from all special or partial control. All attempts to divide the school fund for any purpose whatever, or to divert any portion of it into a channel not under popular control, are to be frowned upon and resisted with unyielding firmness. The recent defeat, in the Democratic Legislature of Maryland, of a Constitutional amendment to secure the common school fund of the State against division reveals at once a grave danger and its source, and, with other like facts, makes plain the duty of Congress to submit such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States as, when adopted, will effectually defend the common school system from all enemies, open or covert."

THE OPENING paper of this week's issue of THE INDEX is by Rev. Father Lambert, of Waterloo, N. Y., who offers a reply to our recent lecture on the school question. We have carefully read and considered it; but we can neither profess to regard it as a "valid reply" nor yet go over the same ground unnecessarily a second time. To do this would be unprofitable as well as tedious; but we will do for Father Lambert what no Catholic journal would do for us—give him a full and fair hearing before our readers. A few misreports (of course accidental) of our own words we have ventured to correct in the body of his article; but we can only enter a general disclaimer as to many "inferences" he draws. Whether he strengthens or weakens Bishop McQuaid's argument, our readers will be able to decide for themselves without our help. It is only necessary to remind them of one passage in our lecture: "In saying this, I do not in the least question the sincerity of the Roman priesthood." Father Lambert seems to have overlooked this passage.

ALL WHO believe that a secular State can in justice support only secular schools should heartily combine to make the Centennial Congress of Liberals a great success. It is needed to give audible and emphatic utterance to the conviction of all true Americans that the public school system, in order to be permanent, must be just to all; it is needed to warn the people against precipitately adopting a Constitutional Amendment which shall practically put the schools under the control of the Protestant sects as a whole. This species of sectarianism is exactly as bad as any other; and the greatest danger at present seems to be the probability of the adoption of Mr. Blaine's studiously ambiguous amendment to the Constitution. It would be better to wait till the public mind is brought to a clear perception that all the institutions of a true republic, so far as they are sustained by general taxation, must be absolutely secular; and a well advertised, well attended, and well reported Congress of Liberals would exert no small influence in directing wisely the general tendency of public opinion on this subject.

LIST OF LIBERAL LEAGUES.

T. LOUIS, MO.—M. A. McCord, President; P. A. Lofgreen, L. La Grille, Secretaries.
 BOSTON, MASS.—F. E. Abbot, President; J. P. Titcomb, G. A. Bacon, Secretaries.
 JEFFERSON, OHIO.—W. H. Crowell, President; A. Giddings, Secretary.
 SAN JOSE, CAL.—A. J. Spencer, President; J. L. Hatch, Secretary.
 TOLEDO, IOWA.—J. Reedy, President; E. S. Beckley, Secretary.
 VINELAND, N. J.—John Gage, President; Sue M. Clute, Secretary.
 JUNCTIONVILLE, NEB.—J. W. Eastman, President; B. L. Easley, Secretary.
 OLATHE, KAN.—S. B. S. Wilson, President; H. A. Griffin, Secretary.
 DETROIT, MICH.—W. R. Hill, President; A. T. Garretson, Secretary.
 BREEDSVILLE, MICH.—A. G. Eastman, President; F. R. Knowles, Secretary.
 OSWEGO, MO.—R. F. Thompson, President; M. Roderick, Secretary.
 BATE, ME.—F. G. Barker, President; C. Rhodes, Secretary.
 BURLIN, WIS.—President, J. D. Walter; Secretary, J. D. Kruschke.
 WASHINGTON, D.C.—George M. Wood, President; J. E. Crawford, Secretary.
 AUBURN, OHIO.—John Fish, President; G. W. Barnes, Treasurer.
 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—S. C. Gale, President; W. C. Cowles and Frank J. Mead, Secretaries.
 NEW YORK, N.Y.—J. B. Brown, President; D. M. Bennett, Secretary.
 ST. JOSEPH, MO.—P. V. Wise, President; T. H. Kennedy, Secretary.
 KAU CLAIRE, WIS.—President, S. J. Dickson; Secretary, W. Kennedy.
 BALBO, IND.—President, T. Gray; Secretary, W. Allen.
 NEW ORLEANS, LA.—President, E. Vorster; Secretary, J. E. Wallace.
 BAY CITY, MICH.—President, S. M. Green; Secretary, S. M. Johnson.
 CLEARFIELD, PA.—S. Widemire, President; H. Hoover, Secretary.
 SAUK CITY, WIS.—Chr. Spiehr, President; Robert Cunradi, Secretary.
 AUGUSTA, WIS.—Davis Jackson, President; George P. Vaux, Secretary.
 WATERTOWN, N.Y.—L. D. Olney, President; W. A. Howland, L. M. Delano, Secretaries.
 PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Mrs. Carrie B. Kilgore, President; John S. Dye, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE.—Theodore Fritz, President; D. C. Züning, Secretary.
 MILWAUKEE (Second League).—R. C. Spencer, President; R. Boyd, Secretary.
 NORTHUMBERLAND, PA.—M. B. Priestley, President; Chas. Collins, Secretary.
 NORTHAMPTON, MASS.—E. E. Denniston, President; M. A. Dewey, Secretary.
 MEDINA, MINN.—Allen Grave, President; Taylor Archibald, Secretary.
 COOPERSTOWN, MICH.—George A. Farr, President; H. Potts, Secretary.
 CLINTON HOLLOW, N.Y.—Theodore A. Cookingham, President; Lee G. Graham, Secretary.

A Catholic Priest's Reply.

BY REV. L. A. LAMBERT.

EDITOR INDEX:—

In an editorial paragraph on your lecture on the school question, you say: "If a valid reply can be made to our reasoning, we shall be the first to admit its force." These words are my excuse for submitting the following thoughts on the lecture.

Mr. Abbot sets out by objecting to the word "sect" as applicable to the party which he represents. The secularists are strenuous in the endeavor to appear above and independent of partisan or sectarian influences, that they may the better assume the character of unbiased and disinterested judges, and look down with the superiority of gods on poor wrangling mortals below. But the world has a stubborn way of not always granting us the positions we would fain assume. The secularists must submit to the inevitable, and be classed where they belong; that is, among partisans and sectarians of the bitterest type. Their bitter hostility to everything that does not meet with their approbation; their supercilious contempt for those who differ with them; their obtrusive professions of patriotism, philanthropy, and interest for the "whole people"; their exalted opinion of their wisdom, and their contempt for the opinions and rights of others when they clash with their theories; their disposition to attribute improper motives to opponents; their slurs, jibes, and gulps at religion and Christianity stamp them in indelible characters as an anti-Christian sect,—insidious and crafty, because wanting the candor to avow openly their ultimate principles and designs. As a sect, then, they must expect to be treated, and as such their arguments must be met.

A few extracts from Mr. Abbot's lecture will illustrate what I have said. He says: "What makes a party partisan or sectarian is the selfish endeavor to sacrifice the interests of the whole people to their own interests as a mere part of the people; while, if any party aims honestly (the secularists, for instance?) at securing the interests of the whole people, by rendering equal and exact justice to every individual, it is strictly a non-sectarian party." This definition has no force except on the supposition that the secularists are honest, sincere, and unselfish, while all Christian denominations are dishonest, insincere, and selfish; therefore they are sectarian, and secularism is not. This is an instance of that cool assumption of superiority on the part of the secularists which cannot for a moment be tolerated in debate. This method of dealing with the school question is characteristic of the secular party. They assume to be the judges of individual rights, and the sole guardian of the interests of the "whole people," forgetting that the good of the whole people is best attained by securing to each individual his constitutional rights.

Once for all, then, it must be understood that we are all on equal terms, equally sincere, honest, and patriotic, and any argument based on an assumption to the contrary is not valid,—not worthy of respectful consideration.

MINOR OBJECTIONS.

Under this head Mr. Abbot groups together the following objections to the State schools, and makes what he deems a suitable reply.

1st. "It is charged (by Bishop McQuaid) that the State school system, as compared with the Catholic parochial school system, is unduly expensive, and the merit of economy is pleaded for the latter."

Mr. Abbot concedes this to be true to a certain extent. The Bishop says the Catholic schools cost no more than one-fourth or one-third the expense of the public schools. The former replies by insinuating (a method of statement in which he is an adept) that the education given in the Catholic schools is inferior to that given in the State schools. As this is entirely gratuitous, I meet it with a simple denial. The Bishop, in his lecture, contends "that in every important point, except costliness of building and expensiveness of teachers, Catholic schools are superior to State schools. They are more thorough in secular studies; there is less cramming, and less multiplicity of useless branches of learning." And he challenges comparison. This, it would seem, ought to settle this point, at least until some tangible proof is given to the contrary.

Mr. Abbot does not understand how the denominational system, if universally adopted, would reduce the total cost of education on the whole. The Bishop anticipates this difficulty by quoting from an article in the New York Daily Bulletin on the cost of education in Germany, where the denominational school system is in operation, showing that our State schools cost most and perform least. The first portion of his statement he proves by a comparison of figures. The heaviest taxed German State is Hesse Cassel. The tax for school purposes is 34 cents per head, while in Cincinnati the tax per head is $2.50. Yet more than half the children of Cincinnati are in denominational and private schools. New York City taxes four dollars per head, while 30,000 children attend denominational schools. And in Boston, in 1873, the cost was seven dollars per head. This argument from economy is, then, based on fact.

2d. "The gradual expansion of the common school system, by the establishment of State high schools, normal schools, and universities, is dwelt upon as a great evil which will ultimately involve the destruction of denominational institutions of the corresponding grade."

Mr. Abbot sees no injustice in this crushing out of existence those denominational institutions that have been established by the people at their own expense, inspired by a love of education. He rather boasts of it as a proof of the superiority of the State institutions. There would be little to boast of if the State institutions were placed on equal footing, subject to fair competition. That evangelical institutions of learning are fast fading away before the atheistic development or expansion of the State school system is a fact clearly set forth in Bishop McQuaid's lecture. We look upon this decrease of Protestant colleges with regret, for with all their faults they inculcated some idea of Christianity. But whose fault is it? The evangelicals have no one to blame but themselves. For many years back they have been playing into the hands of the secular party in their blind zeal to oppose and harass their Catholic fellow-citizens. By their assistance that party, having grown strong, begins to make manifest its ultimate purposes. It turns upon those it has used; it casts them aside as the gambler throws away the cards with which he has won the game and robbed his antagonist. One of the first results of this unfortunate action on the part of non-Catholic Christians is to see their colleges and institutions of learning fade away, as the Indian fades and disappears before the onward march of the white man, or as a ship disappears in a storm. Will they learn anything from this? Will they see their mistake before it is too late? Will Mr. Abbot's contemptuous fling at their "worthless colleges" open their eyes? We fear not. In the words of the Bishop, "some heads take in truth slowly, others only by trepanning."

It is unjust for the State to paralyze legitimate private enterprise and monopolize education, when it cannot give it as cheaply or as satisfactorily as it can be otherwise obtained. The very existence of those denominational institutions at which Mr. Abbot laughs is a solemn protest against the usurped monopoly of the State. He draws a comparison between Cornell and Michigan Universities and the other institutions. These universities should certainly show some result for the money they have received from the people. Millions have been expended on them, and what is the social result? It is absolutely imperceptible, intangible,—like a drop of water in the ocean. So few are their students compared with the great bulk of American youth that when they return to society they are lost sight of, and are as rarely to be met with as the proverbial dead ass. The denominational institutions must contend against incalculable odds. The vast resources of the State are pitted against them, and yet they struggle on, and their beneficent influence on society is manifest in every direction. A generous sentiment of manhood would impel us to look upon them with admiration for their self-sacrificing earnestness and manly perseverance in the face of unjust and unfair competition, and yet we find one who rejoices when they are crushed beneath the juggernaut of secularism.

Again, State universities work injustice to the great majority of the people, by giving to the sons of the rich, who can afford to send them, an education to earn their living in the learned professions. This is taxing the poor to educate the rich. Any system, school or otherwise, that brings about this state of things, has in it something radically wrong. To put all on an equal footing, poor children should be taught trades at the expense of the State. Give a man sound religious principles and a good trade, and you will have a good, reliable, and trustworthy citizen, precisely what the State needs. An expansion of the school system in the direction of trades would be far less objectionable than the expansion towards universities; as well as more wise and statesmanlike. Two of the prime causes of crime are the ignorance of trades and the education of youth to be above honest toil. The learned professions are overstocked; it is only the few who enter therein succeed, and the greater number who fail are unfitted for work, and, being ashamed to beg, they are led to use or abuse their education in questionable directions. This leads to the forgeries, frauds, and swindlings in high and low places, that are beginning to make us, as a people, notorious over the civilized world.

3d. "The common school system in its present form and manner of administration tends to demoralize both teachers and children."

To this Mr. Abbot replies first, by referring to the "Report of the Committee of Education of the New York City Council of Political Reform, etc. Published in 1873"; and secondly, by the truly Arabic reply, "You're another." Neither of these is satisfactory. The public school system is now on trial; the Catholic schools and convents will plead when their case comes on. When it does come on, I would suggest as the most appropriate place for the trial the ruins of the convent under the shadow of Bunker Hill Monument, that was burned some years ago by a Boston mob; it would be exceedingly appropriate in this our Centennial year. If Mr. Abbot had given less of his space to the bugbear of Patria Potestas, and a little more of it to those statistics to which he merely refers, this portion of his lecture would have been more interesting, and perhaps more convincing. He has only thought fit to give a reference to a book that not one in ten thousand will ever see; but how could he give statistics?—since there are no statistics of common-school morality or immorality; for, from the very nature of unconvicted crime, such statistics are impossible.

The Bishop's statement in reference to the immoral tendency of the common school system is based on documentary evidence, to which he referred. He quoted Henry Ward Beecher, a defender of the school system in full accord with the secularists. This representative New England divine in his last Thanksgiving sermon drew a picture of the condition of morals in the Brooklyn schools, in which were teachers who held their positions by the sacrifice of their virtue to the school commissioners. Thomas W. Field, Superintendent of Schools in the same city of Brooklyn, in his annual report of four or five years ago, gave a fearful account of the prevalent immorality; so fearful, indeed, that, in the interest of morality it was thought better to suppress the foul and disgusting details. Professor Agassiz, in his address before the Massachusetts State Teachers' Association, stated that by their own confession a majority of the unfortunate women of that city traced their introduction in their downward course to the public schools. To show that these are not isolated cases, I will add some additional, that will convince the reader that the immoral tendency is the rule and not the exception.

Some years ago the public were startled by awful developments of depravity in one of the female schools of Boston,—so horrible indeed as almost to stagger belief. The Boston Times published the whole occurrence at the time; but after creating great excitement for a few days or weeks, the matter was quietly hushed up, for fear of furnishing arguments to the Catholics and injuring the character of the common schools. Some few years ago other startling facts came to light in New York, involving the character of leading school commissioners and of some of the principal female teachers in the common schools of that city. These scandals became too notorious to be either blinked or smothered, and several of the secular papers came out to lash vice in high places. Among these was the New York Sunday Dispatch and the New York Tribune. The Dispatch opens its article with the following caption and paragraph:—

"PROSTITUTION IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS."

"Oh! that we had gone to reside in the backwoods, or been buried among Hottentots, ere we had been felt constrained to write that startling caption, and print what will be found beneath it. If we are to have our children instructed by the abandoned of both sexes; if our very schools are to be converted into instruments of harlotry; if our courtisans are to teach the young idea how to shoot, we had better adopt the creed and practices of Mormons at once. We were anxious to disregard it; we have tried to throw it overboard; we have endeavored to force a disbelief of its contents; we have made every effort to convince ourselves that such a horrible state of affairs cannot possibly exist; but all these endeavors have resulted in a conviction that it is our duty to bring the matter before the public. . . . It appears that the object of some who seek an election to the school-board is not only to 'raise the wind' whereby they may live in splendor and fare sumptuously the remaining years of their lives after they have become politically defunct, but also a desire to satisfy their carnal appetites, at the expense of the honor of some of the weak-minded engaged in teaching the female youth of the city. Does the public doubt that a school-commissioner or trustee can succeed in obtaining a mistress from among the many female teachers employed? If so, doubt no longer, because, unfortunately for truth and virtue, and for all the frail victims of their lust, they are too often successful! And for what consideration do these deluded creatures become the willing sacrifice to a scoundrel's beastliness? Ambition. Ay, elevation from the position of a virtuous subordinate to that of a crime-steeped principal. In the ward in which I reside, there exists at this time an exemplification of the truth of my assertions, and the fact is as notorious as that the commissioner, who holds a prominent position in one of the important committees of the board, required all who made application to be appointed teachers to submit themselves, not to an examination as to the capacity of the applicant, but to a personal inspection by his fair innamorata! If the applicant's personal appearance pleased this queen, she received an appointment; if not, the applicant was told that her examination had not proved satisfactory, and she could not be appointed. The remedies that have been resorted to periodically, to rid ourselves of present and to prevent future grievances, have proved abortive. . . . What answer can we make to this charge? The purity of our children is too sacred a trust to be trifled with in the minutest particular. We cannot submit for one moment to even a bare suspicion that the children are contaminated by the touch of lewd and lascivious preceptors supposed to be virtuous, or glared at with libidinous eyes by lechers in educational office,—the thought that innocent young girls instructed in these schools may be subject to these vile influences. What evil could not be effected by a depraved mistress of a commissioner,—a mistress in charge, as principal, of a female school? How speciously and skilfully she could distil the leprous poison into the ears of the eldest for the advantage of herself and her official paramour! We shudder as these thoughts find utterance" (see Spalding's Miscellanea, page 679).

Such documents as these, and many others could be adduced, prove the tendency of our public schools to demoralize both teachers and pupils. And they are sufficient of themselves to establish the statement of the Bishop. We take no pleasure in tearing the bandages from this ulcerous institution which is honey-combing and sapping the very vitals of a noble and naturally virtuous people; but when this Mookanna of American society is held up as the boast of our age and the glory of the republic, to touch which is treason; when millions of dollars are expended in support of it; when strenuous effort is made to perpetuate and make it compulsory; when it is beginning to be used as a huge and irresistible machine to crush out what little of positive religion remains to save society from social shipwreck,—it is time to tear away the mask and exhibit it to the gaze of a deceived and too confiding Christian people, in its naked and revolting deformity.

O Christian people of whatsoever creed, in the name of the Christian's God whom we all adore, pause and reflect on the consequences of your action! Your prejudices lead you to join with those who would expel all religion from the schools, because in doing so you oppose your Catholic fellow-citizens; but remember, when we are down, they will turn and rend you, and they will make of the school system a propaganda of infidelity or atheism, and obliterate revealed religion from the land. Instead of uniting with them under the vain delusion that you are using them and not they you, you should unite with all who believe in Christianity, and come to some compromise before it is too late.

THE CATHOLIC CONSCIENCE.

Mr. Abbot recognizes the importance of conscience, and says that the strength of the Catholic objection to the school system lies in the claim that the Catholic conscience is violated and oppressed by this system. This is not strictly correct. It is our individual sense of justice and equality before the law and the Constitution that is violated. The Catholic conscience, unlike that of the secularists, if they have any, is not aggressive. The Catholic conscience is not violated by the school system as such, nor by Protestant worship and instruction therein, nor by the negative atheism of the secularists, providing they are not compelled to pay for it. It is against the Catholic conscience to support Protestant worship, or pay for Protestant instruction, or to support schools from which God is formally and officially expelled. But, as the case stands at present, he is compelled to support either the one or the other of these kinds of schools, and it is this fact that constitutes the invasion and oppression of his conscience. From this invasion the Constitution pledges him immunity, and in the schools as they now exist, or would exist under pure secularism, this pledge is broken. It is against this instance of bad faith that the Catholic protests.

The Catholic conscience is the measure and expression of his reason, instructed in the law of God as interpreted by the Church. It is of no consequence, whether he gets it from the priests, bishops, or the Pope, providing he has adopted it of his own volition; it must be respected and protected as long as it does not infringe on the rights of others, or lead its possessor to violate the laws of the land. But "uninstructed and perverted consciences are altogether too common in this world." Mr. Abbot never said a truer thing than this, and, as an illustration of it, I quote from his own lecture delivered in Syracuse some time ago: "There is good in Christianity, but its fundamental idea—being founded on the will of Christ—is not consistent with liberty. It is enough to say to a Christian, 'It is the will of God, or of Christ,' to satisfy him of a duty. But this is not sufficient." This, I presume, is the kind of non-sectarianism Mr. Abbot would have taught in the schools.

[It is necessary to interpolate here the statement that the alleged quotation from our "lecture" is only an inaccurate newspaper report of an extempore speech. The pith of our argument was that Christianity rests on will, while Free Religion rests on reason—that the former finds its highest law in a supposed personal command of God or of Christ, while the latter finds its highest law in the impersonal obligations of natural morality. It was the substitution of mere will for natural reason and right, as the supreme authority in morals, that we declared to be inconsistent with liberty. By this statement we abide.—ED.]

WHAT THE CATHOLIC CONSCIENCE CLAIMS.

The Catholic conscience demands "Catholic education for Catholic children." This is the whole question in a nutshell. But of whom is this demanded? Not of the State. The Catholic does not demand education of the State; he would rather that the State would confine itself to its legitimate sphere—law-making and police duty,—and leave education of children to the parents, their natural and divinely appointed guardians. But if the State assumes the office of teacher and taxes him to support schools, the Catholic tax-payer claims to have some voice in deciding what kind of education is to be given,—particularly to his own children. This is what he claims, and he claims it not as a Catholic, but as a tax-payer and a citizen, and his claim is at least as good as the secularist's. If the State will not furnish education to suit us, we object to its furnishing, at our expense, an education that will suit the secularist.

"Whoever wants sectarian education is perfectly free to get it; but it must be at their own cost."

And I answer, whoever wants schools from which God is expelled is free to have them; but it must be at his own cost. To say, as Mr. Abbot does, that the State does not prevent Catholics educating their children at their own expense, is to defend the State against an attack that no one has made. The Catholic, being a citizen and a tax-payer, has the right to send his child to the State schools; in this right is the right that his child's religion be not tampered with. When he brings his child to the school, he finds two bars to its entrance,—Protestantism, in some form, or secularism. In this sense he is debarred from his rights and the benefits acquired by taxation, and punished for his faith. Thus indirectly, yet practically and as a matter of fact, his conscience is trampled on. And for not submitting uncomplainingly he is accused of having an unreasonable conscience.

"The State ought to furnish education, but not sectarianism."

By sectarianism Mr. Abbot means religion according to the ideas of the parent. And I ask, why not furnish this, if it could be done in a manner satisfactory to all? Is it wrong for the State to consult the will of its citizens? If a system could be found that would give satisfaction to all denominations as well as to the secularists, would it be wrong or unjust to any one for the State to adopt such a system? I fail to see it. The State in this matter of education is the agent of the people, and we find nothing inconsistent in its consulting, where it is possible, the interests and predilections of those it represents.

"The Catholic conscience demands equal rights. Very well; that it ought to have."

As a matter of fact the Catholic conscience does not demand equal rights. The Catholic demands equal rights as a citizen by virtue of the Constitution, and not by virtue of his conscience. This may seem a small matter, but bad logic often creeps in through inexact expressions. It is this false notion of conscience that misleads Mr. Abbot to say the Catholic conscience is unreasonable. But do Catholics have equal rights? We answer, they have not. Mr. Abbot admits our rights are invaded by Protestant worship and teaching in the State schools. We are taxed to support this worship and teaching. This is as great an injustice as to tax us to support an established Church. But if the schools are made purely secular, if all religion is carefully excluded therefrom? This does not lessen the difficulty, because under no circumstances can we in conscience support a system that formally and officially excludes God, the Master and Giver of life. The State compels us to do this, and thus it will be seen that we do not enjoy those equal rights guaranteed by the Constitution. But even if the purely secular system were tolerable, could Mr. Abbot guarantee us immunity from the opposite wrong? A little reflection will show him he cannot. While Protestants are in the majority, it will remain the same, and if Catholics are ever in the majority, which is not improbable, what is to prevent them imposing on the minority? Certainly nothing in the school system, which from its very nature is liable to this abuse. This is a radical defect of the system.

"Equal rights will be secured when Catholics have as much right to have their religion taught in the schools as Protestant Jew, or Radical,—that is, none at all."

In this hypothesis the Catholics, Protestants, and Jews will not have equal rights with the secularists. The secularists will have the schools to suit them at the expense of Christians and Jews. The latter have the same right to be consulted as the former. The secularist would consider it an oppression to be compelled to support schools that would meet my views, and I, as well, consider it oppressive to be taxed to support schools that he approves of. He will say I am unreasonable; but who is the judge of the reasonableness of it,—the secularist? I deny his jurisdiction and competency; and for want of an umpire I answer, Tu quoque.

"To whom shall the schools belong—to the Church or to the State? That is the clean issue. I do not see any way to reconcile here the two consciences."

I was not aware until now that that soulless corporation called the State had a conscience, but there is a way to reconcile them. The schools should belong to neither, or to both, as would be the case in the denominational system. The schools should belong preëminently to the parents; let the State manipulate the funds, if you will, but let the parents agree upon a system that will be just and satisfactory to all.

"To make the schools Protestant by requiring or permitting Protestant worship in them is truly a violation of all but Protestant consciences. But it is easy to rectify this wrong, and to establish a perfect equality of rights in the case, by simply secularizing the schools altogether."

This method of settling the question has the merit of simplicity. It is a short way of making their rights equal by ignoring all their claims, and heeding only the claims of the secularist. In this way the slave-holders in the South recognized the equal rights of the slaves by reducing them to zero. The vast majority of tax-payers in this country are Christians, yet it is coolly proposed to ignore their rights and predilections in favor of a party which is so contemptibly small as not to be able, when left to itself, to make a perceptible ripple on the surface politic.

"The Catholic conscience is not satisfied with equality,—it demands privileges."

It is the secularists who want the privilege of settling this school question according to their own notion, and in disregard of the consciences of others,—and carping at every one who has not independence enough to differ with them. They it is who, under false pretences, want the privileges of having their wishes alone consulted, and of looking upon religion as a tolerated nuisance in the schools; and this, as Mr. Abbot would express it, is an instance of unparalleled audacity.

"To pretend that this careful exclusion of all religious worship and instruction is to teach irreligion, is an instance of unparalleled audacity."

The careful exclusion, etc., is not to teach irreligion, but the careful exclusion is itself an act of unparalleled irreligion which no Christian can tolerate. It is a public, formal, and official insult to Almighty God, equal in kind, if not in degree, to the anti-Christian edicts of the Roman Emperors. To thrust religion out of the schools is certainly to teach the children that it is something very contemptible, if not very bad. To place religion on a level with immoral literature is certainly to leave an irreligious, if not an anti-Christian, impression. From the very nature of man, religion is the nearest thing to his heart; more have died for it than for any other cause; and yet it is proposed to insult the great body of tax-payers, through their children, by a public, formal, and official expulsion of religion from an institution supported at their expense!

"It is impossible to teach the multiplication table and the Catholic catechism at the same instant."

Well, this is coming down to first principles; but, seriously, did Mr. Abbot ever attribute such an idiotic idea to Catholics? If so, it is no wonder he thinks them unreasonable. Does he think by a religious school we mean one in which two branches are taught at the same instant? A religious school is one in which the will of God is recognized as the norm or rule of conduct; in which positive principles of morality are inculcated; into which a corrupt political school-commissioner cannot send his mistress to be supported at public expense; in which a person who would say that Abraham attempted to murder his own son, as Mr. Abbot did, would not be permitted to teach the A B C; from which a teacher who would say that "the will of Christ was not consistent with liberty," as Mr. Abbot did, would be expelled. Such is our idea of a Christian school,—not one in which mathematics and theology are taught at the same instant. The irreligion of secular schools consists not in not teaching religion, but in the formal exclusion of it. This once understood, it obviates the disagreeable necessity of selecting either of those formidable horns which Mr. Abbot took such care to construct for us.

Mr. Abbot makes a distinction between the citizen and the parent, and says that the claims of the Catholic's conscience rest on his claims as a parent. I have said the Catholic conscience has no claims in the case. The guarantees of the Constitution and the pledged faith of the government are the basis of the Catholic's claim, and the claim is not made as a parent, but as a citizen. It is not correct to say that "the Catholic conscience claims exemption from the public school-tax for Catholic parents as such." This is a false assumption, and Mr. Abbot draws many false conclusions from it. For instance, "It is the rights inherent in Catholic parentage which constitute the grounds of protest against taxation for the public schools." It is the sacred obligations which God has imposed on him as a parent that constitute the grounds of his protest, and it is the guarantees of the Constitution that constitute his claim.

Again: "The protest (of Catholics against the school-tax) is essentially a denial of the general obligation of citizenship in the name of church membership and family ties."

Do the obligations of citizenship imply a denial of church membership and family ties, or the denial of our obligations to God? Is the State all, and the individual, the family, and the Church nothing? Must they all be crushed beneath the ponderous machinery of the State? If so, it is time to know it,—time to consider whether we are tending.

"I must consider the astounding claim of Catholic parents to be treated as if they were not citizens at all, but to be excepted, set apart by themselves, and permitted to receive the benefits of the State without discharging the corresponding obligations."

The Catholic claim is that they should not be set apart and denied the rights enjoyed by others. They are willing to bear their share of the burdens of citizenship; but if by "benefits of the State" is meant secular education inspired by the principles announced by Mr. Abbot, they cannot accept them under any circumstances. Timeo Daneos et dona ferentes.

PARENTAL PREROGATIVE.

The Parental Prerogative is the authority which God has granted to the individual over his offspring. This authority arises from the obligations which God has imposed upon the parent, on the principle that every obligation supposes the means to fulfil it. St. Paul formulates it in these words: "Children, obey your parents in all things; for this is well pleasing to the Lord." This prerogative has of course no meaning for those who believe not in God, or for those who, like Mr. Abbot, hold that the will of God is not consistent with liberty.

[We never held or said that. The will of God as interpreted by the Catholic Church is certainly the destruction of liberty; but the will of God as interpreted by the individual conscience and reason is only another name for liberty.—ED.]

It has, however, a very definite meaning to the Christian, which he wishes his child to learn in the schools. It was not necessary for Mr. Abbot to exhaust his time in committing Catholics to the doctrine of the Parental Prerogative and its natural sequence, that the family is the unit of society. They hold these two doctrines, and accept the consequences that logically follow. There is no tribe, society, or nation in existence, savage or civilized, that does not recognize the Parental Prerogative. There is not a theological school in existence, Christian, Pagan, or heathen, that does not recognize it. There was never a state or condition of society, not even excepting Spartan paganism, that did not, in a greater or less degree, recognize the Parental Prerogative as the result of a natural or divine law. It may have been distorted, exaggerated, and carried to extremes, as it was in pagan Rome, but it never, in any State or age, ceased to be recognized as one of the cardinal principles of social order. It is recognized by our common and statute law, and by the decisions of our courts of law, as well as by every known code of laws. It is recognized by Mr. Abbot himself in another part of his lecture. He says: "The parent has a right to exercise authority over the child, his authority is that of the natural guardian of the child. The child's reason and conscience being undeveloped, the parent represents them during the child's minority. The parent also has the right to supervise and direct the education of the child to a very considerable extent." We have here, in Mr. Abbot's own words, a full admission of everything comprehended under the term "Parental Prerogative." [By no means.—ED.] This prerogative is not a concession of the State; it is a concession or grant from God, and is independent of, and above, the authority of the State, circumscribed and limited by the laws of God alone.

THE FAMILY IS THE SOCIAL UNIT.

That this fact is recognized in all antiquity is admitted by Sir Henry Maine, whom Mr. Abbot quotes. All God's dealings with men as recorded in the two Testaments are based on this truth. Both Christian and heathen nations have acted on the principle that the family is the unit of society. Our own government recognizes it. For instance, the law that a wife cannot sue or be sued during coverture; the law of inheritance whereby the children inherit the property of the father of the family recognize the family as the social unit. The individual is the political unit, that is, the recognized agent or actor in all political functions. Our government does not, however, recognize even this unity fully, since it does not permit all individuals to vote. The doctrine that the family is the unit of society is recognized as a Christian principle. The secularists are free to reject it, and we are equally free to hold it, and we are not to be frightened out of it by the bugbear of Patria Potestas.

STALKING-HORSE OF THE POPE.

Mr. Abbot tells us by inference that Catholics are not candid in their professions and claims of the Parental Prerogative. "The Church does not recognize any 'Parental Prerogative' at all as towards itself." We are not dealing with the Church; the Church as such asks nothing of the State. We have to deal with individual Catholic citizens in reference to their rights under the Constitution. This introduction of the Church as a party in the case only tends to throw dust in our eyes. If the Church is harsh and tyrannical with her members, or unreasonable in her demands, it is the business of those members. Looking on the Church as a divine institution, as the Catholic does, he is bound to respect her decisions, and obey her laws; and this obedience does not make us spiritual slaves, for the will of God is not inconsistent with liberty. Every society has the right to make its conditions of membership. The Church, as a society, makes certain conditions of membership. The individual is to judge whether the advantages arising from membership are an equivalent for the obligations incurred. But it is absurd to suppose he could trample on her laws, despise her authority, and still continue a member. Catholics generally prefer the teachings of the Church to the philosophizing of modern progressionists; and, forming his conscience on this teaching, that conscience must be respected and protected, or else the Constitution is a farce.

Mr. Abbot, after quoting from the Syllabus, adds some testimony of his own. It appears that he followed the Bishop to Cambridgeport and heard him read and comment on the Syllabus; but there was nothing new in what he said; he had spoken as pointedly, if not stronger, in Horticultural Hall. But, with his usual adroitness, Mr. Abbot makes his point by inference, that the Bishop had a double tongue, one for the enlightened audience at the Hall, and another for the ignorant and terrified Catholics at Cambridgeport.

The remainder of the lecture is devoted to a consideration of the rights of the child, the parent, and the State. Mr. Abbot's "State" is an ideal one, an abstraction, but a monster, nevertheless. We cannot accept his State as a common ground. We want the State in the concrete, such as it is in the republic, circumscribed and limited by constitutions. The State is the form of a people's political existence; when it becomes oppressive it is changed. Such is the lesson of history.

BUDDHA.

[FOR THE INDEX.]

THE INDIAN SAINT; or, Buddha and Buddhism. A Sketch, Historical and Critical. By Charles D. B. Mills.

Readers of the old Radical may remember some fine articles that appeared in its later numbers on "Pythagoras and the Eleatic Philosophers," those earliest Transcendentalists of Europe. One day we saw their author. It was in Syracuse, N. Y. A friend had taken us to see the throng of books in the great library of Andrew White, the President of Cornell; and then to a greenhouse, where, not among the flowers, but at the ledger in the counting-room, she introduced a clear-faced man as Mr. Mills. Was it because we had met him among the Eleatics that he looked so much the Transcendentalist? Perhaps so; but we suspect his eyes were windows to his soul, and that we saw it looking out. He left his bread-and-butter post, led the way home, and showed us his library. It was a little three or four-shelfed book-case, as we remember it, such as you pin up against the wall with two screws. And what we remember about it was the old volume of Spinoza—whose face he had had photographed from the coarse frontispiece, to hang upon the wall,—some talk about Giordano Bruno, but more distinctly the reverent, disciple's way in which he took down one precious volume, then another, and fondled them as one who was showing us the things which made the earth worth living on. In a distant way we have loved C. D. B. Mills ever since, and welcomed his long procession of initials wherever our eyes rested on it, in paper or on lecture-placard.

And here we have him in a book. Of course he would write a life of Buddha some day! Of course he would sometime wander far and long about the shores of that great ocean of Indian mysticism. This is the little map of his pilgrimage which he has brought back with him,—only a pocket map, quite the thing for any other pilgrim to con over before he puts his sandals on and begins to wade through the somewhat sandy big books that he must traverse, if he would reach the secrets of that shore himself. Through these books, Koepen for Tibetan Buddhism, Beale for Chinese Buddhism, Hardy for Cinghalese Buddhism, and St. Hilaire and Burnouf, Max Müller, Bishop Bigandet and Wassélew, and others yet, our lover of Spinoza and Pythagoras has gone, and because he carried the discipleship in heart and head, we can hardly help trusting him when he tells us what Nirvana means.

Discipleship—and yet he can criticize; he sees the weakness and the danger, as well as the strength and nobleness, of his "Indian saint," and that saint's system.

Five short chapters hold the story,—about a hundred and fifty pages are all you have to read; but you will be apt to glance them over twice. The first is the story of "The Life"; and one, Christian-bred, keeps thinking, all the way through, how the Idyl of Jesus' birth pales before the glow of myth and miracle that halos his Indian and elder brother's advent. Here is a preexistence of innumerable births and lives, in virtue of which the final Buddha, "the Awakened One," must needs have sympathy with all creatures, having been tried in all points like as they, and thus been fitted to become the great Redeemer of all sentient races. Here is a miraculous conception, whose marvel to the Gospel marvel is what the rose-bush in June is to the ashy-budded willow yonder on this March Sunday. Here is another young man "about thirty years of age" leaving home for the wilderness; fighting there triumphantly gigantic Satans of temptation; attaining the beatific vision in a rapture that all Nature shared,—the ocean by becoming fresh, the flower-trees in all the worlds by bursting into blossom, the blind from birth by seeing! But this, we judge, is "Oriental." The more prosy and possible facts of his self-denying but successful career are followed through to the day when he bade his disciples good-by, and told them, "By the doctrine I have taught you I will continue to abide with you."

The next chapter, "The Effect," shows how truly he had spoken. Three hundred years pass by, and his name had been borne by ardent missionaries to all the Indies and beyond the Himalayas. Three hundred more and it was well-established. Six hundred more and it may perhaps be called the prevailing religion of Central, and Eastern, and Southern Asia. Then came the Mohammedan persecution from the West, and, stranger, somewhere about the year 1000 of our era a great revival of the old Brahmic faith in India itself, so strong, so desperate and all-extirpating, that Buddhism was uproot, root and branch, from its native soil, and, like Christianity, triumphant elsewhere, from its own home is to this day an exile. Though Buddhists number one-third the population of the globe, not one, it is said, is to be found to-day on the Hindu peninsula. And where the Buddha's teaching came, it taught equality, taught tolerance, humanity, and charity, and gentleness, and humility, and self-sacrifice. Christianity is the second great religion that has thrown its stress of emphasis upon this side of character; and as the European nations under it, so the Asian peoples under Buddhism, have tended towards kindness through all their culture.

With moralities so similar—the chapter on "Sentences of Scripture" attests abundantly this general similarity,—why is it, then, that Christianity seems to carry with it a breath of energetic life, an impulse of progress, that Buddhism has not? The answer lies deep in questions of race and climate, more than in the question of doctrine; but so far as it lies in the latter, Mr. Mills' remaining chapters called "The Man and the Thought," and "The Doctrine," give hint of it. It is the difference between the inward and the outward look at the universe; between the method of salvation by self-renunciation and the method of salvation by conquest of circumstances. Each look and method has its danger. The danger for the Eastern mind is absorption, for the Western is idolatry. Carlyle somewhere gives the rule, Do not increase your numerator, but lessen your denominator, would you have true life. The core of Buddhism might be put into some such formula as $\frac{1}{2} = \infty$. Reduce your denominator, "that which shows into how many parts you are divided," i. e., your desires, to nothing, and you have achieved infinity. There is pain and sorrow in the world; its source lies in our desires; its cessation therefore lies in the cessation of desire; and there is a "way" to compass this beatitude, and reach the "bright rest, Nirvana": there is the Buddhist's scheme of things. "Nirvana" is not annihilation, but the self-less existence, and therefore existence so much the more real because no longer cut across by births and deaths of personality.

That "way" to the height is summed up in the sacred sentence oft-recurring in his Scripture, "To abstain from all sin" (here he might cite the five great Not-commandments—not kill, not steal, not commit adultery, not speak untruth, not drink intoxicating drink); "to practise constantly all virtue" (here the six great moralities, charity, purity, patience, courage, contemplation, knowledge); "to hold perfect mastery of thyself" (and eight paths to such self-mastery were reckoned, the path of right views, of right words, right ends, right methods, and so on); "to abstain from all sin, to practise constantly all virtue, to hold perfect mastery of thyself,—this was the injunction of the Buddha."

Room enough here for all one will of ethics or of metaphysics! And the room is all engaged and occupied by these Asian thinkers. No ism, great or little, of Western philosophy but has probably been anticipated in the East,—say they who know the thought of both the continents. No system, materialistic, nihilistic, spiritualistic, but has been established and confuted, reestablished and reconfuted, there. Think of a half-ton Bible! The Tibetan canon in the Peking edition weighs a good deal more than that. The canon of the Chinese Buddhists is seven hundred times as large as our two Testaments, we are told. "It is to be hoped that the substance of these may be given in an English dress." Y-e-s,—but in some very homœopathic, quintessential way, we beg!

"Probably the most purely unselfish system of morality ever offered to the world," thinks Mr. Mill; and contrasts it, to its favor, with the Jesus-promises of heaven and hell with which the Christian morality was preached. We are not so sure. The Westerners, the Christians, have shown themselves more "vigorous and rigorous" in both directions, we should say—for good, for bad; more practical in their enthusiasms of humanity as well as in their enthusiasms of inhumanity. And as to the system viewed as theory, every noble system of ethics proclaims, must needs proclaim, reward and retribution in some fashion; and it makes not the difference between selfishness and unselfishness whether you say Heaven and Hell and a certain Day and a personal Judge, or preach it like the Buddha as a Karma doctrine (Karma being the moral law conceived as carrying its own sanctions, blessings, penalties, inherently, inevitably,—"the power that makes for righteousness" through men and in them). Nirvana far transcends the localities of Hebrew fancy, but no less is it beatitude which is set forth to draw men on and upward; and it is as selfish to be self-less for self-gratification as to aim for the seat on the right hand of the throne.

These last words suggest the impression which Buddhism as a whole makes on a Western mind. It is massy, not individualized. Being is recognized, not concentrated to person; power, not God; Karma, not law-giver; evolution, not creation; Nirvana, not heaven; selflessness, not immortality; the race more than the present generation; and, in general, things measured by the scale of eternity rather than by the scale of time. The inner meanings are the same, are they not? The difference lies in the mind that needs much form, and the mind that needs little, to realize its conceptions. But that difference practically leads to most divergent civilizations. In a closing chapter, called "The Fine Problem," Mr. Mills would fain hint how these two tendencies, the Eastern and the Western, should find true reconciliation.

But in the West, also, we have the Transcendentalists who put little "form" to their ideas; and in the East, as everywhere, in contrast with their thinkers the people use much of it; so that for these the Buddhist pantheon practically lacks no kind of demon or of deity, no sort of hell or heaven has been forgotten; and "the Indian saint" himself, idealized, is lifted up through Buddhist lands as the great self-sacrificing God who thereby draws all men to himself.

Mr. Mills' book is for sale at the office of THE INDEX, 1 Tremont Place, Boston, and at the Unitarian Association Rooms, No. 7, a little farther down the court. Its price is $1.50. Possibly, too, it might be bought at the Orthodox Congregational Book-store just round the corner. We wish that the Free Religious Association, whose desk is also not far off, would carry out a plan which Mr. Mills has approached, rather than begun, in this little venture; we wish it would publish a series of, say, two-hundred-page accounts of the great ethnic religions—careful and vivid sketches, larger than the essays offered in the magazines, smaller than the solid volumes which the student needs,—a series of popular but trustworthy dollar-books corresponding in its way to the International Scientific Series published by the Appletons. Is the interest in the subject ripe enough to warrant the undertaking? W. C. G.

THE TAXATION OF CHURCHES.

The question of the justice and expediency of taxing churches in this Commonwealth has not yet received the careful and statesmanlike consideration which the great importance of the subject demands, although the plan of such taxation has been urged with much pertinacity by the advocates of a radical change in the usage of the State in this matter. The subject was, indeed, incidentally discussed before a committee of the legislature of 1874, appointed to consider the propriety of discontinuing the exemption of charitable, literary, and religious institutions, at a number of largely-attended hearings; and pursuant to a resolution of that legislature a commission was appointed "to inquire into the expediency of revising and amending the laws relating to taxation and exemption therefrom," whose voluminous report was printed in January, 1875.

The commissioners state, however in their report that the obligation to report in full, in print, to the General Court, made the time intervening "altogether too limited for so large and difficult an undertaking"; and it is certainly unfortunate that this limitation of time should have been imposed on a commission who had to deal with a subject of the first importance. To the pressure of work which this limitation brought on the commissioners may be due the fact, that, while several "valuable discussions by gentlemen who have given special attention to the respective topics of which they treat" were "prepared at the request" of the commission, and are printed in an appendix, including an argument from Mr. F. E. Abbot in favor of taxing churches, the only discussion of the arguments against such taxation is contained, incidentally, as it were, in President Eliot's unanswerable argument in favor of exemption, the chief portion of which is a demonstration of the suicidal folly which there would be in taxing the higher institutions of learning. The report of the majority of the commission did, indeed, strongly state the importance of continuing to exempt the churches of the Commonwealth, but it is, nevertheless, to be regretted that no opportunity seems to have been given to some expert to discuss this whole branch of the subject in a separate paper. To this may perhaps be due in part the fact that, while the question of taxing hospitals and colleges is allowed to sleep for the present, petitions were presented to the present legislature for "the taxation of church property," thus bringing this fragment of the whole question to a separate issue.

A joint special committee of the Senate and House, to whom the petitions were referred, has had three hearings upon the subject, and has reported a bill (now before the House) in favor of taxing all church property above the value of $12,000. Here again, however, no opportunity has been given for a fair and thorough treatment of this important subject. The "religious public" had undoubtedly supposed that the strong statement in the commissioners' report adversely to such taxation settled the question for a time at least, and was not looking for further hearings,—the notice of which appeared only in the usual inconspicuous place in the Boston daily papers. Two hearings were given to the petitioners in favor of taxation, while "those who had anything to say against it, if there was anything to say"—to use the words of the chairman of the committee,—had only a part of a single hearing, and were only represented by three or four gentlemen who had happened to see the notice at the last moment. If the churches are regarded merely as stewards of a property which at the assessors' valuation would be upward of thirty millions of dollars, it seems that so important a financial interest should have had larger opportunities than this to state its case.

The bill now before the House, which limits the exemption to property of the value of $12,000, will be liable to the same objection with the recommendation to a similar effect, but for a larger amount, of Mr. Thomas Hills of the commission of 1874,—that it is neither one thing nor the other. It cannot satisfy the demands of those who claim that churches should be taxed "on conscientious grounds"; for, as the president of the Boston Liberal League states, "a point of conscience is most certainly involved in the exemption of a fixed minimum of church property as much as in the present state of things." On the other hand, to those who hold that churches should be exempt from taxation, such a bill must seem to apply the principle of sumptuary legislation in a peculiarly oppressive form. For sumptuary legislation is usually directed to check future expenditure in what are deemed excessive ways; but this bill would operate retrospectively on all church property over the minimum which it fixes, as an annual fine for expenditure in the past. It is evident that such a temporizing measure has in it none of the principles of essential justice, and would be only a temporary step. If it is just to tax the churches, any exemption is unjust; if it is just to exempt at all, why fix the arbitrary and totally inadequate limit of $12,000?

It is impracticable to fix any absolute and unvarying limit at a fixed sum, and to decree that churches shall be taxed on the excess of their valuation over that sum, for several reasons. The idea which lies at the root of such a plan is, of course, that it is possible to fix an invariable amount for which all the proper functions of a church can be accomplished. It is supposed that, this being done, all excess over that expenditure is a wasteful use of money, and should be restrained by taxation. But how shall the precise amount which is necessary be ascertained? It is obvious that what is ample to provide suitable accommodation in a small town in Berkshire or Hampden County will not begin to provide an equivalent in the heart of Boston. $12,000 may suffice for a lot of land and a wooden building in the former case, while in the latter the assessors' valuation on the land alone which the city church covers may amount to ten or twenty times that sum. The laws of the city then require the building to be put up to be of brick or stone, so that it is safe to say that an equivalent in some parts of the city for the accommodation which the village church obtains for $12,000, cannot be obtained even in the simplest form for less than twenty to thirty times that sum. The only approach to justice in such an estimate would be by means of a "sliding scale," which should proportion the exemption in a fixed ratio to the total valuation of real estate and buildings in such locality; but this would obviously be so complicated as to be wholly impracticable.

Besides, if it is seriously proposed to indulge in sumptuary legislation against "expensive churches," the question of the relation of their cost to their uses requires very dispassionate investigation. The wooden village church, which costs $12,000, and holds three hundred worshippers of the sober, moral New England stock once a week, may discharge, proportionately to its cost, a less service to the community, in the extent of its moral and religious influences, than the cathedral which holds five thousand, where from two to five services are held every day in the week for different congregations who get little morality elsewhere.

The appliances which are needless in the former case for the proper administration of religion in the eyes of the worshippers, may be needful in the latter. The ritual of Rome demands more outlay than the ritual of the Quaker; and yet unless we are prepared to say that the religion of Rome makes men worse citizens than no religion at all, the State would be unwise to throw difficulties in the way of its fit administration to those who are influenced by it as they can be by nothing else.

The reasons for the total exemption of churches, as well as colleges, on grounds of public policy, have been stated by President Eliot of Harvard College in the argument to which we have referred, which has been before the public for more than a year without, we believe, even any attempt to reply to it. We have given elsewhere such extracts from this as space would allow, and would urge our readers to ponder them well. The change proposed is one which would deal a heavier blow at the cause of good morals in Massachusetts than any legislation ever yet devised here. If adopted, the measure will be one of the most painful illustrations of the evil of undue and partial law-making. To pull down is easy, but to build up is very hard; and after one generation has done what it can to discourage public and religious spirit in the citizens of Massachusetts, the next generation may labor in vain to repair the moral and spiritual loss.—Boston Advertiser, March 30.

THE INJUSTICE OF DISCONTINUING CHURCH EXEMPTION.

The proper adjustment of the burdens of taxation so that they shall fall justly on every member of the Commonwealth is, perhaps, the most difficult and delicate function of the legislature. That it is so is sufficiently proved by the fact that great irregularities and injustices still unquestionably remain in our system of taxation, notwithstanding they have been often pointed out by those who feel the need of some remedy. The thoughtful paper by Mr. William Endicott, Jr., printed in the appendix to the Report of the Tax Commissioners, to which we alluded yesterday, indicates very forcibly some of the most glaring of these imperfections in our present methods. But it is doubtful whether even these can be well remedied by piecemeal legislation; and it is certain that the wider and deeper question, whether the exemptions accorded by the State need any revision, can never be properly answered by bits and corners. The only scientific method of determining the expediency of any such revision would be by referring the whole subject to real experts, giving them time enough to elaborate a rounded and symmetrical scheme of taxation.

It is one among the many objections to the bill now before the legislature, that it thus nibbles at the edges of this comprehensive subject. Without any report stating the reasons for their recommendation, after few and scanty hearings, a committee recommends a law which, if enacted, would change the unbroken usage of the State from its earliest history, and (even if the amount exempted by it should be considerably enlarged) would lay a crushing burden on many of the churches in the Commonwealth. We have already pointed out some of the objections to discontinuing the total exemption. Churches, colleges and hospitals stand on the same ground in this matter, having been originally freed from taxation in return for their higher services to the State, and still relieving the State of that part of the public burden. There would be, however a peculiar wrong accomplished by the taxation of church property, when the property is thus singled out from its companions in the moral and charitable service of the Commonwealth, from the fact that church property is even more inconvertible into other forms than that of hospitals or colleges. If worst came to worst, the latter could fairly turn themselves over to the public; but the State having prohibited churches from ever being alienated to any other than religious uses, on the one hand, has, on the other, so cut itself loose from the idea of a connection of Church and State, that it could not take the churches if they were offered to it, and would not know what to do with them if it did.

The fact is, that as far as concerns the $30,000,000 of such property (according to the assessors' estimate) now held in Massachusetts, taxation in any form would be essentially unjust. And for the reason that every church standing to-day within the limits of the Commonwealth was built on the implied pledge of the State that the unvarying precedent would be followed, and that the building would be free from taxation so long as used for the worship of God. Great sums have been alienated by their owners and put into buildings for religious worship, which are wholly different in cost and character from what they would have been made if it had been thought possible that they would be taxed for large amounts annually. They were put there on faith in the implied pledge of the State, and if that pledge is broken, a large part of the pecuniary value of existing churches would thereby be cancelled. To keep them and pay the taxes would, for many societies, be impossible; to sell them and realize even a fraction of what they cost would be equally impossible, since they are unsuitable for any but religious purposes, and no one would hereafter be able to buy them for those purposes, subject as they would henceforward be, to a heavy impost. If a man has a house or a store which he cannot afford to keep, he sells it and gets as much as another similar house or store in the neighborhood would bring; but a society could not sell its house of worship for as much as a house or store of the same valuation would bring, for this non-exemptive legislation would cause this whole class of property to depreciate to comparatively nominal values.

The church property now existing here has been locked up from the donors for its public and sacred uses, on the faith that the public policy of the Commonwealth would be in conformity with those words of the bill of rights which recognize that "the public worship of God, and instructions in piety, religion, and morality promote the happiness and prosperity of a people, and the security of a republican government." Any law changing the uniform policy of the State would as effectually destroy a large proportion of the existing church property as a law appropriating one-half of the churches in the State as town-halls.

If, indeed, it were necessary to have any sumptuary legislation on the subject of expensive churches, that legislation should in justice be wholly prospective and not retrospective in its action. It should undertake to restrain men from hurtful expenditures in time to come; it should not undertake to punish them for what they have believed to be proper expenditures in the time past. If the great danger of the community is from costly and beautiful churches, warn men that they will hereafter build them only under penalty of a heavy tax; but do not fine them with that tax now for having formerly built them, as they supposed, under the encouragement of the Commonwealth.—Boston Advertiser, March 31.

A YOUNG lawyer from Virginia took occasion a few days since to air his eloquence and his views before the United States Supreme Court at Washington. It was a case in which the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad was a party. The young pleader remarked: "If it please your honors, this is a most important case. Grand, because it is great; intricate, because it is complicated; far-reaching, because there is much of it; and astonishing, because of its marvellous revelations. My clients, your honors, have been most grievously wronged, and if so, and such be the case, Virginia, the great State of Virginia, the mother of Presidents and the father of all loveliness, will be the recipient of gross injustice. Can we submit to it as honorable men, as public-spirited citizens, as God-fearing members of the human race? Your honors, I ask you candidly, can we submit to it?" Before the orator could reel off any more of this sort of thing, Chief-Justice Waite, after metaphorically taking his eye in his hand and throwing it at the orator, interrupted him in the most quiet and good-humored way imaginable, and said, "The gentleman must remember that we are here to listen to constitutional argument, and not for the purpose of having the counsel appeal to the bones of our forefathers, or build monuments with rhetoric."—Harper's Weekly, Jan. 22.

CASH RECEIPTS.

FOR THE WEEK ENDING APRIL 1.

E. C. Stanton, $3.20; Geo. Johnson, $3.20; T. M. Johnson, $2; G. P. Delaplaine, $4.50; Jas. Boyd, $5.55; J. Nelson, $6.70; S. L. Shaw, $3.20; B. P. Elliott, $1.10; Mrs. G. C. Francis, $4.20; J. S. Hoopes, $3; C. W. Estabrook, $1.60; Susan A. Tyrrell, $3.20; Henry Wellington, $5; I. W. Springfield, $3; W. C. Macdonald, $1.60; Cash, 60 cents; E. C. Ferris, 10 cents; W. H. Allen, 25 cents; T. B. Skinner, 25 cents; E. B. Clement, 25 cents; A. R. Cooper, 10 cents; L. A. Lambert, $1; J. J. Dooley, $1.50; J. S. Shaller, $3.20; Henry N. Stone, $20; H. F. Badger, $3; Zina Eager, $3.20; M. T. Palmer, $3.20; D. Giddings, $3.20; F. F. Merrill, $3.20; M. Bentley, $1.70; J. B. Chesney, $4.45; J. E. Jones, $3.20; J. H. Collins, 85 cents; S. M. Whistler, 25 cents; F. J. Bamford, 25 cents; J. De Normandie, $3.25; Louis Ash, $3.20; Wm. Allen, $3.20; H. Barnstead, 10 cents; E. B. Welch, $3.20.

All receipts of cash will be acknowledged as above, and no other receipt sent unless specially requested. Persons who do not see their remittances acknowledged within three weeks after sending, will please notify us.

N. B.—Please remit by post-office money-order, by registered letter, or by draft on Boston or New York. Checks on interior banks are liable to discount, and the term of subscription will be proportionally shortened in the credit.

N. B.—Orders for Tracts or single numbers of THE INDEX which are not on hand will, if of small amount, be otherwise filled to the same amount without further notice.

The Index.

BOSTON, APRIL 6, 1876.

THE INDEX is published every Thursday by the INDEX ASSOCIATION, at No. 1, TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON. TOLEDO Office, No. 35 Monroe Street: J. T. FREY, Agent and Clerk. All letters should be addressed to the Boston Office.

N. B.—No contributor to THE INDEX, editorial or otherwise, is responsible for anything published in its columns except for his or her own individual statements. Editorial contributions will in every case be distinguished by the name or initials of the writer.

TO VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTORS.—Only Short Articles desired. Unused Manuscripts not returned.

FRANCIS ELLINGWOOD ARBOT, Editor.
OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHINGHAM, WILLIAM J. POTTER,
WILLIAM H. SPENCER, MRS. E. D. CHENEY, Rev. CHARLES
VOYSEY (England), GEORGE JACOB HOLYOAKE (England),
DAVID H. CLARK, Editorial Contributors.

CENTENNIAL CONGRESS OF LIBERALS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

Mar. 10.	Received of F. A. Angell, New York.....	$5.00
" 13.	" M. Einstein, Titusville, Pa.....	2.00
" 13.	" W. Barnsdall, ".....	2.00
" 13.	" E. Whitcher, Boston.....	6.00
" 13.	" J. Davidson, Alfred Centre, N.Y.....	1.00
" 21.	" Jas. Dillaway, Somerville, Mass.....	2.00
" 21.	" M. L. Hawley, Marathon, N.Y.....	3.00
" 21.	" R. H. Ranney, Boston.....	6.00
" 21.	" F. E. Abbot, Boston.....	25.00
" 21.	" C. A. Gurley, Pulaski, N. Y.....	50.00
" 25.	" Emily J. Leonard, Meriden, Ct.....	5.00
" 25.	" S. R. Urbino, W. Newton, Mass.....	5.00
" 25.	" John Hlat, Winchester, Ind.....	5.00
" 25.	" A. Friend.....	1.00
" 25.	" C. H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
" 25.	" Edw. Wigglesworth, Jr., Boston.....	15.00
April 1.	" T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	3.00
" 1.	" Israel Betz, Oakville, Pa.....	5.00
" 1.	" Mrs. M. P. Southworth, Cleveland, O.....	5.00
" 1.	" S. Warbasse, La Fayette, N.J.....	2.00
" 3.	" A. Friend in New York City.....	50.00
" 3.	" Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00
" 3.	" R. B. Stone, Forrest, Miss.....	5.00
		$224.50

DAMON Y. KILGORE, Acting Treasurer.

605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

PAINE BUST SUBSCRIPTIONS.

CASH RECEIPTS.

F. A. Angell, New York.....	$1.00
Ebenezer Haskell, Philadelphia.....	1.00
Friends in Boston.....	40.00
Carl H. Horsch, Dover, N.H.....	2.50
T. W. Higginson, Newport, R.I.....	2.00
A. Schelling, Philadelphia.....	1.00
A Friend.....	.50
W. H. Spencer, Sparta, Wis.....	10.00
E. M. Harris, Baltimore.....	1.00
R. M. J. Vall, Port Jervis, N.Y.....	1.00
Sauk City (Wis.) Liberal League.....	20.00

CARRIE BURNHAM KILGORE, Ch. Com. Phil. L. L.
605 Walnut St., Philadelphia.

IT IS SAID that Mr. Richard H. Dana, who is an Episcopalian, argued some two hours against the appointment of Mr. John Fiske to a professorship at Harvard College, on the ground that his religious views were unsound and heretical.

THE MIRACULOUS "shower of flesh" in Kentucky is explained by Professor J. L. Smith, of Louisville, as the "dried spawn of the batrachian reptiles, doubtless that of the frog, transported from the ponds and swamp ground by currents of wind."

LAST AUTUMN we were surprised by an invitation from Mr. John Morley, editor of the London Fortnightly Review, to rewrite for his pages an article on "The Catholic Peril" which was published in THE INDEX of September 2, 1875. The great pressure of regular duties made us hesitate to accept this invitation; but the opportunity of bringing INDEX ideas before a large and wholly different audience proved too strong a temptation. This article is contained in the Fortnightly for March, and embraces some new matter, especially statistical information respecting the marvellous growth of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States. Notwithstanding the absence of international copyright laws, regard for the obligations of honor in such a case will prevent us from republishing this article without Mr. Morley's express permission; and we must therefore be content with informing our readers of its existence, and hoping that some of them will order copies of this number of the Fortnightly through Henry Holt & Co., of New York city. The price is one dollar. It is needless to say that the Fortnightly Review is the leading liberal publication of England; but it may not be amiss to state that this number contains an extremely valuable review of "M. Taine's New Work" on the French Revolution by Mr. Morley, an able analysis of "The Disestablishment Movement" by Mr. R. W. Dale, and other papers of great interest.

THE VESTED RIGHTS OF INJUSTICE.

Since our last issue, the bill before the Massachusetts Legislature to amend the General Statutes so that "houses of religious worship shall be exempted from taxation only to the amount of $12,000" has been rejected by a vote of 116 to 64. The major portion of both morning and afternoon sessions on Friday, March 31, was devoted by the House of Representatives to the consideration of this bill. Mr. Churchill, of Boston, and Mr. Merritt, of Springfield, spoke in favor of the bill, while all the other speakers, we understand, more or less strongly opposed it; in fact, the opponents of the measure exerted themselves to the utmost, while the advocates of it seemed reluctant to come forward in its open defence. This may have been partly due to the fact that the bill, being a compromise which sacrificed the very principle at stake (i. e., that it is unjust to tax indirectly the whole people to propagate the religious creed of only a part of the people), was little calculated to excite enthusiasm in its supporters; but the frequent intimation that all the favorers of the bill were "infidels" probably daunted many who would otherwise have made themselves heard on the right side. Even as it was, so evident is the wrong involved in the practice of exemption that more than a third of the House cast their votes in the affirmative. Mr. Churchill is entitled to especial credit for advocating the bill on the ground that it proposed a step in the direction of separating Church and State more thoroughly, adding that he hoped to see all religious instruction and worship discontinued in the public schools on the same ground. This was bold and manly, and will win for him the hearty commendation of all friends of purely secular government. He argued with cogency that members had no right to cast the imputation that those who favored the bill were "infidels." It only required an impartial regard for equal rights to suggest such a course to them.

Two articles published just before this action of the Legislature in the Boston Daily Advertiser will be found on a previous page. The first requires no particular notice here; but the second, that on "The Injustice of Discontinuing Church Exemption," is a pretty good illustration of the desperate logical expedients to which the opponents of church taxation are driven in this controversy.

The writer contends that churches are as much entitled to State aid as hospitals and colleges, on the plea of their "relieving the State" of duties which otherwise the State would have to discharge. Now hospitals are established to provide for the care of the sick who cannot be provided for by their own friends, which is truly a public duty; and colleges are established to promote the interests of education, which is another public duty. But for what are churches established? To instruct the people in "mere morality," and thereby simply to make them good citizens? Not at all. The churches themselves are busy enough in deriding "mere morality" as sufficient for salvation. They are emphatic in declaring that religion has a far higher function than that of making mankind "moral"; namely, to fit them for citizenship in the "kingdom of heaven" in a life to come. They themselves profess to be established to teach the "gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ," and treat "mere morality" in this world as a consideration quite secondary to the salvation of souls in another world. They all have the "fundamental truths of Christianity" to teach, each according to its own particular creed; they all propound their own theological doctrines as constituting those "fundamental truths of Christianity" which it is their special mission to inculcate. Instruction in the "mere morality" which alone is sufficient for good citizenship, and which they concede may be possessed even by "infidels" and "atheists," is purely an incidental part of their work, and not the essence of it; they do indeed claim to exert a "good moral influence," and thus to be useful to society here on earth, but they are strenuous in disclaiming this as the chief object of Christianity. The "good moral influence" thus incidentally exerted they themselves declare to be inseparable from, and wholly dependent upon, the religious creeds and forms of faith which are the main burden of their pulpit instruction; and they vehemently assert the supreme importance of these other things as the very essence of the gospel. Now the teaching of the Christian gospel, construed as the churches themselves construe it, is no part of the State's duty to its citizens, nor is it claimed to be, even by those who justify church exemption from taxation. It is the special duty of the churches, and not at all of the State; and if it should be unfulfilled, the State would not be called upon to fulfil it. Unlike colleges or hospitals, the churches do not "relieve the State" of a duty in this respect. If they do, then not only is church exemption right, but the State ought to support the churches, as in old times, by direct and universal taxation. The churches do not do what, if they did not exist, the State would be obliged to do for itself; and they cannot without utter absurdity claim to be excused from taxation on this score. The argument is sophistical, false, and insincere; it cannot be believed by those who urge it. The churches which, facing one way, declare to their own members that instruction in "mere morality" is only an incident, and not the essence, of their work—and which, facing the other way, declare to the State that they ought to be exempt from taxation because they are only doing the State's work, as if they did nothing but teach "mere morality,"—are playing a thoroughly Jesuitical game which entitles them to the profound disrespect of all who have the least regard for common honesty. They seek to escape their just share of the public burdens, not to be able to teach "mere morality," but to be able to teach religious creeds which, by their own confession, are only hindered by it. All that the State wants is "mere morality"; what they themselves want is anything but that. And when they, or their apologists and claqueurs, demand that the public shall pay part of their bills on the plea that they are doing the State's work, suppressing the fact that they devote their chief energies to doing a work which is not the State's work in any sense, they are guilty of a species of immorality which could only be fittingly characterized by terms we do not choose to employ.

The Advertiser, however, not content with putting forward this more than questionable argument, in order to block the way of public reform, resorts to another still more extraordinary. It declares that church "taxation in any form would be essentially unjust," because the practice of exempting churches hitherto constitutes an "implied pledge" that they should be exempted forever, and because $30,000,000 in Massachusetts have been invested in churches on the faith of this pledge which would never have been so invested without it. In plain words, because the churches have grown rich by robbing the public, it would be a blazing sin ever to put a stop to the robbery! On this principle, President Lincoln's Proclamation of Emancipation was a deed of shame that cries to heaven for vengeance. Had not the slave-holders always been permitted to invest their money in negroes? Did not this fact constitute an "implied pledge" that they always should be permitted to do so? Were there not thousands of millions of dollars, instead of a paltry $30,000,000, thus invested? Was not the Emancipation Proclamation a total annihilation of all this vast property, an abominable violation of the vested rights of the slave-owners? What was the nation about, to send up a shout of irrepressible joy at the perpetration of this monstrous iniquity—the violation of the "implied pledge" that the negro's neck should be eternally under the heel of his master? If the Advertiser can prove that this analogy is not a true one, we shall be much gratified by the demonstration.

The fact is that the churches have accumulated vast wealth, not only by evading taxation and thus appropriating to their own uses a part of the money of all who paid taxes, but also by confiscating the rewards of the general industry through the rise in value of all real estate; and this process, continued for hundreds of years, has been from first to last a great but ill-understood oppression of the whole community. Now the community is discovering the enormity of this oppression; now it is awakening to the truth that this systematic spoliation ought to stop, and stop immediately. No demand for the restitution of all this stolen property is made; it is only proposed that the stealing shall cease. Granted that the perpetrators of the theft have been ignorant that it is a theft; we would by no means imply the contrary. But their ignorance does not make the money theirs, or destroy the right of the true owners to it. In consideration of their mutual ignorance, the owners (that is, the public) waive the right to restitution, and only begin to ask that the hitherto innocent robbery be promptly discontinued. If this moderate and just demand is not complied with, the innocence will disappear, while the robbery will remain. That evil should acquire a right to exist by mere continuance, is a proposition too monstrous to be seriously entertained; that oppression should plead either legal or moral claims to perpetuity, is contrary to every principle of good morals; that it is unjust to stop injustice, is a declaration too ridiculous to be listened to. The absolute, short, decisive reply is that injustice can have no vested rights. Instant extermination is its only possible right.

Look at the plain fact. It is unjust, by universally established laws, that any man should be compelled to pay taxes to any religious society of which he is not a member. But church exemption compels the tax-payers as a body to pay the taxes that should be paid by the religious societies themselves; and every man, therefore, must pay his share. That is, the religious societies compel every man in the community to pay taxes to themselves, by compelling him to pay the tax bills they themselves ought to pay. Let the Advertiser get round, or over, or under this fact, if it can. There is the patent, undeniable injustice; and the Advertiser argues that, because it has always existed, therefore it ought always to exist! There never was, or could be, any "implied pledge" of such a nature; to hint such a thing is the device of desperation at its wits' end. Injustice has no vested rights; and it will avail nothing for the unjust to invent them.

Gentlemen of the Massachusetts Legislature, you have voted justice down; but justice is stronger than you are, and will yet constrain you to do her own eternal will—not yours!

CURRENT EVENTS.

BY R. C.

Republican Conventions for the election of delegates to the Cincinnati Convention were held last week in Vermont, Pennsylvania, and Ohio. The Vermonters adopted a hard-money platform, and sent an unpledged delegation to Cincinnati. The Pennsylvanians instructed their delegates to present Governor Hartranft's name for the Presidency, and, perhaps, intend to be understood as in favor of hard-money when they "arraign the Democratic leaders in Congress and their abettors for the combined recklessness and cowardice of their course on financial questions,—a recklessness which mischievously holds out a threat to overthrow the existing laws, and a cowardice or incapacity to originate a substitute for them." On the subject of the tariff, they declare that "the attempt of the Democratic House of Representatives at Washington to inflict upon the nation a free-trade tariff is an insult to the intelligence of the people," and that "the remedy for our suffering is in a higher not lower tariff,"—two pretentious and shallow assertions which could hardly have been adopted outside of the State which recognizes Henry C. Carey as a great political economist. The delegates were instructed to vote as a unit upon all questions, "as the majority of the delegation shall direct." The Ohio Republicans declared themselves in favor of hard-money, and of Hayes for President. As regards the tariff, their platform reads, "We favor a tariff for revenue with incidental protection to American industry,"—as profound a declaration as would be one in favor of hard-money with "incidental" shipplasters for necessary purposes. The only commendation of General Grant (and that a mild one) was in the Ohio platform. All the Conventions pronounced in favor of free schools, and against any division of the school fund for sectarian purposes.

The testimony of Mr. Schenck before the Emma Mine Committee began early last week, and, as we write, is still unfinished. He denies the truth of the testimony of Lyon and Johnson, declaring that they are "infamous characters, and not worthy of credit under oath"; but he substantially admits, nevertheless, everything essential in the charges which have been brought against him. According to his own testimony, Stewart first suggested that Schenck should take an interest in the Emma Mine project, and, after looking over Silliman's report, Schenck agreed to do so, provided Park would let him have the money. His statement of the agreement between Park and himself corresponds with accounts heretofore published. Park let him have five hundred shares of stock, taking in payment Schenck's note for $50,000. Park, moreover, guaranteed the payment of 24 per cent. interest upon the investment (subsequently reduced to 13 per cent.), and also agreed to take back the stock at par value, provided Schenck should become dissatisfied with his purchase. A short time after this arrangement was made, Park and Stewart thought that Schenck ought to be one of the managers or directors of the company, in order to protect their interests in London. Schenck admits that he was at first doubtful with regard to the propriety of this step, but subsequently gave his assent to it.

Schenck's note was never paid, but was settled as follows: he paid Park $2,500 cash, which amount he received from a sale of twenty-five shares of his stock. He was also allowed $10,000, which had been erroneously credited to Park by Albert Grant, or to Albert Grant by Park, as commission for the sale of five hundred shares to Schenck, but which sum Park generously considered that Schenck should have the benefit of. Subsequently, in 1874, Schenck paid Park $1,700 cash, gave him a note for $3,000, and transferred to him some shares of stock in various coal and insurance companies for the balance, retaining, however, the privilege of redeeming these shares in four years' time, and, as he admits, continuing to receive the dividends upon them.

Some other portions of Schenck's testimony are of peculiar interest. He admits, for instance, that he speculated with Emma Mine stock in the open market, putting up a margin with Jay Cooke, McCulloch & Co., who carried five hundred shares for him and a friend. Again, he asserts as follows: "For that purpose (to ask for a full investigation), although not invited to appear before the Committee, I left London as soon as I learned from the newspapers what action had been taken, and came at once to Washington." How true these statements are may be inferred when we recall the facts (1) that he knew "what action had been taken" as early as the 1st or 2d of February, but did not leave London until the 4th of March; (2) that on the 8th of February he telegraphed that he should remain in London to vindicate his character before the courts; and (3) that on the 29th of February he was told, by telegraph, that the Committee wanted him. Again, when asked why he had left England without taking formal leave of the Queen, he replied that he did not know whether he was to return to London or not, but supposed he was still minister on leave of absence,—which reply should be read in connection with the facts (1) that his resignation was requested by the State Department on the 11th of February, (2) was forwarded on the 19th, and (3) he was informed, by telegraph, on the 3d of March, in answer to his request that his resignation might not be accepted, that the President had taken steps to fill the place immediately. Again, when asked for an explanation of a former statement, that he had given Park "dollar for dollar" for his Emma Mine stock, his explanation was that "he meant he had given a note which created a debt." Again, he asserted that "it had never occurred to him that Park was bestowing favors upon him in order to secure his influence as United States Minister," an assertion which, if true, would manifest a degree of simplicity wholly unpardonable in a foreign minister, but which in a celebrated poker-player must be pronounced utterly incredible.

The Committee on War Expenditures, better known, perhaps, as the Clymer Committee, has got hold of an interesting witness in the person of Mr. C. L. Bell, at one time a spy in the army, subsequently an applicant for a post-tradership, and recently a special agent of the Pension Office at a salary of $2,200, and travelling expenses. According to his story, he received this last appointment, at the recommendation of the President and of Mr. Luckey (Babcock's assistant), in order to work as a detective in the Babcock trial. The President desired to find out whether Babcock was guilty or not, and recommended his appointment for that purpose; but Luckey directed him to go to Bradley (Shepherd's brother-in-law) for orders. Bradley told him to go to St. Louis and get hold of the evidence against Babcock in the office of District-Attorney Dyer, and destroy it. A part of this work he accomplished, but, becoming convinced that Babcock was guilty, reported to the President, and soon after was discharged. Babcock, Luckey, and Bradley unite in denying Bell's truthfulness, but Dyer admits the essential correctness of the statements made with regard to interviews with him (Dyer) in St. Louis, and Secretary Chandler admits the appointment of Bell in the secret service of the Pension Office, upon the President's recommendation. As we write, it is impossible to predict the result of Bell's story, but the present week promises to be an exciting one at Washington. Schenck, Bell, and Lyon are there, a son of ex-Secretary Delano is expected to reveal a little of what he knows concerning certain dark transactions, ex-Senator Cattell, of New Jersey, is to be asked why Matthews & Co.—a firm of contractors for navy clothing—have paid him $100,000, and the Judiciary Committee will present to the House articles of impeachment against Belknap.

The Senate concurred in the joint resolution giving all government clerks a holiday on the 14th of April; debated at length, and passed the Consular and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill, restoring, very sensibly, in our opinion, nearly everything which the House had stricken out, including numerous consulships, the Ministry to Italy, and the salaries of the Ministers to England, France, Germany, and Russia; authorized the deposit of Indian trust-funds in the Treasury; and passed the Mississippi Resolution, which has been so vigorously urged by Morton, appointing five Senators to inquire into the alleged frauds and intimidations at the last election in that State. The House refused, by a vote of 81 to 156, to pass Mr. Payne's bill for the gradual resumption of specie payments by retiring annually an amount of coin equal to three per cent. of outstanding legal tenders—this reserve to be used as a redemption fund,—and repealing the Resumption Act. The bill was defeated by the united votes of inflationists and hard-money men. The House also passed a resolution prohibiting the mails from carrying lottery advertisements; refused to deliver Kilbourne—a contumacious witness in the Real Estate Pool Investigation—to the District of Columbia authorities; provided for the payment of the expenses of the admission of foreign goods to the Centennial Exhibition, and for the expenses of witnesses before committees; directed the conversion into coupon bonds of so many of the five per cent. registered bonds as may be necessary to pay the judgments of the Alabama Claims Commission; cut down the pay and allowances of army officers,—a bill which, we hope, the Senate will not pass; directed all naval estimates to be made in detail; allowed the separate entry of express packages imported with other goods; defined the tax on fermented and malt liquors; concurred in the "holiday" resolution, and in the Senate amendment to the bill for the sale of the arsenal at Stonington; passed a number of private bills, including one to pay the St. Albans bank for the treasury notes stolen by the raiders from Canada in 1864; and, by a vote of 122 to 100, passed a bill appropriating $163,000 for the deficiency in the Treasury Printing Bureau, and for the issue of subsidiary silver coin.

This last bill, we sincerely hope, will be defeated in the Senate. It provides for the issue of silver coin in denominations of ten, twenty, twenty-five, and fifty cents; for the redemption of an equal amount of fractional currency; and makes silver a legal tender in amounts not exceeding $50. It has been advocated as a step towards the resumption of specie payments, but in reality it is nothing of the kind. The price of silver is now exceedingly low; but if the price should rise, as may be the case, after the conversion of our present fractional currency into silver, our new coins would flow out of the country as certainly as water flows down hill, and we should be driven to the printing of makeshift shipplasters for small change. Gold, and not silver, is the present standard of value in all commercial nations, and the attempt to make silver a legal tender to the amount of $50 is, therefore, a mistake. Specie payment means, just now, provision for the redemption of our greenbacks dollar for dollar in gold; it does not mean silver for small change. This last may be exceedingly desirable, but cannot be had, with safety, without the former.

The English government has not yet decided to surrender Winslow, the Boston forger. It seems that Parliament, in 1870, decided that no refugee should be given up to a foreign nation except upon assurance that he should be tried only for the crime for which he was surrendered. This assurance our government declines (or, perhaps, is unable) to give, although it is understood that the English law was passed from an excellent motive; namely, to prevent the surrender of political refugees upon trumped-up charges. The present English Ministry is not gaining in public favor, and some of its recent majorities have been very small. The endeavor to turn the Queen into an Empress is received with great dissatisfaction, and the Burial Bill (which forbids any service but that of the English Church in parish graveyards) is certainly an unfortunate measure. People have discovered, also, during the visit of the Prince of Wales to India, that the people of that country are not in love with their English rulers, and that a successful revolution is still a possibility. The dismissal of Sir Daniel Lange—the representative of English interests on the Board of Directors of the Suez Canal,—by Lesseps, lessens the favor with which the purchase of the Khedive's shares was at first received, especially as Lange was dismissed because of an indiscretion of his own government,—an indiscretion which Disraeli persists, unfortunately, in attempting to justify. Somewhat inopportunistly, also, it must be confessed, the Queen has chosen the present moment, while Parliament is still in session, for a visit to Germany.

ENGLISH SKETCHES.

BY MRS. ANNIE BESANT.

LONDON, March 11, 1876.

I do not know whether you, in America, have the same curious style of Christian newspaper literature as obtains among ourselves. The many divisions of the seamless robe of Christ all have their appropriate organs, and attack each other with a vigor that is quite refreshing. I propose to devote this letter to some of the charms of this holy press. First and foremost comes the Church Times, a ritualistic journal of the strictest sect of the ritualists, and wielding considerable influence in their ranks. It is bitter, domineering, full of the essence of priestcraft. For some years it was, perhaps, distanced in these qualities by the Church Herald, but that remarkable sheet is dead and buried, and vexes us no more. It was the Church Herald which, when Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, unveiled a statue of John Bunyan, suggested that the admirers of the devil should raise a statue to Satan, and doubtless the Dean would officiate at its inauguration; it was the Church Herald which said that the devil would make an appropriate quartet with Dean Stanley, John Bunyan, and John Stuart Mill; it was the Church Herald which danced over Mr. Mill's grave, and yelled with joy at the news of his death. The Church Times is not so bad as this; it is more decorous, although quite as narrow. At present its righteous soul is sorely vexed over questions of vestments et id genus omne. It walls piteously over the persecutions to which millinery-clergy are exposed. "Timid Catholics feel now exactly as Christians felt when the outbreak of the Tenth Persecution showed that three hundred years of blameless conduct had done nothing to conciliate Pagans." "Tall talk, my masters." How mighty must be the power of that faith which, seeing things that be invisible, beholds in the decisions against vestments to-day the equivalent of the "Christians to the lions" of long ago. We have often thought that the severity of those early persecutions was much exaggerated; and, truly, the exaggeration must have been great if they were no worse than the persecutions of the present time. There is no reason why clerics should not array themselves in many-colored garments, if their soul delights therein, any more than there is reason why Harlequin should not gambol in similar raiment. But if clerics are State paid they must obey State laws; if they want freedom they must give up privilege; if they desire their own way they must depend upon their own exertions; and disestablishment is the answer to the vexatious waste of public time and public money squandered in the settling of these miserable squabbles. The true liberality of the Church is shown in such a sentence as the following: "The Church evidently regards adultery and the slandering of God's word as offences standing on the same level." "The slandering of God's word" refers to the remark of Mr. Jenkins—of Satanic fame,—that some parts of the Bible were contrary to decency in their ordinarily received sense, and the phrase would include every criticism on the Bible which should impugn its infallibility on any point.

It is well to know the moral status allotted by the Church to all rationalists. You will be alarmed to hear that "the honor and worship of the Almighty are at stake" because some city churches are to be pulled down,—there being many churches in the city, but few congregations. The Church Times pleads that, before they are pulled down, they shall be beautified and many services held in them, to see if congregations cannot be drawn to them: "No experiment can be too costly when the honor and worship of the Almighty are at stake." And, meanwhile, round these churches are the filthiest dens and alleys where men and women wither and die; and a tenth of the money spent to build for them churches to which they will not come, would build for them, instead, houses in which they might live with some possibility of decency. Millions spent to build houses for a God who does not need them, and no thousands, even, to build houses for the poor who droop for the lack of them; and yet men wonder that our tongue is sometimes bitter against the creeds who waste for the glory of God what is so sorely needed for the service of man.

The Rock is the organ of the other religious pole, the extreme Low as opposed to the extreme High. While the Church Times raves in defence of gorgeousness, the Rock raves against it: "During the present dispensation, and so long as our great High Priest is received into the heavens, the sole scripturally-appointed wearers of 'precious stones and pearls' are the apocalyptic harlot, or the 'strange god' whom the wilful king 'delighteth to honor and increase with glory'; or, in other words, the various branches and offshoots—be they Anglican or Roman—of the great apostasy, as we have shown again and again. Hence, although the communion plate at All Saints, Margaret Street, may sparkle with rubies, or the vestments of St. John's, Kensington, may be stiff with gems, we cannot regard these 'purposes' as 'the highest' to which precious stones can be put; nay, rather we regard them as degraded by such an application. We greatly fear that those who do such things will not be found among the 'jewels' which the great King will 'make up' in the day of his espousals." How is a poor rationalist to know what pleases God?

How far bigotry can push a writer is well seen in an extract on "mortality and occupation," giving the death-rate in various employments, and among others that of the Protestant clergyman and Roman Catholic priest; the Protestant has much the longer lease of life, and the Rock asks: "How is this disparity to be explained? . . . We must go deeper for the true cause, and this we take it is shadowed forth in the old Roman adage, mens sana in corpore sano. Where there is a 'mind diseased' there can never be a healthy body; and we see not how, in the case of the Roman Catholic priests, you are to have the one, if the other is constantly exposed to the polluting influences of the confessional." Truly, there are few things which bigotry cannot twist to its own advantage, or forge into a weapon against a hated foe.

The Christian is a lower depth below the Rock, the ultra-evangelical dissenting organ. Its pages glow from time to time with the thrilling discourses of your Dr. Talmage, and gloom with Mr. Moody's foolish sermons. Its key-note is ignorance, struck boldly in a number before me. "I do not know much about theology (not that I wish to disparage it at all); therefore there are a great many things that puzzle some friends that don't seem to puzzle me, because I have the bliss of not knowing anything about them." What a blissful state of existence must be that of a red cabbage! To proceed: "This world is without God and against God, and he might have said, 'Let them be without me'; he might have left us to our perdition." But that would have been scarcely fair, seeing he put us here. "What did he do? If we can speak thus of God, we can imagine him thinking within himself what he could do to save the world; and finally seeing that, if the world is to be saved at all, he must himself, in his own Son (God was in Christ),—he must go down and be a man, in order to atone for the guilt of men, and to reconcile the world unto himself." Such is the mental pabulum offered to readers of the Christian: a God thinking, puzzling, contriving, and "finally" making up his mind to turn himself into a man. How beautiful the imagination; how dignified the ideal!

A special feature of the Christian is a column devoted to "Requests for Praise and Prayer." Here we find such items as: "For a daughter in great danger from rationalistic errors"; "For my employer, who is living without God in the world"; "For a young physician of great ability, but without faith"; "That my husband's trouble may lead him to Jesus"; and so on, the requests being sometimes of so specific a nature as to be most certainly recognizable by friends of the unfortunate prayed-at. The advertisements of these papers are quite a curiosity: "Will sixty-two of the Lord's stewards make up the sum by giving £5 each?" asks the Christian; servants either ask for "full religious privileges," "Gospel privileges," or "Catholic privileges," according to the paper in which they advertise; a "good plain cook" requires a "weekly commission," as well as £18 a year and all found; "any priest" is asked to recommend "a tidy girl" who "knows how to dress poultry. A communicant preferred." "A young man would be thankful if a Christian friend would assist him with a loan to enable him to complete his preparation for the ministry. Address Baccalaureus," etc. Many young men would be glad to be assisted by loans from Christian friends, or non-Christians, as the case might be, as well as this gentleman with the unpronounceable name. But surely funniest and coolest of all is the following: "Wanted, gold and silver—odd studs or links, chains, or any kinds of jewelry—to melt down to form wires (Ex. xxix.). 3) to complete the fac-simile of the dress of the High Priest of Israel. Contributions to be sent to Dr. Cranage, Wellington, Salop, who desires also to make another, and he believes much more perfect, model of the Tabernacle of Israel, double the size of that in his possession, made by the Rev. G. Rogers; namely, two inches to the cubit. He purposes to have all the gold as real gold, as described in Exodus xxviii., etc., and all the silver real silver. Contributions solicited." Dr. Cranage must have full faith in the stupidity of Christians, or he could never venture on so stupendous a practical joke as to ask them to give him gold and silver that he may amuse himself in his leisure hours in making toy-tabernacles, that are doubtless pretty and costly, but can be of no possible utility.

Of course the three papers that I have commented on are only three out of many, for the name of religious papers is legion; the Guardian and the Record are Church papers of a more reputable stamp, the first moderately High, the second moderately Low. Then there are shoals of dissenting papers of all kinds, Spurgeon's brimstone among them. The press is still further utilized in cheap propagandism by myriads of little tracts, noticeable generally for their coarseness of phraseology and their redolence of "the blood"; and, latterly, those who won't take tracts have the "truths of the Gospel" forced upon them by huge placards bearing startling texts: "The wages of sin is DEATH," in mighty capitals; "Why will ye die?" shines out inquiringly between Parr's Life Pills—to which one at first refers it—and that terrible Hindu who has not, perchance, yet glared upon your happier shores, who, holding a red herring impaled on a fork, pours down his gaping mouth a bottle of the "only sauce." Thus is our life made burdensome to us by these aggressive Christians. We never object to their preaching in churches and chapels, for we need not go to listen to them; we say nothing when they lift up their voices at street-corners, for we are not forced to stop; we submit to be tracted, for we can tear them up; but we groan in the spirit when from the respectable four-wheeler or the flying hansom, we, doing no harm unto any man, and mindful only of our business, find texts jumping at us from walls, and glaring at us from unsuspicious-looking boardings. Imagine the cry of horror if we started an "Atheist Bill-posting Association" to match the Christian one, and posted up warnings against superstition, attacks on the Bible, and so on! And yet our "infidelity" would be no more offensive to some than their superstition is to us; but as it would only be copying Christian bad manners to do so, I do not throw out my suggestion as one to be acted upon. It is said that the darkest hour comes before the dawn; surely then daybreak cannot be far off, when such papers as those now criticised flourish, and spread around them darkness that may be felt.

Communications.

THE RIGHT AND WRONG OF SUICIDE.

ITHACA, N. Y., March 19, 1876.

MY DEAR INDEX:—

It is dangerous to dispute with you, because, if one fails to prove you wrong, your case is sure to appear stronger by your defence. If, therefore, I cannot show that your recommendation of suicide in cases like General Belknap's is a mistake, you will satisfy all your readers that it is just the right thing,—a consummation, I think, devoutly to be deplored. However—

Suicide, except in the case of the insane and drunk, is seeking refuge from pain in death. Chinese coolies (not Japanese officials), disappointed lovers, ruined gamblers, imprudent girls, merchants about to fail, convicts, the incurably diseased, furnish our suicides. To these you propose to add dishonest office-holders,—for the reason, if I rightly understand you, that they may by killing themselves show that they cannot survive their honor, and may confess that they reverence the outraged conscience in the eyes of their fellow-men. On the contrary, to my mind there is every reason why one who has lost his honor—in whatever sense you employ that word—should take particular care of his life. The man or woman of a high degree of honor has already influenced society, has raised its tone, helped to bring the world up. One on the other hand who is discovered to have been without honor, who has lost the credit of having it, has checked the upward tendency, and helped to lower it. Is such an one in a position to settle his accounts with the world and leave? If either of the two, the latter would be more bound to stay and submit to every suffering he may have brought on himself. It might be very comfortable to escape from the indignation of society, and to avoid the cold shoulders of former friends, and the hardships of solitary efforts. A snap of a pistol might seem heavenly compared with years-long censure; but he is the last man in the world who should think of such a refuge.

By going he would indeed show that "he could not survive his honor," and in my opinion would prove, not only that he had not been honorable, but that he was very weak also. He would show not merely that he had been faithless, but that he did not value the opportunity that life would give him of doing faithful work again; that he had played a game, and, having lost, was unwilling even to try to pay. Your position would imply that death was the penalty the offender should offer. I think that life would be the nobler one. In Belknap's case, after the first shock of national disgrace, my first thought was that he must be a man of a great deal of pluck not to shoot himself. It was such an easy thing for a soldier, that his putting away the thought argued a power which might yet, and not improbably, make itself felt for good.

You may think that he has forfeited the right to a further trial, and that, having once proved faithless, he has no claim even to a chance of recovering himself. However that may be, it does not touch the question of the propriety of his wishes in the matter. His life may or may not have been forfeited; but that he is willing to bear it until taken from him shows that he is not a coward, whatever else he may have been.

As to the propriety of introducing a little pagan heroism in the special form of hara-kiri, the Japanese may be consulted to advantage. It was merely a privilege of army officers condemned to death, and has, if I am not misinformed, been abolished. In order to come up, therefore, to the former pagan standard, we must first have our late Secretary of War tried, convicted, and condemned to death. Then will be the time for the heroism of compulsory suicide. In the meantime let your readers ask themselves if they have, each in his and her sphere, done all that was possible to prevent the crime which has made our dishonor so patent.

Yours very truly, W. C. R.

[Nothing was further from our intention, in the "Glimpse" (INDEX, March 9) referred to by Professor R., than to make a general "recommendation of suicide." That paragraph was half-earnest and half-satirical, though wholly indignant; and we frankly confess that what we said was not sufficiently guarded to prevent very natural misunderstanding. We did not, for instance, mean to recommend seriously the introduction of the practice of hara-kiri, or to advise every detected scoundrel to shoot himself; but we did and do mean that, if public opinion against betrayals of trust, above all of public trust, were so hot that every detected scoundrel would rather shoot himself than face its seven times heated furnace, the country would be vastly better off to-day. If a rascal concludes to live under such circumstances, it must be either because he is morally too callous and phlegmatic to feel the scorching in store for him, or else because he is sure of enough condonement from the public to make life less terrible than death. In the former case, suicide would give us a better opinion of the culprit; in the latter case, of the public. We "recommend suicide" to nobody; but life is less precious than many things that can be named, and, when it has been used systematically and for years to pollute the honor of one's country, to debauch its civil service, to plunder its exposed and unprotected soldiers, and to create disgust and loathing for republican institutions throughout the world, we cannot help thinking that its value to the community is irretrievably lost. All the kind and considerate remonstrances of our friend, to whose gentle rebuke we listen with profoundest respect, fail to expunge the belief that, if Belknap had promptly tried the "snap of a pistol," he would not only have extorted a measure of respect it is impossible to yield him now, but (what is of more consequence to the world) would also have exposed the hideousness of public corruption in a way that would have accomplished more than a dozen impeachments in expelling it from the national life. An extract from a letter of Mr. Smalley, subjoined here, will show the irreparable and permanent wrong which such men as Belknap inflict on their country and on the cause of republican institutions everywhere.—ED.]

THE WASHINGTON SCANDALS.

LONDON, March 11.—I suppose I need scarcely say that London, spite of one agreeable incident, has not been a very agreeable place for an American this week. The special dispatches to the Times have given us—with a copiousness never before known—the details of the crimes, scandals, investigations, accusations, exposures, and I know not what else, which have made the past ten days hideous. You will remark that the mode of transmission has made them unusually conspicuous. The Times has done us the honor to print them at the head of its news columns in its biggest type. The disgrace of one existing Cabinet Minister in Washington has taken precedence of the appointment of a whole new—and probably honest—Cabinet in France. This morning we are treated to the shameful story of the brokerage in public offices which the President's brother has carried on. Nor has there been a day this week when some new American rascality has not been published to Europe in a similar way; that is, in the way to make it most glaring. I do not say so complainingly. These events are matters of news. They are by far the most interesting news of the day, even to Englishmen, and the Times is quite right to print the most interesting news in the most prominent place.

It is inevitable, also, that this news should be commented on, and, on the whole, I don't think we have much cause to complain of the comments. I should like to see them reprinted in full in every paper in the United States. They would not be pleasant reading, but they would be profitable, and I never heard that medicine was less likely to cure the patient because he did not like the taste of it. Their effect over here is quite another matter. The cause of Republicanism in Europe has got a blow from which it will not recover all at once. The crimes at Washington are hardly less helpful to European Absolutism and Aristocracy than the crimes of the Commune were in 1871. From the crimes of the Commune men's minds—the minds of the most moderate—recoiled with horror. From the crimes at Washington men's minds recoil with disgust; and probably disgust is a not less powerful feeling than horror.

Europe is more than ever convinced that honest and cultivated people will have nothing to do with politics in America. We owe our critics some gratitude for the view they take. They do not say there are no honest and cultivated people in America. They do not doubt there are many such, but they set themselves to inquire how it happens that such people hold themselves aloof from the conduct of public affairs. It does not happen, they say, in monarchical countries; there, as a rule, the ablest and most honorable men are proud to devote themselves to the service of the State. It is only in a republic that the opposite rule holds, and the conclusion drawn from this fact is naturally unfavorable to a republican form of government. The conclusion is not, in fact, either logical or just. It is not true that a republic is the only nurse of vices. There has never been anything more profligate than the jobbing of public offices in France under Louis Philippe when Guizot was Prime Minister; nor than the jobbing in the public funds and speculations of all kinds by the ministers of Napoleon III. But those things happened day before yesterday; Belknap's thievery was yesterday; and everything that went before is suddenly forgotten. Again I say, we have no right to complain. The fact that corruption has left a stain on other Cabinets than those of President Grant is no reason why corruption in President Grant's Cabinet should not be censured. It is clearly for the general good that the lash should be laid on every rogue's back as it comes along.—G. W. S., in N. Y. Tribune.

PRIESTLY INTIMIDATION.

EDITOR OF THE INDEX:

Dear Sir,—Does it not strike you that a law such as that proposed by the Legislature of Rhode Island is simply a law to compel the Roman Catholic clergy to give the benefit of Church ordinances to those members of their communion who are guilty of no other offence than sending their children to the public schools? Are the ordinances of the Church a trust such as the State can insist upon having equitably exercised? If there was any Concordat between the Roman Catholic Church and the government of the State, there would be certain obligations to fulfil on either side, and possibly the civil government might be able to veto the action taken by the priests in this matter. But where the Church is wholly unrecognized by the State, how can the latter undertake to say to whom it shall administer its rites? Supposing the priests do not threaten at all, but simply confine themselves for the future—the thing being now thoroughly understood—to withholding the sacraments from these parents who send their children to the public schools, would it not be somewhat anomalous for the State to interfere and say: "These people have done nothing which ought to cause you to curtail their spiritual advantages, and we order you at once to restore them to all their privileges?" The State surely cannot decide a question of this kind. If it can, then there is no problem in theology or church-administration with which it might not try to cope.

